Back to Campus

Are you back here again?

By E. Patrick McQuaid

If this is to be your first stay here at UMass, we of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian wish to extend you our best wishes and say "welcome". That's all we'll say for now, but you'll be hearing more from us as the semester progresses.

To those of you who are returning for another semester here we can only ask "why?" and offer no condolences. Afterall, we've been through this all before.

While you were away, a sudden rash of resignation fever swept across campus striking such personalities as Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Vivian Barfield, Assistant Director of Athletics, and Richard Dent, Director of Financial Aid who was hit during the height of the application season.

But President Robert Wood remained steadfast. Amidst all the contention the President did not throw in his cards, but rather set for us all, an inspiring example, and took a pay raise.

Yes, Robert Wood, who last April belittled himself by taking a voluntary paycut, fixing his salary at $47,299, has boosted his income to $50,939 in a June Board of Trustee's meeting. Salary increases were also awarded to three top level assistants. Of minor importance, also passed at that meeting was a $45 dorm rent increase for the students during this Fall semester.

You'll be happy to find that there are a few things that haven't changed much. The library hasn't sank to any great measurable amount, at least at the time that this editorial was penned, and Hatch coffee is still 16 cents (again, at the time of this delivery).

Last summer the Bluewall received a facelift; this year we all await the unveiling of the new TOC. Meanwhile we must contend with a makeshift Ritz known throughout the summer as the Red-White-and Blue Room.

If you read on you'll find out about the stupendous financial "mistake" that was recently uncovered in Campus Center management; other resignations; other fee increases; and all the rest of the news that you missed out on over the summer vacation.

However, the big back-pager of the season, is that the Collegian offices have moved. No longer a two-bit hand-crank operation, the Daily Collegian has entered the world of corporate bureaucracy and established itself on the Wall Street of UMass: the Bottom of the Campus.

So stop in, check us out. We're air conditioned.

GAGE RESIGNS

by
E. Patrick McQuaid

Robert W. Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs since 1972 at UMass has resigned from his post effective August 31. Dr. Gage, Harvard MD 1942, is returning to his alma mata to brush up on his studies in epidemiology, biostatistics, and public health policy. Following a semester's leave he plans to return to campus and resume his previous duties as a full-time teacher in the Department of Public Health.

According to Gage, controversy over student funds and the management of the Campus Center did not prompt his decision to leave. "But," he said, "the turmoil did not help any."

The Chancellor's office announced that Associate Provost Robert Woodbury has accepted the appointment of acting Vice Chancellor until a permanent replacement for Gage is found. A committee will be established to search for a replacement in the coming Fall semester.

Gage announced his resignations in the last week of July citing "personal reasons" and stating that he simply wasn't born to be an administrator. "My effectiveness had become too marginal," he told reporters. "My only contact with the students right now is an adversary, and I find this the hardest thing for me to deal with. To be an administrator, in the best sense, is to be political and the word most used in administration is compromise."

Gage commented that he looks forward to his future work. "I am weary of the process." he said. "I would like to be in a position where I make direct impact, where I am doing something I feel makes a difference."

Dr. Gage has set his priorities on working toward the development of an affordable health care system for public use, a political issue with which few of his colleagues in the Hampshire District Medical Society share his opinon.

"If we get into national health insurance," said Gage, "without planning how we can provide services, it would be an unmitigated disaster. It would enfranchise more buyers without creating more services."

Gage said that he does not ever expect to return to his original position of general practitioner but would like to focus his attentions on the entire health care delivery system. "I'm much less interested in being a care provider, much as I enjoyed it. I'm more concerned with developing a health care system that we can afford."

Robert L. Woodbury

After graduating from medical school Gage served in the war then opened private practice first in Ulysses, Pa., and later in Amherst, Mass. He taught Public Health at the University until 1960 when he became director of the University Health Services. He accepted the position of acting Vice Chancellor in 1971 and became Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs in 1972 feeling that he could influence the University as a whole in developing a system that could provide for students' needs.

"It is for the next person to decide how successful I have been as Vice Chancellor," he stated.

That next person, Robert L. Woodbury, has been associate provost for over 20 special programs since July of 1971 including responsibility for international programs, interdisciplinary programs, the University Without Walls, residential college, outreach and internship programs, honours, continuing education, women's studies, BDIC, the undergraduate rhetoric program, the office for faculty development and evaluation, and several other academic services.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has commented that it was for "no one thing in particular" that Woodbury was chosen. "We picked someone," said Bromery, "who could make Student Affairs become an integral part of the learning process. Students need a variety of services through Student Affairs.

"The office needs a competent administrator," continued Bromery. "That's what Woodbury is. He's innovative and creative."

Dr. Woodbury was graduated from Amherst College in 1960 with a bachelor's degree in American Studies. He earned his master's and doctoral degree at Yale University. He was a member of the faculty of the California Institute of Technology and taught as a visiting professor at Amherst College before coming to UMass.

Woodbury first came to the University in September of 1968 as an associate professor at the School of Education. He was named a full professor in 1971 and served as associate dean for special program development in the school from 1969-71.

He also spent 1974-1975 as a visiting scholar at the University of London Institute of Education and as a consultant to Nuffield Foundation Group for Research and Innovation in Higher Education in Great Britain. He is a member of the boards of the Union for Experimenting Colleges and Universities, the National Association of Bank Women Educational Foundation, and is a member of the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education Four Year Academic Advisory Committee.

Opening Remarks

Academic year 1976-77 will probably be another important year in the lives of many upperclasspersons, but for incoming freshpersons, this year will probably prove to be quite different from the rest.

Like most other colleges and universities, UMass will show these new students how to interact with others in an academic and non-academic setting. By non-academic, I am referring to all that students learn outside the classroom.

UMass, like most other colleges and universities, will introduce these 'new' students to an unreal world — a world full of fantasies, and a haven from what's happening in the real world. UMass will create another class of students, full of love and amibition (and there's nothing wrong with that) but their high aspirations will soon become tarnished when graduation exercises in 1980 are complete. The year 1980 promises to be a better world than graduates were thrown out into this year. However, it will still be more difficult to live in, than it was to live within University walls.

Yes, incoming students will find that UMass is a morals factory — creating liberals out of most of us, realists out of the rest.

But, there are things at UMass which are unlike most other colleges and universities. Maybe 'unlike' is not the right word — it's just that UMass seems to do things much better than others. UMass, through its wide and diverse curriculums, strives to bring out my best in classes which particularly interest us. Sure, so that we all don't graduate with 4.0's, UMass requires certain subjects which might not interest us. But that's because they (UMass) want us to graduate with a strong complete education, otherwise known as a liberal arts education.

Also, UMass, through its many varied activities, strives to mingle students with similar interests. (not necessarily similar backgrounds) to make best its organizations. And then there are organizations, like the Collegian, which are so large that students of all interests and talents gather for more reasons than to put out a paper every day. They gather to share each other's talents and, in turn, learn from each other.

Yes, students will find out for themselves what UMass is best at doing. More than likely, students will find out that the students are UMass. New students will learn that, no matter how intelligent a person is, they must be willing and able to work and deal with fellow students.

As most freshpersons find out, UMass is an excellent education institution — not so much for academic reasons, but for its unlimited wealth in its students — in its activities.

Before the 4000? member class of 1980 leaves here, the majority will participate in at least one of UMass 30? activities. Those unfortunate ones who do not, can not really say they graduated from UMass.

In high school, students could graduate without participating in any extra-curricular activities. If you attended a high school of less than 2,000 students, as I did, then the school may not have offered any activities that likened you. But here, in a school of 23,000 students, there is something for everyone.

Don't let four years at UMass (or two years if you're an incoming transfer student) pass by (and they go by quickly) without participating in an organization that compliments your field of study.

These organizations will enable you to meet, perhaps for the first time, other students with different backgrounds than yours, other students with different stories to tell than the ones you've heard 20 times over in high school. Don't close your ears to these new stories and don't close your minds to these people with different backgrounds.

If there's one thing you musn't do at UMass is close yourself to the people around you. Always listen — always be open. You can learn more by listening to others than you can by listening to lectures — although, try not to sleep during classes.

By working and dealing with people of varied interests will make your life after college a lot easier.

UMass is a place where people learn to live together — not apart, like in Boston. That's what UMass is all about. It is a university — not just for those who have a particular, similar background, and not just for those who have money.

Sure, students will meet many famous persons like Shakespeare, Chaucer, and Pasteur, but if you don't meet the different members of your own class don't bother saying you went to UMass.

Wishing you the best in achieving high educational levels at the University of Massachusetts, I am

Sincerely yours,
William A. Mills

A Chat With the Chancellor

by
Cliff Skibinsky

At the hub of the administration of the Amherst campus is Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, a man whose informality and accessibility belie the cold and distant stereotype of a top administrator. "Chancellor is an imposing title," he said in a recent interview. "But most people who know nothing about higher education think it's my first name."

Bromery said he tries to run the University "primarily for the largest group of people" — those who do not become involved in student politics, the "90 per cent who don't vote for student government." However, "great effort is directed toward the small minority who really need special attention," he added.

The Chancellor does not decry the lack of student involvement: "If you ever got 18-and-a-half-thousand undergraduate students who all want to play a role in governance, it would be chaos." But Bromery said he feels that those who do become involved offer a "representative cross-section" of student opinion.

Student-Administration Relations

"The average student's perception of power" has created a large gap between students and administration, said Bromery. "The average student believes that I have the ultimate power, that I can do everything."

Bromery cited numerous constraints on the University's budget — "a large part of it is cast in stone" — as well as legal constraints and restrictions placed upon him by the President of the University, the Board of Trustees, and the realities of managing the campus which reduce his flexibility.

Even so, Bromery said he believes that his office should receive the brunt of internal attacks on the University. Last year, when students directed their dissatisfaction with the budget situation at the trustees, the Chancellor's office lost its ability to be the advocate of the students, he said. "We had a very negative impact on the trustees last year."

"Students have to figure out what is the most viable mechanism we have," said Bromery. "And the most viable thing we can do on this campus is, even if it isn't so, make it perceived externally that the faculty, the students, and the administration on the Amherst campus are close together, and working together; we will carry an awful lot of weight."

Much of the antagonism between students, faculty, and administration has been created by unionization movements, said Bromery. "If you're going to have a union, then you've got to have an adversary relationship. Otherwise, what do you need a union for if everyone is getting along fine together?"

> 'If you ever got 18-and-a-half.-thousand undergraduate students who all want to play a role in governance, it would be chaos.'

Student Unionization

Bromery questioned the practicality of an undergraduate student union. "If they ever brought one off it would never be more than a gentlemen's agreement," he said. "There is no way to lock in 18-and-a-half-thousand students."

There exist no laws or regulations governing a student union, as would exist with a faculty union, said Bromery. He suggested that union organizers "should concentrate their efforts on promoting legislation to create laws which govern union relationships." But he added that most of the organizers "don't get past the ideology, the theory, and the philosophy."

Bromery said he believes that the Student Government Association (SGA) is "a governance vehicle which can work." In addition, he said, the adversary relationship of a union to the administration is not necessary for SGA to succeed.

"We're all on the same boat, trying to go the same way," he added.

Administration Size

The UMass administration is "fairly small" compared to similar universities, said Bromery. "There are those that believe that you don't need any administration at all, that the only thing important in a university takes place in a classroom...but the classroom has to be heated, it has to be cleaned, supplies and materials have to be ordered, the payroll has to be run, state law has to be observed in hiring, accounting, auditing, and the handling of money; there's no such thing as a classroom experience without administrative support."

Bromery said that the administration suffered the major share of the recent budget cuts. He said cuts in the Financial Aid Office have created chaos, and caused hardship for the 15,000 students who use its services. In addition, recent problems in the School of Education were due to a lack of administrative personnel to monitor the use of federal grants, said Bromery.

"Students are usually the ones hurt the most by administrative cuts — more than faculty — because students need administrative support," said Bromery.

UMass Finances

The financial situation on the Amherst campus has improved, said Bromery, although funding is $3 million less than it was 15 months ago. He likened the situation to "tying a person to a tree and sentencing him to 20 lashes, and then giving him 10 and say you're not going to hit him any more. It feels kind of good, but he's still hurting."

Bromery predicted that students will begin to see the improvement in more teaching assistants, more supplies and equipment, and more faculty. Funds have also been increased for the Financial Aid Office, the Veterans' Affairs Office, and other student support services. "Very little went into the administration and finance area," he said.

The financial situation is probably on the "upswing," said Bromery, although he added that the "growth era" of the University is over. Future budget increases may be destroyed by inflation, he said, and there will have to be a shifting of resources from some programs to others.

Bromery said that as long as he is Chancellor, he will attempt to protect the existence of special programs at UMass, such as the University Without Walls, and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, which Bromery was influential in creating.

However, Bromery said special programs will have to cut all "frill costs" in the future.

Higher Education's Future

The survival of public higher education in Massachusetts will be dependent upon easy access through low tuition, as well as provision of high quality education, said Bromery.

In addition, the schism between private and public higher education must be eliminated: "If those in the private sector believe that fighting and destroying the public universities is going to make them win, they're not going to win. Higher education in general is not a top priority on the national or state level."

Public and private institutions should instead work together to advance mutual interests, he said.

Future Plans

Bromery, who has held his post since 1972, said he hopes to continue serving as Chancellor as long as he receives "positive feedback" from the University community. He joined the University in 1967 as an associate professor of geophysics. In 1969 he became a full professor and head of the Department of Geology. He later served as Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and in 1971 was appointed Acting Chancellor.

Bromery is internationally recognized in the field of airborne geophysics, and said he continues to remain active in this profession. "I don't want to get trapped in the Chancellorship, and start compromising my decisions to hold the job," he added.

Student Journalists Convene at UMass

by Bill Mills

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is hosting a national student editors convention next month at the Campus Center.

Tom Wicker, New York Times columnist and prize-winning author of "A Time To Die," is keynote speaker at the convention Oct. 7-9.

Charlene Hunter, a Times reporter, is the convention's close-out speaker.

About 100 editors representing college newspapers of 10,000 circulation and more will participate in the first student editors convention run completely by students.

The Society for Collegiate Journalists, UMass Chapter, is sponsoring the parley which will cost about $65 for each attendant.

Members of the Collegian and the Society are finalizing plans and accepting registration.

At the convention, which will be opened by Wicker Thursday evening, October 7, the editors will form a national society of editors. It will be called the Student Editors National Society for Excellence (SENSE).

Sponsors of the convention said they hope to encourage newly-inducted members of the society to put on a similar convention every year.

Attending editors and members of their staffs are submitting entries of best news story, editorial, cartoon, sports article and photo to the New England Society of Newspapers, editors, a professional group of journalists, who will judge and critique top entries. Plaques and certificates will be awarded to best entries in each category.

The program was first proposed in April when a group of Collegian staff persons demonstrated interest in such a convention.

Collegian staffers attended an annual convention in New York City in March and were disappointed at what that convention had to offer college newspaper editors.

Paul Smith, advertising manager of the Collegian, suggested that the Collegian put on its own convention. Subsequently, a committee was formed in early April to investigate the possibility of such a convention.

The six person committee developed a program and voted to call the convention "Weekend of Discovery," named in accordance with the time of year, Columbus Day weekend.

Five major workshops are scheduled by the committees. They are: Campus Press and the Law, Campus Press and the Social Climate of the Community, The View From the Campus 'Oval Offices', The Dollars and Sense of Campus Press, and The Mission and Method of the Campus Press.

Professional journalists from around New England, including Robert Healy, executive editor of the Boston Globe, will participate in the round-table format of the workshops.

About a dozen such journalists will be in attendance.

Seed money for the convention has been donated by interested financial trusts. Also, members of the society and the Collegian will be sponsoring a raffle this month to pick up further costs of the convention.

Interested students interested in attending the convention should contact William Mills at the Collegian.

...and why did you come to UMass?

by
Diane Ungar

At what appears to be an unrelieved apex in American unemployment the class of 1980 is flocking to UMass with career-oriented enthusiasm, according to a random survey of freshpeople at summer orientation.

The informal poll, taken of nearly 200 new students during several July counseling sessions, indicated that for 70 per cent "to get a job when I leave" was their primary goal in attending UMass. Thirty per cent just wanted to leave home.

An innocent logic seemed to underlie the reasoning of those who left the nest in pursuit of job opportunities.

"I came to learn a lot and then make lots of money." The common, paraphrased response suggested the freshpersons' naive belief that college degrees yield well-paying jobs. (Correlation between degrees and jobs has been scanty throughout the seventies, as any recent graduate will attest.)

Secondary reasons for attending UMass were largely scholastic. Self-edification (60 per cent) was a close runner to getting a job. Scholarly pursuits ("I like reading and learning") consistently earned a higher percentage of votes than "to party" or "to meet boys-girls." Perhaps the class of 1980 represents a resurgence of academic fervor.

Still, desire for UMass' "great social life," though not among the top three reasons for attending UMass, appears a significant calling card. Ninety per cent of those interviewed said they look forward to September and their next four years at UMass. Seventy-five per cent believe it holds a great social life for them. All agreed unanimously that the Summer Orientation (New Students) Program had increased their desire to attend UMass.

Half of the respondents noted that family finances confined their choice of college to public institutions. However, they claimed to have selected UMass for reasons other than its relatively low tuition. Among those reasons:

– its good academic reputation
– its size ("something for everyone")
– it has what they "wanted a college to have"
– its location

"There is something for everyone; you just have to find it," noted one exuberant freshwoman.

"It's what you make of it," said another.

And finally, said one freshman who "knows" the school because his best friend went here, "It has good football. And nice chicks."

Got a question, problem, need a map or an office address? The Campus Assistance Desk can help you. They are located beside the BlueWall at the desk with a willing staff of people to guide you in the right direction. The phone is 5-0012 or 5-0014 and the desk is open from 8 a.m.-11 p.m. daily.

Chris Wise, full time supervisor of the desk, said, "we should be able to answer any question that a person has and if we can't answer them, we can locate the one who can."

The desk is the center of many activities and functions, including; Lost and found, phone books, students activities and fine arts schedules, applications for freshpeople, transfers, and graduates; 5-college calenders, bus schedules, interchange, registration and course description information, Top of the Campus stickers, handling of the craft tables and enforcement of the policy, community information, enforcement of the sign and poster policy and building regulations, swim and other gym hours, library hours, parking information, entertainment times, etc., etc. If they don't know, then you must really have a tough question.

The purpose of the center is: to provide a thorough knowledge of University services available to students and the ability to make "educated" referrals to appropriate services. It is a multi-faceted operation providing accurate dissemination of information.

Chris said, "One of the big problems was initiating an ongoing program of receiving information and documenting it for the center. There is a student group working to provide us with students, working as researchers, to help us in updating the information at the desk and picking up pamphlets which are available." Chris, says she "loves" working at the desk and "feels like I am really helping people out."

The desk is staffed at all times with at least two people and the combined staff exceeds 19 people.

Literature is also available at the desk of such varied interests as: Handicapped Affairs, Women's News, UWW, Off-campus Housing, CAOS, Vet Affairs, University Health Center, International Program, CCEBS, Admissions, Mass Pirg, Student Volunteer service, WMUA, Grad admissions, course catalogues, and a variety of others as they come in.

A feedback system is being initiated to try to find out how accurately the referrals are being carried out. Students who are willing will carry a form to the office they have been referred to and it will be answered by the office and returned by campus mail. A file box is filled with every available service on campus in easy index form, for quick and easy use.

Thus a direct contact with various groups and service on campus is maintained and hopefully any changes can be quickly corrected.

So if you are stuck with a question, ask the Campus Assistance Desk, they are working for you to help you out.

> ★★★★★ equality under the law shall not be denied or abridged because of sex, race, color, creed, or national origin ★★★★★

Most people will enter into the voting booth November 2 and vote either for or against the ERA for the same reason — that they're sick of hearing about it. Never has a proposed amendment received as much publicity, and been the subject of as much heated discussion, as the ERA.

In case you haven't heard, however, the ERA is the Equal Rights Amendment, which will become the 27th amendment to the United States Constitution if ratified by 38 states by 1979. Thirty-four states have already ratified the amendment.

What you'll be voting on this November is the Massachusetts Equal Rights Amendment, not the federal ratification. Massachusetts has already ratified the federal ERA.

The Massachusetts ERA says, simply, that "equality under the law shall not be denied or abridged because of sex, race, color, creed or national origin", and it applies to both men and women.

The State ERA differs from the federal in that it applies not only to women, but to minorities also.

The biggest question about the amendment is one of necessity — do we really need an ERA? Doesn't the 14th amendment cover equality of rights

Apparently not, according to the Committee to ratify the Massachusetts ERA. They claim that current anti-sex discrimination laws can be easily amended or repealed, and that in many cases, the 14th amendment is simply not working.

That amendment states in part that "no state shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws".

But Supreme court decisions interpreting the 14th amendment have been erratic. For instance, in Kahn v. Shevin, 1974, it was decided that special property tax exemptions given to widows can be denied to widowers. In Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld, 1975, though, it was decided that special social security benefits given to widows cannot be denied to widowers.

The Massachusetts Committee to Ratify also claims that a state amendment is necessary because "it is the primary legal document articulating the basic duties, liberties and rights of Massachusetts citizens". In this state, for example, the husband still has the legal responsibility of support to both wife and children, although the Married Women's Property Acts of 1857 repealed the common law doctrine of coverture, under which the wife relinquished all property to her husband while he assumed the obligation to support.

Under the ERA, both spouses will have an obligation to support each other and minor children based on the ability and circumstances of each spouse.

Opposition to the ERA has been hard and strong. A well-supported group, Stop ERA, headed by commentator Phyllis Schlafly, claims that the Equal Rights Amendment will not help women, but hurt them.

In a news release, Stop ERA, said that the amendment would result in co-ed public toilet facilities and homosexual marriages. But the Committee to Ratify said that the Privacy Act will insure that toilets will remain "seperate but equal", and the only change in the law will be that when men don't have to pay a dime, women don't have to pay a dime.

Opponents also said that the ERA will put women "in the trenches". But the state ratification will have no effect on federal military service nor any other federal practice, say proponents. If the federal ERA is passed in 1979, however, women would be eligible for the draft, if reinstated.

Areas that will be affected by the ERA are:

Marriage — child support will be a shared responsibility according to the financial resources of each parent.

Divorce — the failure to support ground for divorce (one of Massachusetts' seven fault grounds) would either be extended to both sexes or abolished. The failure to support fault now applies only to husband.

Protective labor laws — limitations "protecting" workers from long hours or certain job requirements will have to be extended to both sexes or related to the abilities of the individual.

Among the areas that will not be affected by the state ERA are abortion, public rest rooms and private education, or homosexual marriage. The amendment will do nothing to help or hinder the possibility of an amendment allowing homosexual marriage, according to a Committee to Ratify spokesperson.

At a recent debate in Springfield in which six supporters and critics discussed the ramifications of the ERA, Mrs. Agnes Smith of Dorchester, co-chairperson of the Mass. Committee to Stop the ERA, said, "God made men and women different, and if he had intended that they be equal, he would have created another Adam."

Attorney Margaret Mahoney of Winchester, legal advisor to Stop ERA, said that Massachusetts laws are adequate to ensure the equal rights of women in the labor force, but "it's the rights of the homemaker that need to be protected," she said.

Presently, though, homemakers are legally inferior to their wage-earning husbands in areas such as credit. The Equal Credit Opportunity Act of 1974 states that banks and other credit institutions must make credit available to all equally, without regard to sex or marital status. But the Act itself gives no relief for the non-working wife, but leaves her dependent on her husband's credit.

Mahoney went on to say that the ERA would jeopardize a woman's "right" to be supported by her husband. Co-chairperson Smith added that women in this country want "the freedom to remain in the home to be supported by their husbands.

"The feminist movement tries to put down the housewife, to show her as an abject slave surrounded by dirty diapers, dreaming of a fantastic job", she said.

ERA proponents contend that it is absurd to assume that home and family depend upon the legal inferiority of the wife and mother.

They also contend that nothing in people's private lives or in their family relationships would change under the amendment, "It applies only to areas in which the state is involved", according to a Committee to Ratify Fact Sheet.

Of the 34 states that have ratified the ERA, two have voted to rescind ratification. Legislators have not yet come up with reasons why voters wish to rescind, however. Early support for the amendment voiced by President and Mrs. Ford may have been a factor, but strong recent opposition from Stop ERA and Humanitarians Opposed to Degrading Our Grils (HOT DOG) might have caused the voters' second thoughts.

Utah and Wyoming passed the amendment in 1890, said Proponent Leslie Paul of Longmeadow at the Springfield debate, "and neither has suffered from unisex toilets or the breakdown of the institution of the family".

The State ERA was defeated drastically last year in both New Jersey and New York. Surprisingly, more men voted for the ratification than did women. Women, asked why they did not vote for the amendment, expressed the sentiment that women have "all the rights we need", according to one New York City voter.

Opponent Ann Connor of Hingham said the amendment is too vague and would allow the Supreme Court a blank check in imposing its own interpretation of equal rights

Pro or con, the ERA gets people talking about "equality" under the law, at least. Hopefully, the media have not done a job of overkill on the issue, but rather have stirred enough interest and enthusiasm, and have dispensed the facts, to help Massachusetts voters make an informed decision on November 2

While you were out....

A summer summary

by
Jean Conley

Just about the time you were finally unpacked from another semester at UMass and began to settle into the summer routine, 5000 people joined the rank of the UMass alumni.

The theme of UMass' 1976 commencement was the search for jobs, and as senior speaker Mike Kneeland pointed out in his speech to parents and friends of the new alumni, "too many of us will leave the graduation line only to join the unemployment line. Unemployed engineers may soon be cleaning buildings, not designing them... while unemployed math teachers will become statistics rather than teach statistics".

The skies were cloudy and threatening, and Kneeland pointed to a future for graduates only slightly more optomistic than for those who sat through a similar ceremony last year.

But, commencement is not what you want to hear about. Graduation is always dull happy sad exciting — but the same. You want to hear "the good stuff".

Well, good stuff or not, the big news this summer is that Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage resigned his administrative post to go on sabbatical at Harvard University, to return next Spring semester as a professor in the Public Health Department. He went out quietly. A search committee made up of students, Student Government Associaton (SGA) Presidents Paul Cronin and Jay Martus, and faculty and administrators, will together chose a new permanent Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs. The interim Vice-Chancellor, hand picked by UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, now sits in the office left empty by Gage.

Valley health plan

Finally, the Valley Health Plan (VHP), the alternative comprehensive health care service for student dependents and UMass employes, will be instituted this semester after four years of study and debate.

Before the Student Health Advisory Board and the Undergraduate Student Senate approved the plan, Barry Averill, Director of Health Services, gave the students some guarantees. They are:

1) Students have top priority on inpatient beds. VHP'ers will be transferred to nearby hospitals if they are preventing a student access to inpatient beds.

2) Parking and building renovation costs will not involve the Student Health Tax Fund without prior approval of the Student Health Advisory Board. The Board has approved $41,000 for the parking lot plus another $7,000 from student funds for an attendant.

3) The VHP will guarantee one hundred per cent payment for all professional staff hired for the first year of operation.

4) All costs involved in providing services to VHP members will be covered by the VHP contract and under no circumstances will the tax funds be expanded.

5) The VHP contract provides adequate insolvency plans to assure appropriate financial protection for the University.

6) The Health Services will put a ceiling of 2500 on total VHP-student dependence enrollment for the first year of operation.

7) There shall be a ceiling on mental health consultation allotted VHP members during the academic year.

8) Students and their dependents will receive full priority in meeting their dental health needs through the Health Services and no VHP member will be allowed to utilize the dental facilities of the Health Center, except in emergency.

So that's what happened over your summer vacation, whether you knew it or not. And the ramifications of changes made during the summer to affect you over the year have still to be felt.

The fourth ★★★★★★★★★

July 4th came and went, and by most of the celebrating on the tube and in back yards, America seemed pretty happy with its last 200 years.

Some people weren't too happy, though, and they showed it in Philadelphia and Washington with rallies and marches to protest oppression, big government and corporate profits.

Four hundred persons from the Western Massachusetts July 4th coalition joined in Philly with an estimated 60,000 others from all over the country. The march and rally were the results of several months of effective community organizing on the part of the Coalition. The Western Mass contingent was delayed for two hours due to the long line of other contingents. Television and newspaper crews underestimated the size of the crowd at 25,000 when they were not alerted of the delay.

Rain finally stopped the rally at 5 p.m. after marchers heard Dr. Bernard Lee of the National Christian Leadership Conference and several other political activists.

In Washington, far fewer Western Mass demonstrators joined the ranks of the People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC), and only one busload of "alternative observers" disembarked from the Boston area. But the atmosphere, sometimes hurried and hectic, was "remarkably free of strife and contention", as the Washington Post noted the next morning.

Ellen Gavin, who billed herself as "President Student Government, University of Massachusetts, Amherst", was one of the last speakers at the rally. She called for a return to student activism on and off campus. (Actually Jay Martus and Paul Cronin are SGA Co-Presidents).

Reorganization

Reorg, the reorganization plan for higher education in Massachusetts, took a turn around this summer also. State Senate President Kevin Harrington made drastic revisions in his reorg plan. It is often said that Harrington is not one to concede a political battle, so his revision of the bill came as no surprise on Beacon Hill.

The plan included a new board of governors, the "Superboard", and a single chancellor for the entire state system, but retains the present trustee boards with only slightly decreased power.

UMass President Robert C. Wood was reportedly an avid supporter of Harrington's new bill, as he was of the old one.

But, throughout the matter, Harrington's reorg bill was not able to shake off its own "elitist" tone, and was killed in the legislature. The Massachusetts Society of Professor (MSP) and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) came out strongly against the bill.

The state or reorg now? After years of study and debate and hundreds of thousands of taxpayers' dollars reorg is being put to rest for another year. Beacon Hill wants to sleep on it.

STRIKE!

Just about the time Elizabeth Ray said she was blowing the whistle on Congressman Wayne Hays, the state workers on campus decided to strike. At the beginning of the strike, before it actually began, the 1776 Chapter of the AFL-CIO's President Carol Drew spoke forcefully to a gathering outside the Student Union during lunch hour.

By Monday of the next week, she didn't have to speak during lunch hours any more. Strikers picketed in front of Whitmore and the entrance to the Campus Center circle. A day later the picket lines thickened and expanded to the front of the Student Union.

Students honored the picket lines on an individual basis, but the strike resulted in the closing of the People's Market, and the Bluewall did not serve alcoholic beverages throughout the strike.

The week of the strike was a week of waiting for the 4th of July, and waiting on campus for the Toward Tomorrow Fair, an alternative look into America's next 200 years as opposed to the look backward which was the nation's Bicentennial.

Summer session

Just about the time that Jack Ford and the ultra-conservative California Tribune started removing the stigma from marijuana smoking and gaining legislative support as a result, summer session began at UMass. Registration went smoothly, believe it or not, as about 5000 summer students committed themselves to the books for the next couple of months.

The University offered foreign study programs in France, Italy, Germany and England, and alternatives such as non-credit summer workshops also spiced up summer session.

Workshops included such diverse subjects as Gravestone Rubbing, Acupuncture Massage, Hatha Yoga and Hang Gliding. "Where are the Directions?", a credit-free workshop series offered by Continuing Education and the Student Development Center, helped those new UMass alumni find alternative after-the-educational face lifestyles.

School of education audit

Most people in Amherst were concerned with picking and selling their fresh-ripened strawberries in Amherst when the University set up its battle lines to challenge a School of Ed federal audit.

An audit of federal grants and contracts to the school was released at strawberry time, and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) criticized the University for violating federal regulations in army cases and failing to closely supervise program expenditures.

The audit said the school misspent $365,000. A Spokesperson for the school said they could answer for $289,000 of it, but for the time being, the spokesperson said that about $84,000 "may have been misspent."

The audit covered the years from 1969 to 1975 when the School of Ed was run by the innovative but infamously controversial dean, Dwight Allen.

Allen resigned last year after a faculty member criticized fiscal procedures, which triggered the probe.

Wood pay increase

The June trustees' meeting brought pay increases for President Wood and his top level assistants, and with it brought stinging remarks from student, faculty and labor representatives on campus. The trustees also passed the $45 dorm rent increase proposed last winter by Gage.

The President's spokesperson, Howard White, said the Wood pay increase brought his salary up to its $50,939 level of a year ago, before Wood took a voluntary cut to $47,299 in April of 1975.

President of the 1776 local of AFL-CIO, Carol Drew's initial response to the pay increase was something you can't print in newspapers, but later she said, "I thoroughly question how the Governor or the Board of Trustees or Wood's Office can justify this when they are paying some of the public employees on this campus at a scale just above welfare".

Speaker of the Student Senate Annette Guttenberg said the increase was "unwise and unfair for Wood and his highly paid staff", when some faculty positions were frozen, and with a $45 rent increase, with no merit pay raises for University employes for the last three years.

Spokesperson White said the increases reflected "fairly substantially increased responsibilities". Wood suggested the raise himself, by the way, but no reference to the proposed raise was made in the written material trustees received at the Board meeting. Board Chairperson Joseph Healy said that the paragraph explaining the pay increase was left out "inadvertently" in the documentation.

New dean found

The school has found a new dean, though, and his name is Dr. Mario D. Fantini. Fantini was chosen by Chancellor Bromery to fill the position. Fantini is currently dean of the Faculty of Education at State University College at New Paltz, N.Y.

Bromery said of Fantini, he "has the combinations of qualities, experience and sence of mission which coincide with the needs of the School of Education at this time".

Fantini seemed confident that he can restore dignity and candor to the school, which has undergone, as he puts it, such "trauma".

"Under no circumstances will I compromise the distinctiveness of the school and the kinds of things it stands for", he said in accepting the offer.

The Trustees have not yet concurred on Fantini's appointment.

Bypass tabled

The Northeast Bypass, a road that would detour traffic out of the middle of campus and Amherst Center, was officially tabled by the Amherst Selectmen on July 1. A May Town Meeting decided the scrapping of the plan, but according to Nancy Eddy, Chairperson of the Selectmen, "the majority of the selectmen approved of the road but we had to follow the direction set for us at the meeting". She said she felt that the matter would be given another chance this fall.

The safety of the public was one of the main reasons for the bypass' original planning. It would close down the main drag through campus, North Pleasant Street, and a bikepath was planned to run along the route, which would have been the start of a major bike network throughout Amherst. Traffic would be dramatically decreased in Amherst, though, and some local businessmen felt that the bypass would do "the same thing that happened in Springfield, Holyoke, Athol and Orange. They died. Businesses closed up".

SATF

The University Budget Office merged with the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) this summer. The integration came out of the Board of Trustees' Budget and Finance Committee meeting in May, 1976.

According to the minutes of the meeting, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery was concerned with the amount of money being used to pay student and non-student salaries and consultation fees, and feels the need for compliance with University policies and state and federal affirmative action guidelines.

SGA Co-President Paul Cronin said that the trustees want to put all the money into one system so they will be responsible for it. But he said there is a debate as to whether or not the University should be legally responsible and have control over the money. Cronin also expressed concern over the vast differences in processing times for the University accounting system and the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) system. He said, "the University accounting system is a low velocity system and it takes three to six weeks, whereas, at RSO requests are processed in two to three days. Also, cash advances are available at RSO".

RSO, established 22 years ago, was trailor-made to respond to student needs. The speed within the RSO system enables fast changes, and a staff member said it provides quicker and more accurate accounting, and the University accounting system isn't capable of handling the need of the RSO groups due to a shortage of personnel.

"It's ludicrous for us to enter their system", said Cronin at the time of debate over the change, "we'll overload their system". Too late, Cronin.

Security tightens

A new security system to prevent the theft of books is being installed in the physical sciences library, located in the Graduate Research Center, and might be in operation by this semester, according to Richard J. Talbot, UMass library director.

The cost of installing the security system in the branch library will amount to $51,000, but Talbot says he expects the investment to pay for itself over a period of five years with money which normally would have been used to replace stolen books.

Commercial bank proposed

And also this summer, the rumor that isn't a rumor anymore. There is the possibility of a commercial bank being built in the Campus Center, in what is now the Music Library across from the Blue Wall. Chancellor Bromery and Budget Director Warren Gulko endorse it. The Board of Governors (BOG) oppose it, and the whole issue, not yet festered, is shaping up as a tug-of-war between the students and administration.

Gulko said the bank would give $102,000 to the students on their Campus Center fee, presently $64, scheduled to be increased next year. That's $5 per student, he says.

But BOG members don't agree on these figures, as well as having ideological reservations about the bank. A commercial bank would make the Campus Center look like the bottom floor of a New York hotel, they say, because the Campus Travel Center, another commercial venture, is bidding for space in the quiet study room, also across from the Blue Wall.

Bromery said "if you go past the BOG to the students, they want a bank." He cited a survey in which a majority of students asked wanted a commercial bank on campus for their banking needs. But the location in the question at the time of the survey was the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union, now occupied by the UMass Federal Student Credit Union. Also, the BOG thinks the questions were leading, since a clause of the question was, "if your Campus Center fee were to be lowerrd $5 as a result".

Reallocation of space has been delayed for various reasons all summer. Gage "threw a monkey wrench into the situation", when he delayed the moves before going on vacation. BOG member Kristin McCormack said Gage was "the final say" in the space reallocation decisions.

Then a note left August 9 by Chancellor Bromery turned over all cashier operations to the Bursar's Office, closing check-cashing in the Student Union.

As plans stand now, the Student Union Cashier's windows will be moved to the Music Library. But the Cashier's windows hold no contract, and can be moved out at any time. To make room for a commercial bank? "That's right", according to Campus Center Manager Bud Wilkes, who also endorses the proposal.

'Clerical error'

Just after Nadia Comeneci wowed the world with her seemingly flawless displays of grace and balance, University budget people were busy thinking of ways to cover a "clerical error" on the Campus Center bond prospectus given to share holders for the Campus Center. The error created an overstatement of revenue for the Campus Center's 1976 year end balance.

When SGA Co-President Cronin was asked about the overstatement, he responded "this will have little, if any, effect on students. The only way students could be affected would be by the loan from the Student Health Trust Fund. But this is very unlikely as there is presently enough money in that trust fund, and the loan will be paid back within a year".

The overstatement of the bond prospectus resulted from the amount of $472,000 being included twice on revenue schedules compiled by the University Treasurer and the University Building Authority. The total amount for the Campus Center Year End Cash Balance was about $1.2 million, according to Cronin.

At a meeting a week later, the UMass Board of Trustees voted to cover the deficit.

Chancellor Bromery said if money is to be taken from the Amherst campus, it would most likely come from the administration or building and grounds accounts. After the board voted to cover the error, Cronin said, "my information is that he (Kenneth W. Johnson, Treasurer) knew about the error long before this."

While Cronin is a student trustee, he voted against the measure to correct the bond prospectus error because he felt that since the error occurred in the Treasurer's Office, whose members are part of President Wood's staff, it would be unfair to take funds from the Amherst campus to correct it.

Student jobs

Seven students were hired by the administration to provide student input into reorganization of Student Affairs over the summer. The seven students developed into three task groups to begin working on the complexity of providing input into the many different areas the reorganization affects.

The task group on student involvement designed a structure and process by which effective student input was integrated into the decision making process of the Office of Student Affairs and the Office of Administration and Finance.

The other two task groups are looking into the Community Development Center and Residence Hall Resource Management reorganization, and the development of a Public Information Center.

The development of the Information Center was begun in the anticipation of the reshuffling of people and offices during the summer.

The center will provide the assistance in all areas including Health Care, Academic counseling, problem referral, directions and other basic needs.

SEMINAR: "Introduction to Modern Britain" (WEST 291)

The Western European Area Studies Program seeks to add scope and depth to the University's liberal arts program. It focuses upon societies with both unique historical traditions and a common heritage and destiny. The program complements a wide variety of departmental majors and offers students additional incentive and guidance in creating a meaningful interdisciplinary undergraduate experience. Courses to meet WEST requirements may be chosen from the areas of humanities, language and literature, social science, and the professional schools.

The WEST Certificate, awarded with the B.A., is an acknowledgement of special competence in the study of Western Europe, and it may be useful in supporting applications to professional and graduate school, governmental and international service, and teaching or business abroad.

This semester the program is offering a seminar, WEST 291, entitled "Introduction to Modern Britain". Cross-listed as English 381B, the seminar features novels, short stories, and poetry, as well as historical readings, in an attempt to give the student an understanding of British culture and society in the setting of the twentieth century. Students need not be in the program to sign up for the seminar.

Any student interested in the seminar can obtain further information from Prof. M. Egan (English, Bartlett Hall) or Prof. M. Swartz (History, Herber Hall). Any student who wants to know more about entering the WEST program should speak to a departmental advisor or member of the executive committee, a list of whom follows:

Living a Life

Making a Life - Making a Living is the theme of a core of 4-credit courses offered by the Orchard Hill-Central Area. Students can register for any of the seven courses, each of which emphasizes a particular aspect of the overall theme. They are:

OHI 100 "Consumers and Corporations: North America and the World in the 1970's"
OHI 102A-385C (Cross listed with COINS) "Science Technology and Society"
OHI 201-385D "Society and the Arts" ("C" core credit)
OHI 190M "Education and Work: Personal Choices, Structural Constraints"
OHI 190N "Sex Roles and Human Identity"
OHI 190P "Family and Neighborhood"
OHI 190C "Racial Awareness and the Third World"

(Most of these courses are offered MW 2:30 - 4:30)

In addition to individual classes, a series of joint sessions, special events, speakers and films are scheduled in order to explore the relationships between the different areas and to extend the classroom experience. Instructors emphasize student participation within an informal setting.

Students can register for courses in McIntyre House near the Orchard Hill-Central area.

For more information call 5-2882.

Book Exchange

Each semester, Gamma Sigma Sigma, the National Service Sorority, sponsors a Book Exchange. This year we will be collecting books the 2nd and 3rd of September.

How does a Book Exchange work? It's easy. First you bring us your books that you wish to sell. You mark the price on them that you wish to receive and we mark them up a very slight amount for our time. Then we sell them for you. After a week's time, you come back to us and collect your money or the books that we couldn't sell for you. Easy, right?

So bring us your old texts, paperbacks, or lab manuals and let us do the work. Our hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union beginning Sept. 2. We'll be glad to see you.

If you followed the headlines this summer, you didn't learn very much about this year's 4th of July. The tall ships and tall stories dominated not only page one but very few publications carried any report of the numerous demonstrations that took place across the nation in various cities at all. Area dailies overlooked some 80,000 people who were not satisfied with the hoopla and festivity of the great Bicentennial.

In Philadelphia 400 people from the Western Mass July 4th Coalition joined what public officials estimated to be 25,000 but protest organizers claimed to have 60,000 to rally and march against big government and corporate giants.

The Western Mass Coalition was delayed for about two hours due to the long line of other contingents. The program was the result of several months of effective community organizing both in this area and across the nation.

The theme of the Philadelphia demonstration was a Bicentennial Without Colonies to express solidarity with the Puerto Rican independence movement.

The rally followed a 2¼ mile route through Northern Philadelphia, a predominantly Black neighborhood and was closely observed by riot geared-police prepared to quell the violence predicted by Mayor Frank Rizzo.

Rizzo had requested 15,000 federal troops but was denied by Washington. The violence never occurred and according to one member of the New York contingent, not a single arrest was made.

The rally-march was brought to a halt about 5 p.m. when rain intervened after several political activists had delivered their speeches calling for a new American revolution.

Down the street Jerry Ford, Queen Elizabeth, and others celebrated a more traditional 4th of July. "Our Happiest Birthday" grinned Walter Kronkite, was the theme of network television's coverage wrap up.

In Washington DC, far fewer area demonstrators joined the ranks of the People's Bicentennial Commission (PBC). Only one busload of "alternative observers" disembarked from Boston the night before to arrive at the Jefferson Memorial for a sunrise ceremony. The demonstrators then marched, following the route of the earlier Viet Nam and Civil Rights demonstrations to the mall across from the Capitol Building.

A riot-geared cavalry followed the peaceful marchers and remained with them for the entire protest which terminated at 9:30 by not attending Vice President Rockefeller's "Buy-Centennial" speech near the Washington Monument. The rally itself broke up about 6 p.m.

The only notable confrontation which occurred was that between the newspapers, the U.S. Park Police, and the PBC's attendance estimates. According to the Park Police, the rally never peaked beyond 5,000. Jeremy Rifkin, founder and co-director of the PBC, conceded that the crowd was not as large as anticipated; he had obtained a permit for up to 250,000 demonstrators. The PBC claims that at least 25,000 were in attendance and at 4:56 p.m., during the rally, some 10,000 signatures had been collected by the PBC on a petition circulated against big business.

"10,000 new patriots have signed the 'Declaration of Economic Independence'!" announced Rifkin at that time. He later told reporters that the unfounded rumors of potential violence, perpetuated by the media, was responsible for the lower than expected attendance. Rifkin stated that the group was a "quality crowd" and a "political crowd" despite the size.

The rally served as an open forum for a diverse number of speakers and their causes. Among them were Ed Sadlowski, president of the largest steel district union in the country, Philip Foner, historian and author of We the Other People and Dolores Huerta, vice-president of the United Farm Workers, spoke on labor and government relations, as did Sid Lens, historian and labor organizer, who said, "We dedicate ourselves to overthrow this government! We dedicate ourselves today for that revolution and for ever!"

Actress Jane Fonda, who helped moderate the last half of the rally, resurrected '60's sentiments by bringing back to memory the not-so-distant Vietnam era, Watergate and post-Watergate, political corruption, and assassinations, while calling for the abolition of the Central Intelligence Agency.

By far, the most powerful delivery came from author Jonathon Kozol Death at an Early Age. A resident of Boston, his criticism of American education stirred the crowd at several points during his discourse.

From UMass was Ellen Gavin who spoke on a return to campus activism and Montague resident Sam Lovejoy on the politics of nuclear power.

Daily newspapers paid little or no attention to the protests in Philadelphia, Washington, or in San Francisco, Seattle, and Los Angeles.

The Boston Globe carried a stunning red-white-and blue American flag ghosted behind its front page and a photo somewhere in the middle of three clowns that they claimed were the PBC. The same photo was carried by the Herald American and the Springfield Daily News.

The Washington Post printed a column on the PBC rally and said it was "remarkably free of strife and contention" in the following morning's issue.

Radical Economics

As a result of organized collective student action, two new radical political economics courses are being offered by the Economics Department this semester.

The Undergraduate Economics Council, a link in the budding student unionization movement on campus, secured the scheduling of the two courses after negotiating with Economics Department administrators last Spring.

Both courses, "Political Economy of Socialism" and "Political Economy of United States Social Change, will be taught by Michael Albert.

Albert, author of What Is To Be Undone?, a book analyzing the potential for revolutionary change in the U.S., said both courses will be part lecture, part discussion, and each will "require serious participation precisely due to the importance of the material to be covered."

The social change course, Albert explained, will focus on perspectives concerning the ills of capitalism and how to remedy them via a revolution. The socialism course, recommended for those who have some prior radical or Marxian background, will examine the daily life and political economic characteristics of the various Socialist models revolutionaries have suggested for the United States, he said.

Both courses are slated for Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. The Socialism course — Economics 391D — meets from 2:30 to 3:45, and the social change course — Economics 391E — meets from 4:00 to 5:15.

For further information, contact Michael Albert in Room 826 in Thompson Hall or call 584-0914.

Internships Office

The staff of the Office of Internships welcomes back the entire campus community and hopes that everyone's summer was full of warmth and relaxation. Our orientation meeting for all Fall Interns is on Wednesday, Sept. 1, from 10 to 2 at The Campus Center - Rm. 101. Our interns will be working full-time off campus for academic credit in a great variety of professional, technical and social service fields. Most students are concentrated in Mass., New York and Washington, D.C. but many are spread throughout this and other countries.

We extend a special welcome to all Intern Alumni. During the meeting we will explore our proposal that intern alumni act as advisors and counselors for current and prospective interns. We will also introduce a proposal for an evaluation of Internships via tapes and film.

Most important, our Fall Interns will be meeting each other, their advisors and the new Office of Internship staff. We plan an exciting meeting and look forward to seeing old and new friends.

College on the Hill

Have you found the university to be an impersonal city, with huge, cement buildings, and distracted students? Maybe the Orchard Hill-Central Residential College instructional program can help.

"Instead of exposing students to a very large campus, the Orchard Hill-Central program offers students an opportunity to work with smaller groups of people," says Helen Schneider, Assistant Director for Academic Affairs for the Area, "and to work with faculty members who are interested in teaching in an informal setting.'"

For this purpose, the Orchard Hill-Central Area offers regular departmental courses that have proven to be of continuing interest to the residents. Among the cross-listed courses are Rhetoric, Introduction to Black Studies, Introduction to African Studies, Elements of Economics, American Politics and others.

Special interest courses include offerings entitled "Our Bodies Ourselves," "America the Beautiful?", "Dynamics of White Racism" and "Aspects of Urban America." In addition, the program encourages students to draw up their own credited courses.

Orchard Hill course offerings are designed to encourage a student's personal growth. The College provides students with a chance to explore subjects important to their interaction with the community now and with society as a whole later.

A collection of four-credit courses entitled "Making a Life, Making a Living" deals with important human concerns. These courses cover sex roles and human identity; special problems encountered by Third World peopies; consumerism; and society's function in the arts, as well as other subject matter that allows the student to analyze his place in the scheme of things.

For students concerned with taking credit in their own major field, the College's outreach program offers a variety of three-credit opportunities. Field work for these courses is experienced in such places as Monson State Hospital and the Holyoke Boys' Club, or can be approached in an independent study framework.

Two three-credit courses in Black-American classical music will be taught by Archie Shepp, internationally known jazz musician. These courses are hopefully forerunners of the proposed John Coltrane Institute, a department which will instruct students in the art of classical jazz music.

The Human Oppression Program offers credited courses with a view toward cementing amiable relations within the Orchard Hill-Central complex.

Students who wish to teach or be taught by their peers may enroll in the Colloquium Program, which stimulates the sharing of student interests through one-credit, ungraded courses.

Registration for Orchard Hill Courses will be held from 8:30 to 5:00 in McIntyre House on class days from September 1 through September 16. For information about any of its programs contact Michael Wolff, Helen Schneider or Nina Koltz at McIntyre House, or call 545-2883.

The entire educational program is available to all residents of the Orchard Hill and Central Dormitories, according to Ms. Schneider. "Michael Wolff (Director of OHRC) and Allen Davis (former Asst. Director of Academic Affairs) have put much effort and dedication into forming the program for this semester, and it is, I think, a very good one indeed."

It's only tomorrow

Consumer Advocate Ralph Nader was here. Communist candidate for the Presidencey Gus Hall was here. Feminist Flo Kennedy was here. Anti-feminist Joyce Davidson was here. And the Valley's own Sam Lovejoy, anti-nuke activist, was here. But most of all, people were here. Were they here. Upwards of 20,000 of them, as a matter of fact. People ate hot dogs from solar ovens, saw (plugged-in) wind generators, and walked in the bright sun somewhat mesmerized by what the future has come to be.

Ralph Nader's speeches highlighted the weekend fair. More than 1500 people packed two speeches by the consumer leader, who spoke on citizen involvement in the future and U.S. Energy policies, on the first day of the fair. While Nader got things rolling, Flo Kennedy ended the fair with a bang. She spoke immediately after anti-feminist Joyce Davidson, but in location, and turned what could have been another political speech into a gay festival.

Kennedy began her presentation with a medley of "Everybody needs a hooker once in a while", as she had just returned from the week-long Hookers' convention in New York. Kennedy touched upon subjects ranging from prostitution to socialism to the high costs of consumer goods.

People came and saw, what must be conquered. The fair was, in most of their eyes, a success.

For a Nickel I Will ......

by
Scott McKearney

Yesterday I was at the supermarket taking part in the weekly financial agony of food shopping. Passing by the beverage area I realized that of the thousands of bottles waiting to be bought, not a single one was "returnable". The thought of all these bottles being tossed into the local dump and all the millions that share the same fate each year was startling. Never before had I really thought that "throwaway" and "disappear" were not synonymous terms when it comes to solid waste. My mind drifted to the efforts of many dedicated people who are working hard for the success of the returnable bottle referendum which will appear on the ballot in Massachusetts this November 4 (the same day we dispose of Jerry Ford, who if nothing else is biodegradable).

A very sizeable percentage of solid waste in this nation is comprised of cans and bottles connected with the beverage industry. We do recycle a small percentage, but presently this effort has not proved significant either because the packaging companies are using plastic in the containers which makes recycling costs prohibitively high, or because of organizational complications in the recycling programs themselves. Before institution of a "returnable" bill in Vermont state, it cost the highway department 8.4 cents per container to remove disposables from the highway. The grounds crew at Boston Common picks up a ton of non-returnables each day of the fair weather season and the city of Boston is littered with twenty tons of cans and bottles on the roadsides daily. Since this type of litter can be prevented by bringing back returnables, this is a senseless waste of hundreds of thousands of tax dollars.

Obviously non-returnables are responsible for much energy and resource waste as well as tax dollars. Why does industry market them so pervasively? The responsibility lies in the basic life force of the economic system: profit. The approximate cost of producing throwaways is around 4.6 cents per container, but the price is passed on to the consumer. This results in handsome profits for packaging firms and convenience for beverage firms. With the reintroduction of returnables, the long-run cost of reuseable containers may be reduced to the level of one or two cents, based on the average life of reuseable containers. This may result in an overall reduction in beverage costs to consumers as well as a large decrease in tax dollars spent on solid waste disposal. Even the most naive person would have little trouble understanding the reason why the packaging and beverage industry, on a national scale is pumping dollars into an effort to beat the referendum here.

Organized labor in Massachusetts has gone on record in the past in opposition to the 'Bottle Bill'. They reason that returnables will cost jobs in packaging and in transportation. Labor has lost jobs in packing during the past fifteen years despite the soaring production of non-returnables.

The blame does not rest on the returnable bottle, but on big business oligopoly. The number of breweries in this nation has been reduced thirty-three per cent and the number of soft drink plants have been reduced fifty-eight per cent in the last fifteen years as a result of centralization of capital reductions in one way transportation costs. So the major responsibility for job losses is industrial maneuvers and the non-returnables.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston points out in a study of the proposed bill that the maximum job gain by returning returnables may be as high as eighteen hundred and five, and the maximum job loss could not exceed six hundred and thirty-five in the packing industry. This still generates an overall increase of eleven hundred and seventy new jobs, hardly destructive to the labor interests in this state. Labor cannot see this economically or politically, as the big unions are reflecting the whims of bis business and their carefully planned deceptive statistics.

> 'Blame does not rest on the returnable bottle, but on big business oligopoly.'

The drive to pass the "Bottle Bill" referendum is being led by the Committee For a Massachusetts Bottle Bill, with Susan Kaplan acting as area coordinator, working out of Mass Pirg at 233 North Pleasant Street, Amherst. The effort is being coordinated with a voter registration drive and the focus is to reach those consumers most vulnerable to industry advertising. The committee needs people to work in voter registration, public speaking, public demonstrations and canvassing.

If you can spare some time for this effort, contact Susan at Mass PIRG.

In the effort to combat a forth-coming media blitz by anti-bottle bill organizations, the committee is planning a weeklong fundraising and public education drive beginning Sunday, September 19. There will be a concert on that afternoon with a $1.50 donation and events throughout the following week. Senator Kelly of Oxford has promised to match $1,000 for funds raised through these events, so it is particularly important to give our support to the effort.

The enemies of the bill sport a two million dollar arsenal to defeat the bill so your support is vitally important. More information will be available in coming weeks but in the meantime, if you can contribute any time and effort please contact Susan at Mass PIRG and find out how your energies can be most valuably directed.

Who's Next ?

Scott McKearney

This fall, the University of Massachusetts could well be reaching a turning point in its history. But then, it could well continue the degenerating process that has been a precedent of the past.

I read with rapturous delight of the resignation of Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. In this role, Dr. Gage was supposed to facilitate broad communication between students and the University which is intended to serve them. Since 1973, when I first entered the University of Massachusetts, I have looked in vain for the opportunity to see Dr. Gage fulfill this goal. He made a better hatchet man that facilitator, and he was not even clean at this role. Perhaps my memory has failed me in this matter, but I do not recall any instance in hich he openly defended or facilitated policies or actions which would be in the better interest of students.

Gage was said to have favored the improvement of dormitory life, yet he supported the transfer of Residence Hall Trust Funds used for the renovation of dormitories, to cover for the mistakes of the Board of Trustees who are badly in need of renovation themselves.

He should have stood behind the philosophy of state supported higher education which provides quality education to those unable to pay, yet he acknowledged the "necessity" of hikes in rent, fees and tuition.

This University is dangerously torn by a lack of communication between students and Administration, by political back stabbing, and is starved by a lack of basic funds to insure quality education. As we began to see last year, and could all too easily see again this year, the lack of communication between the Administration and students further agitated wounds opened by the University Trustees, by Bob Wood, our political opportunist President, and by a semi-deranged state government. This has created a serious rift between the components of the University and has caused the institution of a crippling lack of direction in our further education and in the quality of the University of Massachusetts.

One cannot expect that careful filling of the office of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs will bring ultimate harmony to life around here, nor do I suggest harmony or simple placation to be a goal. I do suggest that the Administration and students need to improve the quality of their working relationship and that real student input is needed in choosing a new Vice Chancellor.

Chancellor Bromery has spoken of providing students with the majority of the input on a search committee to fill the position. I would hope that these words will come to fruition this September. If an honest working relationship and communication with students are of value to this Administration, then students will be given the right and responsibility to choose a person they find themselves able to work with and basically trust. Perhaps consequences of giving students a taste of power. If so, then fear, not students, will be the nightmare of this University's future.

I shall not expect that Chancellor Bromery will forget or reconsider his stated comfort with having real student input in choosing a real Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. I shall expect his honesty in setting himself as an example to be a facilitator rather than an administrator. I shall expect him to care about the real improvement of this University. When one talks "University", one speaks of those who live and learn there.

Environment Roundup

Nuclear

LAKEWOOD, COLO., Aug. 12 (PNS) —

Land scheduled for residential development near the Rocky Flats Nuclear Weapons Plant in Colorado contains surface concentrations of deadly plutonium ranging up to 80 times the maximum allowable levels set by the state and as much as 380 times the normal concentration in Colorado.

Scientists from the Jefferson Co. (Colo.) Health Dept. and the U.S. Geological Survey, reporting in Science magazine, found the high plutonium concentrations in samples of fine dust particles so small they can be suspended in air and inhaled by people. The plutonium is believed to have been deposited in the area by a series of accidents at the nuclear weapons plant, operated jointly by Rockwell International and the U.S. Energy Research and Development Administration.

The areas surveyed lie within three miles of the plant and are downwind. Proposed developments include about 3,000 homes and a potential population of 10,000. The scientists charge that the present method of treating contaminated soil — plowing surface soil under — is "insufficient" because the plutonium remains in the soil and can resurface, while the area can be recontaminated by future accidents at the plant. The report made no recommendations.

No Mow

NEW BERLIN, WISC., Aug. 12 (PNS) —

A New Berlin, Wisc., biologist has won a legal precedent upholding the constitutional right of American homeowners to leave the lawn mower in the shed and let the backyard go to seed.

Donald Hager, an employe of the U.S. Forest Service, was hauled into court two years ago by the city of New Berlin when his neighbors complained about his unsightly, unmowed lawn. He was charged with violating a local ordinance requiring removal of certain weeds aad prohobiting homeowners on subdivided land from letting lawn grass exceed 12 inches.

Hager argued that allowing lawns to return to natural conditions saves energy, provides food and ground cover for native wildlife, eliminates the need for fertilizers and chemical conditioners and encourages ecological balance and natural plant succession.

The court has finally ruled the ordinance is unconstitutional because it discriminates against homeowners on subdivided land — 'opening up the possibility of challenges to similar ordinances all over the country.

Vapor Lights

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 12 (PNS) —

A serious health hazard posed by ultra-violet radiation from broken street lamps has been deliberately ignored by federal regulators, according to Rep. Toby Moffett (D., Conn.). Moffett claims more than 100 serious injuries resulting from exposure to broken mercury vapor lamps have been reported to HEW's Bureau of Radiological Health (BRH) in the past 18 months, yet "BRH has no intention of ever creating enforceable regulations."

The 25 million mercury vapor street lamps in use in the U.S. pose no hazard when they're intact, said Moffett. But when the outer globe is accidentally broken, which occurs frequently, the bulb may continue to burn for up to 100 hours, releasing dangerous levels of ultra-violet radiation. Common symptoms of over-exposure include sudden signs of aging, skin burns, cataracts, temporary blindness and skin tumors.

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 15 (PNS) —

The federal government's estimate of recoverable domestic uranium is hopelessly inadequate, according to a recent report by the General Accounting Office (GAO). The GAO investigation, requested by Rep. Ronald Mottl (D., Ohio), concludes that the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA) has no more idea how much uranium exists in the U.S. than does the Federal Power Commission know how much natural gas can be found. Despite assurances by ERDA that uranium reserves are sufficient to meet nuclear power plant fuel demands through the year 2000, the GAO report found that ERDA's own data indicate that known uranium reserves could be depleted by the mid-1980s.

The report also scored ERDA's claim that only three to five percent of domestic uranium supply is now being exported. Statistics from the Nuclear Management Information System indicate that more than 20 percent of domestic production has been exported, including a shipment of 10 tons of enriched uranium to India this month. Finally, the report accused ERDA of failing to compile reliable information on the extent of foreign control of domestic uranium. Because of such failures, the report warns, the U.S. may become dependent on unpredictable foreign sources of uranium sooner than expected.

WASHINGTON, D.C., (PNS) —

If your false teeth shine with a special glow these days, it may not be due to a new denture polish, but to uranium in the porcelain from which the teeth are made. Nucleonics Week, an industry trade journal, reported in April that some 50 million sets of false teeth worn in the U.S. contain traces of uranium that delivers appreciable doses of alpha and beta radiation to mouth tissue. The report claims the radiation doses are greater than the maximum level recommended by radiation protection standards.

Now, an official of the Food and Drug Administration's Bureau of Medical Devices says the problem has been under review for two to three years and manufacturers have been asked to reduce the amount of uranium in false teeth. The official insists the level of radiation does not pose a threat to human health.

Contamination

WASHINGTON, D.C., July 15 (PNS) —

The possible death toll resulting from a major nuclear power plant accident may be two to ten times higher than official government estimates, according to a new study prepared by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). The 150-page EPA report claims that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's $3 million Rasmussen Report on nuclear accident risk is "highly uncertain" and "premature." The Rasmussen Report, often cited by pro-nuclear government officials, claims that following a major accident 3,300 persons would be killed instantly and up to 33,000 would die of cancer over the next 20 to 30 years. The new EPA study revises the latter figure upwards to between 66,000 and 330,000 cancer deaths.

The report also challenged the Nuclear Regulatory Commission estimates on the ability of big cities to evacuate residents in the event of a nearby accident, and warned that despite NRC assurances most major hospitals are not equipped to treat radiation casulaties. EPA said the discrepancies between the Rasmussen NRC death estimates and EPA estimates resulted from different interpretations of how radioactivity relates to cancer.

WASHINGTON, D.C., (PNS) —

In the wake of recurring rumors of a price-fixing conspiracy among major uranium producers, the Justice Department has issued subpoenas to more than a dozen U.S. firms, including several major oil companies. The subpoenas were issued by a special grand jury in Washington, D.C., raising the possibility of criminal indictments. Investigators are trying to discover if executives of U.S. energy companies attended a meeting of uranium producers in Johannesburg, South Africa, in March 1972. Reportedly, that meeting was convened to establish a uranium cartel that would control the international market for uranium, the fuel for nuclear power reactors.

BOSTON, MASS., July 15 (PNS)

Scientists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology claim to have overcome one of the main obstalces to cheap solar energy conversion. The MIT breakthrough eliminates the need for many expensive photovoltaic cells by increasing the intensity of sunlight between 500 and 1,000 times, thus reducing the number of absorbtion cells required to capture sufficient energy. The converter, due on the commercial market by the end of next year, will supply up to half the electricity and 70 percent of the heat, air-conditioning and hot water for an average home.

Dirt Flees

Americ's greatest natural resource — rich, arable topsoil — is being depleted at a record pace, threatening the future of American agriculture, says Environmental Action magazine. It reports that overuse of agricultural land resulting from high grain prices and lack of conservation techniques has reduced the average depth of topsoil from three feet 200 years ago to just six inches today. More than half of the nearly four million hectares of land converted to agricultural use in 1973-74 "had inadequate conservation treatment" and suffered an averaged loss of 27 tons of topsoil per hectare (2.47 acres), about double the tolerable limits established by the Department of Agriculture. In the southern Great Plains region, topsoil erosion during the same period averaged between 34 and 314 tons per hectare.

Fears of a new drought cycle in the Great Plains, where rains last year were only 75 percent of normal, increase the potential topsoil problem. Yet government agricultural policy critics note that appropriations for the Soil Conservation Service were cut by the administration this year.

Project Self

An Educational Alternative

Everywoman's Center is sponsoring a Fall series of Project Self workshops open to all University and community women. Over 45 different workshops are being offered in the areas of the arts and creativity, dance and movement, outdoor sports, personal growth and skills for living. University students may receive one credit per workshop, and others can arrange for credit through Continuing Education for a small additional fee.

Project Self workshops are aimed at providing women with an educational alternative. The workshops offer women a supportive, non-competitive atmosphere in which to share and learn new skills and knowledge, as well as to become more in touch with themselves as women and explore their potentials and futures. Workshops offer students an enjoyable break from more traditional academic courses, and often add an alternative or supplementary perspective to regular departmental offerings.

This Fall there is a special emphasis on workshops for older women (40+) and single mothers, thus providing non-traditional students, staff and community women with a chance to meet and connect with other women in similar situations and life stages.

All workshops are low cost and a limited number of scholarships will be available for women in financial need. Registrations will be accepted from August 30-September 24. For more information and a brochure drop by Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall, or call 545-0883. EWC hours are Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday 10-4 p.m., Thursday 1-4 p.m., and Wednesday evenings 6-8 p.m.

For Grad Women Also

This fall the Everywoman's Center, Women's Studies and the Graduate Student Senate are sponsoring a series of workshops and discussion groups for graduate women. Each month discussion groups will be focused around particular issues and will be facilitated. The groups will provide a place where graduate women can meet and share their concerns and experiences. There is no fee or registration necessary, and wine and cheese will be served. The topics and dates are as follows: Sept. 23, Isolation and Support; Oct. 21, Personal Relationships; Nov. 18, Discrimination. The meetings will be held from 4:00-6:00 in Thompson, 6th floor lounge.

In addition, two Assertiveness Training Groups will be offered. The first workshop will run from Sept. 22 - Oct. 20, and the second from Nov. 3 - Dec. 1. They will be held from 6:30-8:30 in Graduate Research Center, Tower B, 317. These workshops focus on learning how to be more assertive in day to day personal and professional relationships. Being assertive means being able to stand up for your rights through honest, direct and appropriate expression of your feelings, beliefs and opinions. It is a critical skill for women who are seeking to be in control of their personal and professional lives.

The workshops will help participants to identify those areas in which they would like to be more assertive. It will provide a supportive atmosphere to experiment with new ways of dealing with those situations through role playing, exercises and discussions.

There is a fee of $15.00 for each five week session with very limited scholarships available. For more information or to register for the Assertiveness Training, call Arlene Ryan at 545-1922 or Mary Lou O'Neil at 545-0883.

Wilmington 10 — Chavis

Angela Davis and Reverend Ben Chavis lead a demonstration taking place in Washington, D.C. in May of 1975 to protest the incarceration of the Wilmington Ten and Charlotte Three and, the brutal repression of the state of North Carolina.

On September 6 of this year, Labor Day, thousands of people will march down the streets of Raleigh, North Carolina, to demand freedom and justice for the Wilmington 10, The Charlotte 3, political prisoners all over this country, and an end to repression of labor and labor organizers.

The march has been called by the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression. The Amherst Branch of the NAARPR will be chartering a bus to bring Amherst-Northampton residents to the march. Springfield is planning to fill four buses with people to go to Raleigh.

North Carolina has the highest number of prisons in the country (72) and the lowest percentage of union membership. Over 100 men and women are on North Carolina's Death Row.

It was in this setting that Reverend Ben Chavis came to Wilmington, N.C. in 1971 to help resolve the explosive situation which had brewed around a recently desegregated high school in that town. At the time, Reverend Chavis was a field organizer for the United Church of Christ's Commission for Racial Justice.

Gregory Congregational Church in Wilmington was the headquarters of Black students and their supporters, from where Reverend Chavis led a peaceful march of 1500 on the Board of Education asking for a Black Studies program, the end to the suspension of Black students without cause, and the right to honor Martin Luther King's birthday.

Immediately after, the local Ku Klux Klan and other racist vigilantes began to fire into the church. Several fires were set in the neighborhood. The police refused to intervene until a white man was killed, probably from cross-fire from the vigilantes. (A Black youth had been killed the day before.)

One year later, Reverend Chavis, nine Black high school students, and a white woman social worker, were charged with arson and conspiracy to assault emergency personnel. They were sentenced to 282 years collectively. The only witnesses for the government were two men, housed luxuriously at government expense, and facing unrelated criminal charges. All appeals of the case have been denied.

Dr. Jim Grant, another Black leader in North Carolina, was also a target for the state's repressive apparatus. T.J. Reddy, a young Black poet went to the Lazy B Riding Stables in Charlotte and was refused permission to ride. He returned later with the press and picket signs. Soon after, the Lazy B was burned down.

Three years later, Dr. Grant, T.J. Reddy, and Chjrlie Parker were convicted of burning the stable. The only witnesses were two men who, now-public documents prove, had been paid for their testimony by Robert Mardian, Southern organizer for Nixon's administration.

The march has been called to attract national attention to the repressive state of North Carolina and to put national pressure on the government of that state.

A Salute to Max Roach

U.Mass professor Max Roach, master percussionist, was honored early this past summer on WMUA in a two day celebration saluting the musical giant. The programs, hosted by Brother Kwaku and Brother Malik, got under way with Roach's early recordings, those with Charlie Parker, Jay McShane and others thru the mid 60's when he recorded with the impulse label. Students as well as faculty responded with delight.

E. Cohen photo

During the second part of the celebration, an interview with Professor Roach was aired. He explained how he began playing, as "After my mother's rejection of the trumpet, I switched to percussion. Back then a half hour lesson was only a quarter." Also discussed was some of the major changes the musicians as well as the music has gone through. "Young musicians must learn to be themselves and develop a style of their own. Also you must start to analyze what is more important, looking like a spaceman or perfecting your sound."

Later in the summer, Mr. Roach took part in a New York concert expressing solidarity with the Cuban people. The event, entitled, "In Concert With Cuba" was held in conjunction with the July 26th movement, marking the 23rd anniversary of the attack on the Moncada garrison which sparked the movement to free Cuba which eventually liberated the Cuban people. Also featured were Roy Brown, Bernice Johnson Reagon, Teatro 4, Sandra Esteves, a film from Cuba featuring the famous Cuba percussion group Los Papines, and a Salsa group. A special tribute to Paul Robeson made up of his powerful song and slides of the artist began the event.

The cultural evening was still held despite an attempt by three right-wing Cuban exiles to bomb the theater housing the cultural event.

Professor Roach has been consistently in the forefront of the struggle. His recording of the "Freedom Now Suite" helped give strength to the movement against racism and exploitation during the sixties. His constant imput to the struggle as well as the music makes him a true man of deeds not words.

Have you considered earning a commission in the Active Army, Army Reserve, or National Guard at the same time you earn your degree? The opportunity is available at this University.

Army ROTC offers that opportunity in addition to accredited military science courses; professional development activities — orienteering, rappelling, winter survival, tactical training and many more; and an opportunity to gain practical leadership and management experience.

How can you tell if Army ROTC is your thing? Try it as a Freshman and-or Sophomore. You will make no commitments and can drop it anytime, as you can other courses. If you like it and are qualified you can continue your last two years under contract and earn $100 per month.

To get more information and facts on the program and its opportunities, visit us at the Department of Military Science (between Boyden Gym and Southwest) or call 545-2321. We are interested in your future. You owe it to yourself to get the facts.

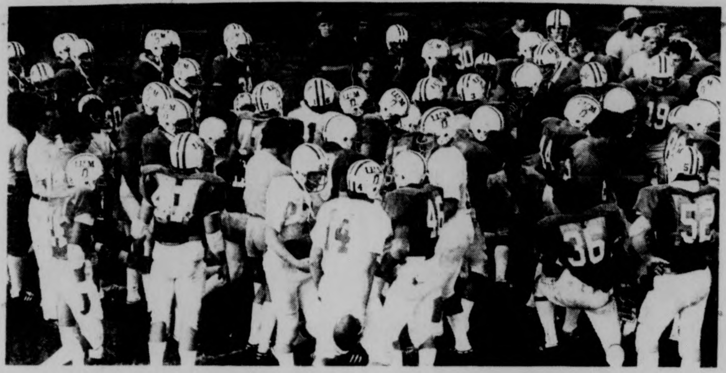
What will the sports fan be looking for this year?



Coach Dick MacPherson urges his players on. Will his team...

by
Jerry Rogers

To the student who is a casual observer, innocent bystander or anything other than an educated fan, it must seem like UMass has only three sports teams on the intercollegiate level worth any of his-her time or thoughts.

Every Fall, like it or not, football laps up most of the sports event attendance and press coverage. During the Winter the sport in this elevated position is basketball, and during the Spring Lacrosse becomes the exulted.

To the observer who more than just opens an eye to athletic activities many more fine teams and athletes appear fairly abundantly. In the Fall there are consistently super men's and women's cross country teams. (How can I brand the women's team as "consistent" when last year was its first year? Easily, just extrapolate.)

In the Winter men's and women's gymnastics meets are true athletic "events". And during the spring there are countless events and meets going on all the time featuring both men's and women's teams.

Anyway, the point of all this is that it all justifies my choice to write more on men's and women's cross country teams in this article than on football. There's certainly no cause to worry about football getting its share of press over the course of its season. As for the other sports in full swing during the Fall, I can't possibly cover all of them in one article and don't have the time to do a separate one on each for this one issue. I hope they will get their due over the course of the Fall, however.

At the sports information office the schedule handed out for the football team is not just a schedule, it is a 1976 Preseason Football Prospectus. Though there is nothing besides schedules available for the two cross country teams, there's a lot to be said about them.

The women's team was probably the most successful team fielded by UMass during all of last year, ranking first in New England and ninth in the country in its first year of competition.

It can only be expected to do better this year, according to Arnie Morse, freshperson cross country coach. He points excitedly at runners such as Jane Welzel, Johara Chapman, Julie Lafreniere, Diane Perry, Bonnie Bukowski and Laurie Wolf. Welzel was runnerup in last year's New England Championships and an All-East three miler. Lafreniere was third in the New Englands and Chapman was an All-East miler. Welzel, Lafreniere, Bukowski and Wolf combined to form a nationally ranked two mile relay team during the track season.

Others on the team from sophomore to senior are all distinguishing themselves through rapid improvement. Morse also expects the incoming women freshpeople who will be joining the team to mount strong attempts toward breaking into the starting lineup.

Morse believes a finish in the top ten of the nationals is inevitable and the team could go as high as fourth or fifth.

The men's cross country team, though sporting only the same eight win and two loss record as the football team, was not expected to do as well as they did. The goals of the team were set even higher than eight and two but realizing those goals would have been even more surprising than having the team fall short of an eight and two season.

The men's cross country team has been a consistent producer of All-Americans and always has different runners who can push the team as leaders. Runners John McGrail, John Scheer, Frank Carroll and Mike Quinn will be looked to as the strongest runners on this year's squad and all are returners from last year's team.

There are other returners expected to push times lower and one of the strongest groups of freshpeople is expected to join the team, said Morse.

The team, "young in age but solid in experience", can be expected to challenge for the New England and IC4A crowns.

And, oh yes, the football team will face a couple of tough opponents early in the season. Toledo and Harvard will be sandwiched around Maine for the first three games. The team could reasonably be expected to win its next six games (Boston University, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Rutgers, Holy Cross and New Hampshire). Boston College ends the schedule once again and there's no real reason to hope for a victory this time around, at least at the present time.

Though some valuable starters graduated, enough are returning so that the roster should not be a problem of magnitude.

We can expect the team to do fairly well and win possibly nine out of ten games, take the Yankee Conference Championship and see post season action, but there's nothing to indicate that the victories will be any more exciting than last year's plodders.

On with the games.

...or men's cross country grab the lion's share of this fall's headlines

Barfield resigns

Many new faces in Boyden

by
Judy Van Handle

There is an old saying in sports that you can't tell the players without a scorecard. Well, you may need one this fall to identify most of the UMass coaches.

The summer months brought about many changes in the UMass coaching ranks. Four of the ten autumn varsity sports teams will have new head mentors, while four assistant football coaches are also making their initial appearance on the UMass sports scene.

The biggest turnover came in the women's program, as three new coaches will make their debuts there. Also, the women's basketball team will have a new head honcho in the winter.

The coaching staffs for each fall sport now shape up this way:

Football

Head coach Dick MacPherson lost four assistant coaches from last fall's 8-2 Minutemen squad. Errol Prisby went to the Buffalo Bills, Larry Pasquale to Idaho State, Bob Harris to UConn, and George Flood to teaching. In their places, MacPherson will have Jim Reid, who has been on the UMass staff for several years, and Clarence Brooks, a former captain of the UMass gridders.

Tom Mullen, Phil Roland and Jack Leary have also been added to the staff. In addition, Mullen will coach the JVs.

Soccer

Although Russ Kidd will be coaching the booters for the first time this fall, he is no stranger to UMass sports. Kidd has been here since 1970, and has served as assistant lacrosse and hockey coach. He takes over for Al Rufe, the financial manager of the athletic department.

Field Hockey

Judy Davidson, a graduate student in Sports Studies, takes over the helm of the third-best team in the Northeast. She replaces Carol Albert, who resigned to continue graduate studies at the University of Manitoba.

Volleyball

Diane Thompson heads up the 1976 edition of the spikers, who finished at 5-7 last season. When spring rolls around, Thompson will also be the coach of the softball team.

Women's Tennis

Ken Rubin, a former UMass netman, will coach the UMass women. He assumes command from Sally Ogilvie, who had been the tennis women's coach for over 20 years.

Positions still to be filled within the UMass athletic hierarchy include women's basketball coach and men's assistant basketball coach. The latter post was vacated when Ray Wilson accepted a coaching position at Davidson.

Vivian Barfield resigned from the position of Assistant Athletics Director this summer. She has accepted a more "responsible" position at the University of Minnesota after fighting what she feels has been a losing battle with the UMass Athletic Department since her arrival on campus in January 1975.

Eighteen months ago, when she accepted her position at UMass she was lead to assume that her job entailed a much more responsible role in men and women's athletics. She soon discovered that she was confined to dealing with only the women's athletics and though she is part of the decision making process in the department she does not share an equal vote in policy making. According to Barfield, "My voice seems lost in the wilderness."

Outside of the conflict between her job and the job description that she agreed to, Barfield feels that the UMass Athletic Department is extemely discriminatory towards women.

Barfield feels that whoever fills her shoes at Umass will probably make little difference. "I would have liked to have seen UMass to be the first university to grant a female equal ground in this area," she commented. She sees no indication that things will change in her absence.

'We're going in intact'

by
Jerry Rogers

This year is the year that will be known as the year that was for the Department of Athletics and Intramurals. Frank McInerney, head of the department, insists the budget is tight, and "We've stretched the rubber band as far as we can stretch it."

McInerney adds, "the whole university is in that position" and claims no particular hardship which afflicts his department. He and the heads of the Exercise Science, Professional Preparation and Sports Studies Departments all must negotiate with the Dean of the School of Physical Education, David Bischoff, on funding.

In his attempts to deal with budget cuts, McInerney says he's tried to hold together a broad based program and asserts "we're going into the year intact".

Personnel cuts are what worry him most.

"One thing shocked us," McInerney explains, "and that is that two to three years ago recruiting was easy and we were quite competitive. We've found out to our chagrin that we're no longer competitive."

The offers from other schools that lure some of the department's finest coaches and administrators away are "substantial ones", said McInerney.

"The contracts aren't for nickel and dime increases, they are vastly superior offers," he reiterates.

The raids by other schools and the budget-personnel cuts have combined to yield such changes as a substantially pared down intramural office staff, with Director Ted Schmitt left as the office's only full time employee, and the loss by the department of its highly prized Assistant Athletic Director, Vivian Barfield.

By using part-time positions, streamlining staffs and hiring grad students as assistants, a full schedule of intercollegiate and intramural sports will be maintained this fall.

Such lack of stability and continuity in a staff may cause the intercollegiate level teams to lose out on perspective high school "blue chippers" who may attend a school specifically for the coaching staff of the sport that holds their particular interests.

McInerney refuses to view this as a problem, however, and instead pays tribute to the broad base of the athletic programs.

He states, "It's not the winning or the losing that's important, it's the athletic experience. It's up to the individual program heads to determine what excellence is."

In an attempt to gauge which athletic experiences are the most important to students, the School of Physical Education sent each incoming freshperson an interest and abilities poll. The poll lists 46 defined sports and activities (and leaves space for write-ins) and asks the respondent to indicate her-his expectations as to competition, instruction and degree of involvement for those activities.

Under the levels of competition portion of the poll, the prospective student athlete is asked to signify whether s-he expects to participate in the sport on a single sex basis or a co-educational one, and on what level (intramural, club or intercollegiate).

The respondent is asked to indicate whether s-he would expect instruction in the sport and on what level (elementary, intermediate or advanced).

There is also the opportunity to list oneself as a purely recreational participant ("open play") or as a spectator. McInerney thinks the role of spectator is an important and valid one and hopes to remain responsive to them.

He also says the department will continue to "try to respond to the needs of women".

It may be particularly hard to provide the women instructors and administrators of a caliber high enough to fill the needs of UMass women athletes. Because they are in demand at schools and universities across the United States and UMass may no longer be competitive when recruiting staff, it may be difficult to replace someone like a Vivian Barfield.

McInerney insists that women only need convince him that they're serious in order to get their needs met. McInerney adds that he expects the same of a group of men.

After this year the department may have to re-evaluate its schedules and activities. It should answer McInerney's question as to how far resources can be stretched until they're so lean that the stretching becomes detrimental to programs.

ATTENTION ADVERTISERS! HERE'S GOOD NEWS FROM THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN!

The policy is set, THERE WILL BE NO RATE INCREASE in display advertising this coming school year (1976-1977).

This means you again only have to spend $2.25 per column inch to advertise your message at the University of Massachusetts Campus. If you take advantage of other discount plans we offer, that low rate can even be lower. Few, if any, of the area media have been able to hold their rates. We have and we're proud of it!

The Daily Collegian, UMass' largest read morning newspaper, with a 20,000 DAILY circulation, offers advertisers a compact, dynamic market. Economic surveys show that more than $40 million are spent by UMass students, faculty and staff during a school year.

Our pledge is to serve our community with the best newspaper product possible. Currently, the Daily Collegian is the largest college-university newspaper in New England. We rank in the top ten college-university newspapers in the United States.

P.S. Rate Cards available upon request.

Our commitment to advertisers, is the ultimate in service. A courteous, responsible advertising sales staff is at your disposal. In addition, the Collegian's new creative Graphic Arts Department can prepare advertisements which will generate the attention you desire.

The Daily Collegian is a newspaper workshop. Our motivations are primarily educational, although advertising support is welcomed to help offset our more than a quarter million dollar operating cost. Should, at any time, our service not be as stated, let us know. Only in this way can we better prepare our students for their eventual entry into the Free Enterprise System.

You guessed it, we're proud of the Daily Collegian! It's a quality newspaper, prepared by students, for students. We're happy to be back in operation after our summer layoff and look forward to a continuation of the excellent relationship between the Amherst and University communities.

Cordially,
Jane Steinberg, Business Manager
Paul Smith, Advertising Manager

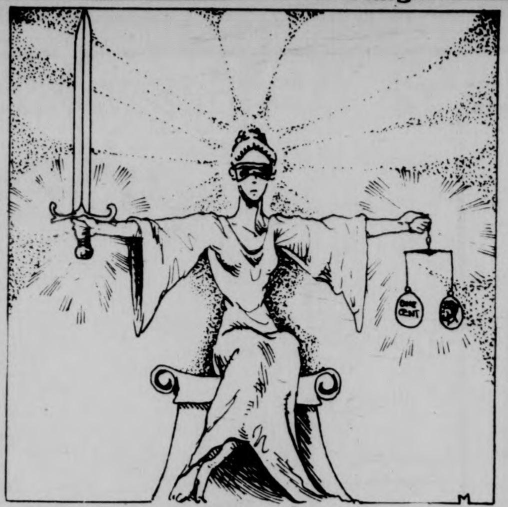
Law Without Lawyers



by
Jean Conley

Small claims courts are usually inexpensive, efficient and flexible, but after their 56 year existence in Massachusetts, they are still unused by those they were designed to protect — the consumer.

According to a recent Mass. PIRG survey in which 37 plaintiffs (persons suing) suing through Hampshire County courthouse were interviewed, small claims court might go unused because people simply forget they exist. Of those surveyed, 78 per cent of small claims court users heard of the courts by word of mouth. Only five per cent had heard of small claims courts through the mass media, and a quarter of those surveyed were "generally uniformed" about the function and proceedings of the courts.

The courts were established in 1920 in Massachusetts for resolving every day disputes, usually between a business and a consumer, without the expense of a lawyer. Today small claims courts still handle mostly business-consumer disputes, with the consumer suing for a rip-off item, faulty service or contract violation.

Another reason for the unpopularity of small claims courts might be their inaccessibility. Although designed to be simple, efficient and cheap forms of justice, 31 per cent of those surveyed had to either miss a day or work or classes for their day in court. If the plaintiff does not appear in court on the day of the trial, the case is defaulted, that is, immediately dropped. The case might also be dismissed if either the plaintiff or defendant is late for the trial.

Another problem with small claims courts, says Steve Rider of Mass PIRG, is that the $400 limit on claims is "totally ridiculous." Any claim over $400 requires that the case be heard in a higher court, and Rider sees the present limit as unrealistic today. Mass PIRG recently initiated Senate 614, a bill which would raise the claims limit from $400 to $750, but Rider said that bill, now in its third reading, "is stuck in a senate committee." Rider expressed confidence that the bill would pass this year, however.

Another bill, Senate 613, which would provide Saturday or evening sessions is alive once again after being defeated last year in the Senate. Rider expects the bill to pass this year as it has gotten the nod of approval from the Senate judiciary committee.

The findings of the Mass PIRG survey were not all problems, however.

For instance, the survey substantiated the fact that no lawyer is "needed" in small claims court. It was found that attorney involvement did not make any appreciable difference in the outcome of the case.

The survey also found that the average length of a case was 8.1 weeks, including the time it takes the plaintiff to collect after the case is decided. The plaintiff usually had to wait about 3.7 weeks to have his case heard, but this figure is not representative of all small claims courts.

According to Rider, larger municipal courts often make the parties wait one or two months before hearing the case.

Have on hand the correct legal name or title of the defendant, the exact amount you wish to sue for, and the $3.58 fee, returned at the defendant's expense if you win. Upon receiving the docket, the clerk has prepared, you receive a court date.

Know your case. Put all bills, papers, and other pertinent documents together and review your testimony. This is important because the defendant may arrive in court armed with an experienced lawyer who may cross-examine you.

Bringing along an expert witness to corroborate your testimony, such as am auto mechanic in the case of an overpriced brake job, will facilitate the outcome of your suit.

Of course, your day in court may never arrive. Often the defendant makes restitution at the mere sight of the official summons. If this occurs, notify the court of the settlement.

When your court date does arrive, get to the court early and organize your evidence. When you case is called, approach the bench ready to tell your story completely and accurately. It is recommended to abstain from drama in the courtroom. The judge is concerned only with the facts relevant to the case.

When the judge feels that he has all the necessary information to reach a decision, he either informs both parties of his decision or tells them that his decision will arrive in the mail. You should expect to spend anywhere from half an hour to three hours at the courthouse, depending on when your suit is heard. If you cannot be on time for your hearing, call the Clerk's office well before your hearing and try to arrange for your case to be heard late in the session.

If you win, the responsibility for collecting your money falls on you. The court will only assist you in collecting, it will not collect for you. In the Mass PIRG survey, 65 per cent of the plaintiffs who won their cases collected total restitution with "no problem". Supplementary action had to be taken by 29 per cent. A bill designed to aid the plaintiff in collecting his money was killed last year in the senate.

If the defendant does not pay within a reasonable time (2-3 weeks), go back to the small claims court clerk. Fill out the necessary forms, and the Clerk will tell you how to hire a sheriff or constable to help you collect. The cost of the sheriff will be added to your judgement. It, along with the initial fee, will be refunded by the defendant when you finally do collect.

If you still have trouble collecting, or if the defendant is in the armed services, ask the Clerk for help.

Table Space in the CC

by
Malerie Yolen

Table space is available in the Campus Center for any student wishing to sell hand-made or other crafts. Assignments of space will be issued according to certain priorities. The first on the list are the RSO groups and Campus Center Organizations followed by full-time students selling their personally made crafts. Third on the list are full time students providing information and non-selling services, and fourth, space goes to full time students selling goods not made by themselves.

The list goes on to No. 10, outside vendors not associated with RSO groups who must pay 75 dollars a day. A list of rules and regulations can be obtained from the Campus Center assistance desk.

Students must register for space each week to sell for two days on the following week. The first formal registration is on Sept. 9th at 9:00 a.m. on level 1 of the Campus Center. For full-time students who are selling their own hand-made creations, the cost is only a dollar for the vendor's I.D. card. For students selling other wares, the cost is 5 dollars per half day.

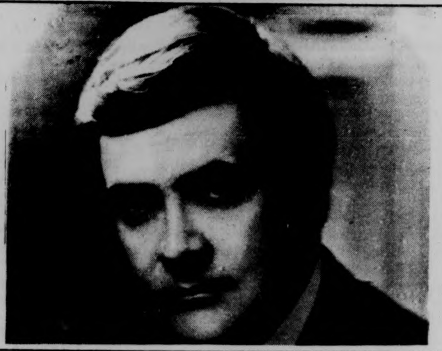
Edward A. McColgan believes the question voters of the First Congressional District must answer this fall is how they want to be represented in Washington. He believes that Silvio Conte has failed to provide the kind of legislative leadership — the vigor and the imagination — required to solve the problems of Western Massachusetts. "You don't lead from the middle," McColgan says, yet all too often that is where Silvio Conte is to be found, if indeed he is to be found at all.

As a state legislator, Ed McColgan led in addressing education, consumer, environmental and other issues, and his effectiveness is recorded in the statue books of the Commonwealth. He went the "extra mile" as a legislator. He provided the constituent services so important to citizens without immediate access to the seat of government, and he filed and fought for legislation to serve the interests of his constituents. But Ed McColgan also organized a citizen's lobby in Western Massachusetts to combat utility rate increases, and he took the state to court for approving a corporate merger that threatened the public interest.

As Executive Director of the Bicentennial Commission, Ed McColgan was responsible for a $2¼ million program of grants to communities across the state, potentially a lush "pork barrel." But he administered it without the hint of political favoritism, and indeed won applause for keeping the state's "birthday" celebration relatively free from commercialism.



Edward Michael O'Brien has no delusions that 18-year incumbent Silvio Conte will be easy to beat on November 2, 1976. But O'Brien believes that a Democrat can defeat Conte this year.

Conte, O'Brien reasons, has never been tested against another well-known political figure who has campaigned in the District before. O'Brien was elected twice to the Governor's Council, in 1970 and 1972. The 8th Councillor District which he represented largely consists of the same communities which comprise the 1st Congressional District. The statistics prove that O'Brien is a good vote-getter. In 1970, he ran far ahead of Senator Edward Kennedy in Western Massachusetts.

Besides his organization from past campaigns, O'Brien is counting on his reputation as an ethical political to be the cutting edge against an incumbent whom he has branded as "part and parcel of the Washington establishment." O'Brien was the first candidate in the race to make a complete voluntary disclosure of his own and his family's financial worth and sources of income. After releasing his eight-page disclosure statement to the press on June 19th, O'Brien challenged Conte to do the same. Conte did not respond.

The 43-year-old Easthampton attorney is also mounting a strong attack on Conte's long record of support for Nixon-Ford administration policies which "have put our area on the brink of becoming a new Appalachia" — hammering away at Conte's failure to push for full-employment legislation, a comprehensive national health insurance program, and a Federal energy policy that would help the Northeast. Ed O'Brien is clearly not the sort of Democratic opponent that Silvio Conte wants to face in November.

Veteran's Regulations Change

by
Paul Logue Jr.

Veterans, returning to campus this Fall, will find some regulation changes affecting them. Regulation 14280, a directive issued from Vet Affairs in Washington, will regulate the amount of benefits a veteran can receive outside the traditional setting of the formal classroom. Special Programs where the bulk of independent study occurs is at the center of the restrictions.

These include UYA Outreach, BDIC, and UWW. Independent study is defined by the Veteran Affairs Administration as courses which have no regularly scheduled classroom credits. Thus a Veteran must prove his-her presence in a particular classroom setting via attendance in order to remain eligible for full time benefits.

The law states, "Students who are carrying ½ of their semester credits or more as independent study will only be eligible for less than ¼ time benefits." More information can be obtained from Veteran Affairs Office 236 Whitmore.

Some Veterans question how they are going to survive on reduced benefits.

Gerry Morton, a member of the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs said the whole plan is "to eliminate us from the special programs." Morton said, "As a system tries to pull itself out of depression, its needs for traditionally educated people rises, which translates into a cutting back on special programs for women, Third World People, veterans and poor whites. Veterans have been used by institutions in the Armed Service."

Since we have the perspective of dealing with the institutions, we pose a threat to them as resisting their profit motives. If they try to mold us into the traditional educational role, we will reject it."

Tracking systems, which account for the veterans' presence in the classroom, have been instituted in other colleges. Morton cites this as "government regulation of our lives".

"We work as a community group trying to make the University work for the community hoping to upgrade the living conditions of the people," Morton explained. "These programs have the effect of building working relationships with other community groups to insure a decent living standard for the us to accept and must have our needs met in other areas, which often times is in special programs." people." Educational benefits are a matter of survival for we veterans have been granted no other compensation other than education. But we don't want the traditional education that they want

The Legal Services organization is looking into the legality of the whole situation, trying to define the law in its strict legal terms said Gordon Roberts, also of the Veterans Coalition. "This is really going to affect a lot of guys who have no idea that the directive has evern occurred as will come back in September to find themselves back out in the cold."

Veterans Affairs spokesperson, Stephanie Bourbonnais said the directive has been on the books since 1974 but that the Veterans administration in Washington has just chosen to enforce it now.

Women's Studies

Interested in the role of women in the paid labor force? Want to know more about psychological perspectives on the role of women in American society? Curious about women's history as midwife and healer? If so, come by the Women's Studies Office, 508 Goodell, and look through our catalog of fall courses.

The Women's Studies Program offers a wide variety of courses in many departments and field work in the community to interested students. Now in its fifth semester, the Program offers a major and a certificate minor in Women's Studies. The Program attempts to inform and develop awareness of the roles, contributions and existence of women in all fields of inquiry. Previously unnoticed or, at best, underemphasized within the context of traditional academic disciplines, current research on women is developing new theories and revising existing ones, in order to explain and conceptulize more adequately a wide range of subjects.

The Program provides an opportunity for students to formulate an individually designed plan of study in consultation with a faculty sponsor, which may include courses offered at the University and in the Five Colleges, independent study, and field work on campus and in the community.

A program in Women's Studies may be approached in either of two ways:

1. You may earn a Certificate, equivalent to a minor concentration, in addition to a major. (24 Women's Studies credits)
2. You may develop an individualized major in Women's Studies. (42 Women's Studies credits)

Next semester courses include: ComLit 101F Autobiography: Literature of the Self; Econ 192A Women in the Economy; Engl 391C Lost Fiction of American Women; Hist 384B-710U Comparative British and American Women's History: 1750-1914; PolSci 371 Feminist Politics; Soc 242-542 Sociology of Parenthood; Eng 287A Woman as Hero. A complete catalog description of all Women's Studies courses in the area is available in 508 Goodell.

For more information on the Women's Studies Program, drop by the office in 508 Goodell, or call 545-1922.

Global Survival

If you are looking for a different kind of academic experience at the University this fall, the Global Survival Studies Program is something to consider. The program features small classes, close contact with faculty, and a broad examination of come crucial issues of the present and future.

The program is interdisciplinary and focuses on five major areas of concern: war, peace and alternative systems of world order, population growth and control, environmental deterioration and economic development; availability and distribution of world resources and cross-cultural communication and conflict resolution. Although these are separate topics in themselves, the courses and seminars are structured to help students make connections between the various parts of the program.

An important part of the program is the integration of concepts and information that takes place over the course of the year. Students study such areas as the history of technology, views of nature, population policy, an introduction to the future, nuclear energy, values and the individual, and culture change. There are a combination of seminars, lectures, and modules taught by faculty drawn from throughout the University.

One question which many students who are interested in the Program ask, is whether being in the program will help them toward a major. Steve Guild, Director of the Program, feels that the Global Survival Studies is broad enough to relate to almost any field or major offered here at the University. In fact, he said, "many students have found that they have a much better idea of what they want to do or what areas they want to study after being in Global Survival. Many of the areas we cover are related to jobs that will be important in the future. Students who are in the program have more contact with these than in regular University courses." The Program also offers the opportunity for some practical experience working with organizations or groups involved in related issues.

Those who are interested in learning more about the Program should contact the Global Survival office in Cance House, Southwest. The phone number is 545-3100.

Attention Seniors

(Class of 1977)

Letters are being sent out to the home addresses of all seniors (Class of 1977) whose majors are in the College of Arts & Sciences concerning remaining deficiencies in their college requirements. If you have not received your letter please come into CASIAC to check with Mrs. Ellen Snyder (E-22 Machmer).

The following Judaic Studies courses, not previously listed, will be offered during the fall semester. Elementary Biblical Hebrew (Hebrew 110A, schedule no. 430629) will be taught by Assistant Professor Judith Baskin. The course will meet Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 10:10 a.m. in Herter 119.

Professor Baskin, a newly appointed member of the Classics Department, will also be teaching Judaic Studies 200, Bible and Archaeology (528024, TuTh 2:20-3:45 in Machmer E-35) and Judaic Studies 100, The Jewish People.

In addition nine courses to be offered by the UMass Hillel Foundation are available (for one credit each) as Judaic Studies 385A-I. Information concerning these courses can be obtained from the Hillel Office in the Student Union and from members of the Judaic Studies Committee.

Slavic Studies

The Department of Slavic Languages and Literatures announces that the following courses, not previously listed, will be offered during the fall semester. Professor Laszlo Tikos will offer a Special Problems course, open to undergraduate and graduate students, on Tolstoy and Solzhenitsyn (Russian 385-700, time to be arranged, possibly in the evening). Discussion will center on contemporary social problems of the Soviet Union, with particular regard to the way in which these two writers view such problems. The schedule numbers are 592227 for Russian 385 and 593540 for Russian 700.

Professor Tikos will also teach a course on Tolstoy (Russian 254-554, schedule numbers 769890-711774), which will meet MWF at 2:30 in Herter 444, and Russian 255, Masterpieces of Russian Literature in Translation, which was to be taught by Professor George Ivask. Professor Ivask will instead offer a course in 19th and 20th century Russian poetry (conducted in Russian): Russian 258-558 (schedule numbers 769971-771805), time and location to be announced.

Interns Wanted

Everywoman's Center is seeking two interns for the fall semester. The interns, who should be willing to work 15 to 20 hours per week (5 to 7 undergraduate credits), will be working with the Public Relations and Publications workgroup and share responsibility for the bimonthly newsletter and general Everywoman's Center publicity. The interns will work collectively with the other women in the workgroup writing, researching and reporting on issues of concern to local women and editing, laying out and mailing out the newsletter. They will also help to update and maintain the Center's press contacts, and to assist in writing feature articles on the Center for community and campus media.

Students interested in applying should be committed to feminists principles and interested in exploring the concept of women's news and local women's publications in relation to the local women's community and in relation to other struggles for social change. Students majoring or interested in journalism, mass communications or women's studies are urged to apply; but all applications are welcomed.

Interested students should contact the Publications and Public Relations Workgroup, Buffy or Cheryl at Everywoman's Center, Goodell Hall or 545-0883 as soon as possible.

WMUA looks for elbow room

CONTROL BOARD

Seated at the control board, with hand poised to start the turntable which will be sent through the transmitter, is Brian Boucher, chief operator from New Bedford. Standing ready to assist is Peregrine B. White of Amherst.

SPORTSCASTERS

Preparing for a sports roundup in the WMUA studio are Norman Marcus of Worcester, chief sports announcer, and Joseph Lenon, of Malden, station manager.

April 10 1957

UMass Radio Station WMUA To Hold Open House Saturday

Prof. Anthony Zaitz, faculty advisor for WMUA, with student Bob Aldrich at the control panel discuss the announcer's script before going on the air.

WMUA has graced the airwaves of the Amherst area for well over 25 years. The origins of the FM station go back to 1948 when an industrious group of university students decided that UMass was in need of a student run radio station. It started out as a highly experimental operation broadcasting from South College. During the past quarter century, the station has grown both physically and powerwise. Into its twenty-eighth year of broadcasting, talk is now circulating about the need for moving WMUA.

Staff members are constantly grumbling about the lack of workspace at the station. Program Director Leo T. Baldwin sees space as WMUA's major problem. "We've got so many people who want to work at WMUA but we just don't have the facilities to accommodate all the people who come down here," he said.

"We have only one production studio and it's hard to allocate all the studio time needed by people to produce shows, cut spots and practice." Baldwin sees only one solution to the problem and that is to "implement some sort of time restrictions on studio usage."

When WMUA moved to Marston Hall back in 1956, the studios were more than adequate. For the first time in the history of the station, personnel had ample workspace, comfortable surroundings and plenty of storage space. New equipment purchases conveyed the image of a modern, professional station. Twenty years later, WMUA remains in the engineering building and the polish and shine of new facilities have long since vanished. Many interior renovations and space reallocations have occurred in an attempt to make better use of existing space.

This past summer the music library was remodeled. Extra shelves were added to accommodate the scores of records that arrive weekly. Station personnel went through all the records one by one to remove lesser played records so that new ones could take their place. Many 45's were tossed out to make room for more albums. Only rare and irreplaceable singles were saved.

The situation with WMUA's record library is indicative of the overall state of WMUA. Too much going on in too small a space. The technical department takes up one of the station's smaller rooms. Assistant chief engineer Louie Cronin describes her space situation as "anti-productive". "I've got no space to work in there. The benches are covered up with test-equipment. The shelves are full and there's just no place to put manuals and other things we need to work with," she explained.

The station management is organizing once again to try to move WMUA. Several attempts have occurred over the past few years, all meeting with failure. Station personnel agree that if WMUA succeeds in the latest attempts to move, it will be the station's last and final move.

No-one is quite sure how funding and space will be arranged. Business Manager Priscilla West does have some ideas, however, about a timetable for the move. "I'd like to be out of Marston by September of '77. This would give us the summer to set up studios and office space," she said.

"The need to move is critical to the station's future. I just hope we're more successful this time than in previous attempts."

'76 Is An ELECTION Year

by
Jon Hite

If the coronation in New York and the combat in Kansas City hasn't turned you off to politics, then there's plenty that you can do to get involved in Amherst. Whether it be by working on campus for a local candidate, joining one of the town committees, or by running for town meeting, if you like politics, you've come to the right place.

Amherst, like no other town in the state, has a great interest in politics. The fact that it is a highly academic town, with many of its residents in some type of liaison with one of the colleges, and that political control has shifted in the last ten years from the Republican to Democratic Party, has held a great interest in the elections. It has also involved more and more people in the political system.

The town has a Democratic Committee and a Republican Committee whose members are elected in the Presidential Primary election. Each committee has associate members who have all the voting rights of a regular member and whose participation is greatly coveted by the committees. Being part of the Town Committee process can be as educational as it is fun.

The Amherst Democratic Town Committee is chaired by Jerry Mileur, a political science professor at UMass. Mileur, who is known for his propensity for puns has been instrumental in the publishing of a monthly newsletter The Amherst Democrat, which provides information about local causes, candidates, and events. The main function of the Committee is to endorse and give aid to candidates and causes of the Democratic Party.

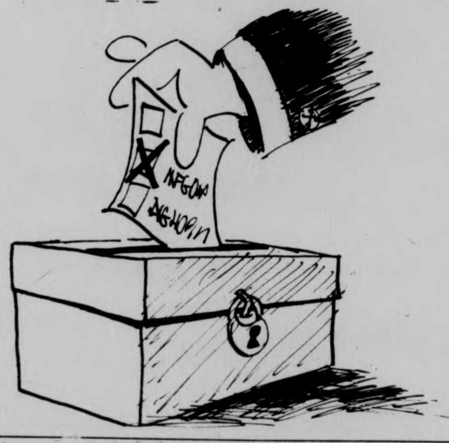
The Democrats will be holding their annual barbeque on September 12th in Hadley. For the $5 that a ticket costs, one can geta good meal, see the World Series of Hampshire County Softball, and meet the political "heavies" of the area. The barbeque is probably the best place to go if you want to spend a nice afternoon meeting new people. Tickets are available by calling Peter Ward at 549-0567.

The Republican Town Committee serves basically the same purpose as the Democrat's. Their chairperson is Nat Reed, a professor of political science at Amherst College. The Republicans are also holding their annual picnic on the same day, September 12th, in Pelham. Tickets for that event can be purchased by calling Reed at Amherst College.

UMass has a Young Republican Club and a College Democrat's Club who are most active during election years. Usually these groups provide volunteers who help with canvassing, telephoning, and poll watching. Last year these groups were instrumental in bringing almost every presidential candidate to campus. They also provide guest appearances by local officials who provide some insight to what's happened in the area and in the state. If you're interested in joining one of these groups, keep watching the "notices" section of the Collegian.

One of the other major areas of participation for students is the Amherst Town Meeting. This traditional form of New England Town government, is made up of 240 citizens elected each Spring who meet and pass the Town's budget as well as other major Town policies. Students have been involved in proposing a rent control article, as well as articles calling for the impeachment of Richard Nixon and the stopping of the production of the B-1 Bomber.

A Look at the Candidates



by
Jon Hite

The state primary election will be held on September 14th. Here is a guide to those candidates running in Amherst:

United States Senate:
Running for his third full term, Ted Kennedy faces a plethora of "anti" candidates. Boston City Councillor Fred Langone is preparing his campaign organization for a possible run for mayor in 1979 by running an anti-bussing campaign. Robert Dinsmore, a Milton lawyer who is running for his first public office is seeking the support of the anti-Kennedy forces in the state. Stoughton attorney Bernie Shannon is running a low-key campaign based on Kennedy's liberal record.

The Republican candidate, Mike Robertson of Berkley, is running unopposed.

United States Congress:
Incumbent Silvio Conte (R-Pittsfield) will face his stiffest opposition in 18 years, once the Democrats finish their battle for the nomination. Conte is beatable if the Democrats can avoid a primary where both candidates kill each other off getting the nomination.

Ed McColgan, a former history professor, state representative and director of the state Bicentennial, is running against lawyer Ed O'Brien. O'Brien is a former governor's councillor, county commissioner and candidate for attorney general.

McColgan seems to be the more liberal of the two, but O'Brien is matching that with a highly efficient organization. It should be a very close race.

(More in-depth profiles of McColgan and O'Brien can be found elsewhere in this Collegian issue.)

Note that the two candidates differ widely on the issue of legalized abortion. McColgan, although "morally not in favor" of abortion does consider it to be "every woman's personal choice" and supports the Supreme Court decision.

O'Brien, on the other hand, is a supporter of the Right to Life Movement and is not in favor of the Supreme Court decision. He is a strong advocate of birth control education.

State Senator:
Jim Collins (D-Amherst) has a free ride.

Registrar of Deeds:
In by far the strangest race, popular incumbent Bob Czelusniak of Northampton faces reform candidate George Scheurer of Amherst.

Czelusniak, who runs the most cost efficient registry in the state, made a statement last year that he only had to spend 10 hours a week at his $17,000 a year job. Scheurer, who is on the Amherst Housing Authority has picked upon this and claims that he will make the job fit the pay.

There is no Republican candidate running for this position.

County Commissioners:
With three people running for two seats the candidates are attempting to get their friends to bullet vote and their acquaintances to just vote. Amherst selectman Bob Garvey is running the hardest for the job, ringing doorbells all over the county. Paul Dineen is running for his second term to this job, and Ted Boruchowski is relying upon his contacts in the Deputy's Association to make the difference for him.

The Republicans have no one running for this position.

Passing the Bar

(A Guide to Area Watering Holes)

by Craig Roche

Welcome to Amherst. If you are here from the eastern half of the state for the first time, it is likely to be an astounding experience for you to realize that this school, good ol' State is the behemoth that is truly is. Close your eyes and try to picture the quaint little community of Amherst circa 1956 when the town population was much smaller and the University was Mass Aggie. Picture postcard perfect until you and I (collectively known as the Post-war Baby Boom) grow to young adult age and, like all good Andy and Andrea Hardys, go to college. To Amherst, of all places.

Concommitant with the mushroom-like growth of the University came those enterprises that alternately thrive or feed upon the assumed needs of this peer group, the stereotypical college student. Because this is also the Five College Area, we are lucky that we can choose among several stereotypes and pick one that fits us at least as well as the clothes that mother bought for us at Mrs. B's before we got here.

Now that you're here, you will soon want to flee the confines of your dorm-apartment room and seek solace in a darkly lit friendly bar. Here follows a personal and biased view of most of the bars and clubs to be found or avoided in this area. Remember this is personal so take the following with at least a grain of salt. Bring enough salt and we'll make Margaritas.

On this journey we'll start at the heart (some would say the bowels) of the UMass club scene, the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center.

Whoever Murray D may have been, I wonder how he'd take to the establishments within the waffle walls of his building. Ground level houses one and a half bars, the famous Blue Wall and the Hatch. Now I want to say right here that I have been a bartender in those bars for 3¼ years and know the place from both sides of the bar. It is not the classiest place in the Valley, but no other club I know handles a steady stream of around 1500 customers daily. It can be a great place to party. Regardless of what caricature of the bouncers may be drawn, they do let people play it a good deal more loosely than off-campus clubs.

Last year featured a dull disco format but I have the word that there'll be more live bands and good music than last year. There has to be; they'd have to treble my pay to get me in that place and hear another cliched disco set. It is home of the fabled Powerhouse, also known as Amherst's answer to biological warfare.

It is a spot where many people learn to drink, so you have a requisite number of horrorshows per semester. But because it somehow personifies a lot of UMass, you might well find yourself there on your last day at the University with a group of friends and realize how much fun you've had there.

The drinks are as cheap as anyplace in the Valley, and I know you get a better than average amount of liquor in the drink. It is supposedly the biggest seller of beer in the Northeast, but the consumption seems down from my first days there when a good thirsty crowd would finish off 30 to 40 kegs of beer in an evening.

It is altogether probable that you will tire of the Wall and the crowds, so the first place to head is 11 floors straight up to the Top of the Campus. Like the Blue Wall, the person at the door will want to see your TOC card proving that you are a student and are of age. It is a hassle until you understand that the liquor license is a club one, and we all must be members to have the access.

The TOC is blessed with one of the few attractive views of this school. You can while away hours just observing people strolling over the campus. Drinks cost a bit more, but you get table service and respite from crowds. After 9 p.m. the restaurant becomes a room for music, and the bands and performers who play there are quality acts all the time.

Opening this semester at the newly renovated TOC (I refuse to say anything about the renovations..if you can't say anything good...) will be a band familiar to many, Walker. After them will come Wall Street and the Splendaids, both from Boston and new to the area, and the Joyride Express, who will be returning here.

The Hatch is the third bar on the campus, and suffers a great deal in atmosphere as it is a cafeteria by day and tries to be a club Thursday thru Saturday nights. Because the room is so huge it can accommodate bands that draw big crowds, and Sept. will see two big drawing acts, Duke and the Drivers, making their second appearance here, and local favorites, Big Screamin' McGrew, a group that just keeps on getting better and better. The cover is minimal here, usually $.50 on Thursday night and $1.00 on the weekends. With talk of bigger, recording bands to play the Hatch this fall, you can expect that price tt rise a bit, but the entertainment should rise accordingly. A few band to have played there last years were outstanding, namely Forest, the Ellis Hall Group, and Cricket Hill with Helen Schneider (currently making lots of good music in New York City) all of whom I hope will be returning.

Before leaving the campus I'd like to add a little bit of information as to the source of the club's names. Pay attention because you will be tested on this later. The Blue Wall has nothing to do with the color fo the tiles, floor, or rug. Its name came from the period when it first opened, back when the Massachusetts drinking age was a firm 21. At that time the club was open to all students, but only those over 21 could get to the dance floor. Cutting the room roughly in half was a three-foot tall plywood wall painted blue. At the one gap in this wall stood a bouncer who carded patrons at that point. Liquor and beer were only sold on the inner two-thirds of the bar as it now is. And it was that blue barricade that was the Blue Wall.

The Hatch has nothing at all to do with egg shells as its logo would lead you to think. It has been the Hatch to UMass students since the Student Union was built and will remain so as long as Metawampee keeps watch over it. Painted on the glass facing the crafts shop is an Indian emblem and the words Pipe and Hatchet, the official name of the room. This was back when the athletic teams were the Redmen, not the Minutemen as they are now. And part of that Indian theme carried over to the cafeteria, the Hatch. You can keep your silly eggshell logo, I'll take the hatchet (and pass the pipe).

Leaving the campus with not even a look back over the shoulder, there are still a few bars that have deep roots in the college community. UMaas students have enjoyed Mike's, out in North Amherst. Go through the lights and bear left immediately. It's down the road two tenths of a mile on your right. I think the bar has been under new management recently and seems to be making a conscious effort to become less the collegiate hangout it once was. Time was students would rush from the game to Mike's and stay to closing. If it is not so these days, that isn't because the students weren't good to the place.

Traveling straight into town, you'll find a number of spots to check out. Closest to campus and to many people's hearts, is The Pub. Worth checking out for the food alone, it also caters to a part of the student crowd. Happy hours here are the best time, outside of that you can buy a Pub Mug and drink cheaply each time you bring it. Most often the music is not live, but he disc jockey is professional. Mandatory performances by Doc Sullivan and the Pretenders are a part of the Pub Experience.

Out of the Carriage Shops and back onto North Pleasant St. are three bars, almost in a row. Moe's, the newest, then Barselotti's and the Rustic Roost. Moe's was once the Quicksilver, a dark, small hole in the wall of a place. Completely renovated, Moe's was a great secret that is secret no longer. This is the place to hit when the munchies strike as they feature a taco and burrito on the menu, along with burgers and spicy hot dogs. There is no night life there, but the bar is among the best stocked in town, and on Sundays they purchase newspapers and place them on tables for your perusal as you drink coffee and eat your Danish. They make one feel comfortable.

The Roost and Barsie's are similar; they are town bars with their regular patrons. They are integral elements in the center of Amherst, like Augie's Smoke Shop. And no look at the center of town could be complete without a mention of the Village Inn, known widely as the Drake.

The top floors of the building on Amity St. are a residential hotel, the ground floor a dining and drinking area, and the underground, a rathskellar. The Drake has both virtues and vices; I'll touch upon the virtues here and leave it to you to discover most of the vices.

At one time the first floor bar had a list of available beers that would choke an Irishman. A few have been dropped from the list, but they still have many, many bottled beers available. The variety is such that, along with the roaring fireplaces that see much use during the winter, the room quickly becomes comfortable and inviting. Some of the people you undoubtedly will encounter might be less so (like the fellow with tattooes all over talking of the people he'd offed). The food is terrible, but consistently so. It's no place for a real meal, maybe a snack upon leaving the Amherst Cinema, but no one goes there to eat a real meal. Not twice, anyway.

Downstairs is the real heart of the Drake. The rathskellar has a lot in common with the Cavern in Liverpool and the catacombs of Rome. Here the large partion of bodies are still alive. It hasn't been proven if the Piels Big Mouths help or hurt them, however. Beer and talk are cheap here, and the pinball machines, when you can get them, are good ones. All in all, the Drake is the most likely candidate for the type of place your parents told you to stay away from, which accounts for at least some of its popularity with the students.

The Lord Jeff, off the common, has a tasteful bar at the rear. Go in the door at the south, front facing end of the building, and follow it all the way back. The bar is more of a businessman's place than a student's, but the bartender knows how to make an outstanding manhattan. The seats at the rear overlook a manicured garden below, lending an air that the aristocratic Lord Jeff himself would approve of.

Any Way You Want It

Local Gourmand Spills All

by Craig Roche

Flee the dc! I don't have to tell you that, your stomach will soon enough. Lucky you, there's many a place out here in the Valley to exicte a listless palate. And since we see that your palate lacks a list, here follows one to help you eat your way through another semester at the University.

I just read a filler in a paper saying that Americans will consume a million tons of pizza this year, so let's start there and get you working on your fair share of the pasta. Pizza places abound and since pizza is so subjective a topic, it might be wise just to hit the high sports and move on quickly.

A financial demograph of the area parlors would be, dare I say, food for thought. Not having one, I'd say just from personal experience that the biggest pizza pusher in the area would be Bell's on University Drive. Having both location and selection over most, Bell's sells tasty subs, too. Superior Pizzaria in the North Amherst mini-mall has made quite a few tasty pizzas for me. If it's new to you, it's worth checking out. Eric's Giant Subs, 314 College St. is another soft spot of mine. A quick count of pizza parlors in the Yellow Pages (there are so many, they are listed under 'Pizza') yields 28. There can be no one place that has all this business, and it is only fair to have a large number of pizza makers around to make this million tons of pizza.

There are a suprisingly small number of Italian restaurants in this area. There's the Aqua Vitae in Hadley and Roberto's in Northampton, both run by the same people. The bill of fare there is uninteresting. I've never had good service or outstanding food at either, and I've tried about six times. The sauces lack an original taste, their lasagna is terribly mild and meatless enough for any vegetarian. I tried Carlos of Naples in Northampton but they've been closed for the month of August. Run by a former UMass student, Carlos offers a more unique Italian dining experience to the diner. This would get the four stars quickly, given its lack of real competition.

Those desirous of Chinese food are in a much better situation. Amherst's oldest Chinese restaurant is the Kim Toy between Amherst Savings Bank and the Amherst Cinema. A take-out only, they serve delicious meals. Grab an egg roll, get over to the Drake and wash them down with a Kirn beer.

South China on Belchertown Rd. (Route 9) has a good and varied bill of fare. The meals I've had there have been fine, but the drinks a bit of a disappointment. Drinking and dining are two separate pastimes, however, so I don't hold that against them. I've never been dissatisfied with a meal of theirs.

I have no excuse for missing a meal at either of the two Wok restaurants in the area. Friends speak highly of both Wok I (Rt. 9 Hadley) and Wok II (King St., Northampton) so they are on my hit list for the coming semester.

Standard bill of fare, the menu with a wide variety of choices, can be found in a number of fine eating establishments for lunch and dinner.

Perhaps my favorite lunch spot is the Pub. An ever-changing lunchtime menu is always interesting and filling. Order off of either the menu or the blackboard above the grill. The Pub does a big lunchtime business so it will be crowded, but your food should still be carefully prepared. It's care such as this that makes the Pub popular for downtown Amherst people's lunches.

The best bargain at lunchtime can be had by travelling out to the Go-Ten Restaurant in Sunderland (right off 116). You get almost the same meal that is served at supper for a lot less, plus the show put on by the Japanese cook at your table. Go-Ten is the perfect spot for a large group of diners, since you can all sit at the same table and duck flying shrimp the cook has flipped to you.

Another big lunch spot is the Chequers Restaurant (University Dr.) Chequers is more intimate than either Go-Ten or the Pub, and certainly more sedate. This is the place to have a lingering luncheon, if you can afford the time.

Then there are the places to which you bring your parents, The Lord Jeff in Amherst center is certainly one such spot. The Wiggins Tavern in Hotel Northampton is, Beardsley's Cafe is too, if you relish French cuisine. Also on the list, especially if the parents are paying, would be the Phases Restaurant in Bernardstown. All three are also good for expensive dates, if college students do that anymore.

Probably the most important dining places to the college student are those offering less undigestible atmosphere but more affordable good food.

In Amherst center there are many. The Equinox, newly moved in to larger quarters, features vegetarian foods acceptable to almost anyone. There are both Gaslights, I & II, for good hamburger specials. I wish they'd get a french frier, though. The chips are a poor substitute.

Over in Northampton is the St. Regis, probably the champion of this genre. The food tastes homemade, the meat pie quite a meal, and their breakfasts phenomenal. There's no way you should miss a visit to the Regis. Also in town out on Rt. 5 going north is the Blue Bell Diner. The fare here is basic American eating, but quality, quantity and value are part of the meal.

More famous than either, almost legendary in fact, is the Miss Florence Diner on Main St. in Florence. Maybe it is a sign of the times, how hard it must be to run a place like a diner, but its reputation is more than they deliver. Prices keep inching up, it is no longer inexpensive, and service was never their hallmark. Still we're dealing with a legend and they die hard.

Seafood, fresh seafood, is available in the area in a number of ways. The Lighthouse, just out of North Amherst center on 116, does it relatively inexpensively. You can pick out a lobster, and dine over paper tablecloths. There is no liquor served, but you bring your own. The Rusty Scupper on Rt 9 in South Amherst is known for its Alaskan King Crab Legs, but includes a wide variety on a small menu. The menu itself, cute the first time, is a bit of a nuisance very quickly. Ample portions and reasonable costs here make the Scupper one of the area's best buys in dining.

That's it for a walking tour of the bars. If you were still able to walk at all, you'd be sober enough to realize that you need a car to get any further. And you'd be too high for that so saving the following for another day, one well after the hangover...

The Steak Out on Rt. 9 on the million dollar mile has a tasty little club in its cellar. The Chicago crime era motif of the establishment logically leads to it being called the Speak Easy Lounge. Here some of the area's finer bands are featured most every night of the week. This is one of the better places to catch a band that particularly interests you because the place is small enough to allow everyone a good view. There is often a cover of $2.00-$3.00 at the door to the Lounge, down the stairs. The best seats are at the bar.

I harbor no ill, but equally no good feelings about the biggest disco in the community, Poor Richard's, located on Route 9 going east toward Belchertown behind the South China Sea Restaurant. I find it rather like the Blue Wall, and no more inviting. It is quite a popular place, there's never a cover, and always a crowd. But it's not a drinking place, nor is it a musician's spot either. Playing it safe, I guess I don't care for the place because I've never been somewhere and wished I were at Richard's.

If disco is where you want to be, there is only one place for you, Rachid's in the Mountain Farms Mall. The clientele are affluent, spend a lot on the right clothes and know the new dances. It must be an unwritten rule that discos have small dance floors, Rachid's is no exception. What truly sets them apart is the excellent sound system. The music is loud but never distorted, and the lights are dazzling. A mirror running along the walls gives the small place a deceptive feeling of space, and reflects the lights. Stecp cover charge here.

This area has been home to some notable musicians, teh likes of NRBQ and Clean Living, Taj Mahal,and Natalie Cole all living and working here. Happily for those of us who perfer live music, there are a pair of clubs that keep the music scene alive and vital, the Rusty Nail on Rt. 47 in Sunderland, and the Lazy River on Rt. 5 in Northampton.

The Nail deserves first mention because it has just been renovated. Those who knew it will love it more, those discovering it for the first time will fit right in, too. The space devoted to music and crowds has been doubled, maybe tripled. There is a permanent stage and more seating, a dance floor, and a new bar right on the floor. The whole area is in attractive, unfinished wood that looks good and not flashy, an organic part of the comfortable atmosphere at the Nail.

Besides featuring the many good local bands, the N Nail regularly has recording acts such as Tom Rush, Tracy Nelson & Mother Earth, Doc & Merle Watson, and just recently, Roger McGuinn. There is a reasonable cover, drinks are average price, and a games area at the right of the entrance. Good spot.

The Lazy River is the only valley club making an effort to bring jazz acts out of the shadows and into a paying proposition. It's a kind of Jazz Workshop west, without the minimum. Tuesday thru Thursday there's generally a lower admission price for the bargain hunters like myself. You may not know the act they are billing, but you can bet it's a good one.

While in Northampton there are some other places to discover. Undoubtedly the hippest place is Fitzwilly's, right under the railroad overpass on Main St. Everyone in town seems to like the place, rightly so. They serve good, interesting food. Last time there I had asparagus with ham and turkey rolled around it. Needless to say you're not about to find that at a Dining Commons. The place is decorated in what one is tempted to call trendy chic, but it's hard to be put off by it. As I said, almost everyone in the city stops there. You will too. No entertainment, it's too small, but the sound system at Fitzwilly's generally has good music on it.

Another obligatory stop in town is Sheehan's Cafe. On Rt. 5, next to the St. Regis restaurant and across from the Globe movie theater, Sheehan's is one of a kind. For a time there last year it looked as if the owner of the building which Sheehan's is in was forcing them out, but hopefully it's there to stay another 100 years. All that's lacking are a group of mustachioed men in derbies at the bar. You can drink in the history of the place as you sip your beer. (Another plus, the Globe ticket stubs are good for one small beer, free.)

Zelda's-Zelda Bloomdido has been sold and is in the process of being remodeled so we'll all have to discover what it will become.

There are so many more places to explore. I haven't even touched upon the Dial-Tone in Hatfield, the Bernardstown Inn, South Deerfield's Bloody Brook, or the Red Pantry in Belchertown. There are some debuting and folding all the time in this war of bids to get us in the clubs. You'll find one, perhaps a few, where you can have some great times. Maybe the Van Horn in Springfield, or Equi's in Turners Falls will do it. Each and every place can be an adventure. Remember to tip your bartender.

Jack August's in Northampton falls somewhere in between the two prior places. It's not as cheap as the Lighthouse and overpriced for it's menial atmosphere. The fish is fresh at Jack's though, and that is of primary importance to any seafood lover.

The meal I find I am most picky about is far and away a breakfast. And although McManus', the Stables, and the Rooster all serve other meals, they are known for their breakfasts. A trip to McManus' in the Zayre Mall in Hadley is inevitable. After an exam, a night out drinking, dancing, partying, or just when you feel the need, you will end up there. Open 24 hours, the Jas McManus Eatin' Place offers you fast service when you need it the most. It is painfully bright in the place; late at night that means everyone's red eyes take a beating. Sometimes I cannot make myself go in knowing just how bright it will be. But the prices are fair, the cups of coffee are bottomless, and the home fries the best. The best.

The Stables was also open all 24, but has been closing late at night this summer. Here's hoping they'll again remain open in the school year, for McManus' alone can't handle the many people out for breakfast. The food is about the same (with the exception of the home fries) and the lighting much better. Somehow it's never been the same since they let us wait a half hour, before telling us their dishwasher had broken down and they could serve no more. If your stomach is up for it (I belive that's a mixed metaphor) the chili is also great.

Newest breakfast spot in town is the Rooster in North Amherst. Before this it was the Northern Grill. Opening at 5 a.m. closing at 2 p.m., the Rooster has been featuring an unbeatable August special of 3 large eggs, bacon, toast, and coffee for an amazing $1.35. So cheap I'd almost think Ruby and Choo-Choo Vine were backing it. Home fries (again not as good, not as plentiful) are available on the special also. If they continue this into September when the students return, reservations might be in order.

So there you have it, a start on the calorie trail. I hope that I've given you a few ideas, my appetite has been increasing as the article has been written, and now I'm ending to eat.

Keeping it up all night long

by
E. Patrick McQuaid

If late night booking isn't your style, and the only packie in Amherst open after 10 (Pete's on Summer St., incidentally) is closed, and the only party on campus is strictly black tie you still needn't panic. Depending on how far you want to travel, there's plenty of action in the area long after the moon has risen and the books are shelved.

The local twenty-four hour hot spot is the 7-11 market located on Rte. 116 in Sunderland. I mention it first because it is the only all night all day all purpose store near campus to my knowledge; I've never had cause to stop there during daylight hours but I trust the prices remain the same after dark. The store is amply stocked with groceries and beverages as well as newspapers, magazines, paperbacks, and household-dormhold items that you tend to run out of often enough. Even if you're only here to have fun you'll find that nighttime is sometimes the only change that you'll have to attend to any domestic problems: needle and thread to mend a torn letter-sweater, or crayons for that special cover you're planning for that term paper that was due last week. After PM, 7-11 is where you'll find it.

You can grab a quick radar zapped pizza or burger there also, but if you're in the mood for a real culinary treat, you'll have to make the James H. McManus Eating Placea regular stop. You'll find it in the Zayre-Stop & Shop mall at 410 Northampton St. (Rte. 9).

McManus' is one of those fast-paced all night college breakfast trips that you generally have no recollection of the next morning-afternoon, depending on how many classes you sleep through. They have a fine breakfast menu, and in most cases a sample of each item can be found somewhere either on the menu itself or the countertop.

Of course you can revel in other tasty delights other than breakfast. One such item that goes highly recommended by my sources is the New Englander; sliced ham, turkey, bacon, cheddar cheese, lettuce and tomato — $1.30. Breakfasts range from the 99 cent special to the $2.50 steak 'n' eggs et all (homefries, juice, toast, coffee). Also available is a wide selection of ice cream (40 and 55 cent cones).

Closer to home is theGaslight II coffee shop on downtown North Pleasant St. (across from the Post Office). "Breakfast served anytime" reads their sandwich board outfront. The Gaslight II is opened until 3 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights and closes at 11 on weeknights. They open every morning at 6:30, 7 days a week.

The Gaslight II crowd tends to be a bit more civil. Remember that UMass is not isolated out here in the sticks. The Amherst College crowd and the townies usually populate the place both day and night. It sometimes gets overcrowded but is generally a relaxed atmosphere. You can get some serious breakfasting and even some reading done here.

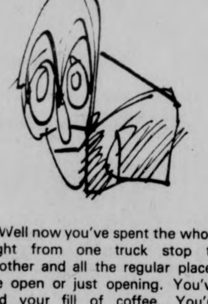
Along with a fine breakfast selection the Gaslight II offers all the standards plus a special dieter's plate; beef, peach-half, lettuce, tomato, cheese, and rye (bread) — $1.35, 10 cents extra to go. They also have some great ice cream flavors like "strawberry cheese cake", "peanut butter fudge", and a gigantic cup of coffee that will last you long after you've walked back to campus.

Up Rte. 9, after it's become Russell St., Hadley, across from the Mountain Farms Mall is the Stables They carry much the same menu as McManus', are open 24 hours, but is a smaller, much more quieter restaurant. Like the Gaslight II they serve breakfast all day and carry specialties such as lobster roll ($1.45), Reuben sandwich ($1.95), and a fantastic Indian Pudding that can't be passed up.

The best known of the breakfast stops in the area among the nostalgia crowd (2nd semster freshmen, sophomores, etc.) is the Miss Florence Diner 99 Main St., Florence (that's still another further extension of the reknowned Rte 9.). The breakfast selection alone is enormous and the diner offers complete meals as well. There's something about Miss Flo's that can't be put on paper very easily. It has a unique atmosphere. It's part of the sunrise, the early morning in New England and all that. I generally don't get very poetic over 2 eggs sunny-side-up, but most people have found Miss Flo's to be an enjoyable experience. There is seldom much of a campus crowd; there's hardly ever a crowd at all for that matter. It's located in the very center of a small New England town that was once part of Northampton.

Across the street is a newspaper stand that opens early. You can grab the first morning headlines before the rest of the world has even considered rising. The staff's always open for a friendly word or conversation, and there's a morning paper waiting for you at your table that you can pass along to the next customer.

In your nocturnal travels you may find that your vehicle is also in need of a midnight snack. Amherst Towing offers road service and towing on a 24 hour basis. They are usually supplied with extra gas and can be reached at 549-0828 if you run out or break down. The Plaza Shell station on Rte. 9 west advertises as being open 24 hours, however everytime I've rolled in riding on "E" I have found this not to be the case. You're best bet is to fuel up before setting out.



Well now you've spent the whole night from one truck stop to another and all the regular places are open or just opening. You've had your fill of coffee. You're shivering, you're blurry-eyed.

Barselloti's opens at 8 a.m. N. Pleasant St., center of town, just up from the Gaslight II. On Saturday mornings you might find the night crew from McManus' there shooting brandies and pool. It's been a long night.

Stalking the silver screen

by Craig Roach

The long-standing love affair that Americans have had with the silver screen is very evident in the Five College area. The Amherst-Northampton area supports an even dozen theaters, when you have tired of those, by ranging a bit farther you can find Showcase Cinemas in Springfield, which shows six different films a night, or slip into Greenfield to catch a movie in the Garden Theater, one of the East's few surviving old-timey theaters. The film addict is sure to score in this area.

The big news to filmgoers over the summer here in Amherst was the purchase of the Campus Cinemas by the company that owns Boston's reknown Orson Welles Theater Complex. This has resulted in already apparent changes in style and subject at that theater. Located just over the town line in Hadley on Rt. 9, Campus Cinemas (256-6411) has been running a variety of films on the three screens. In one typical week, there was a first run feature, a double hit double feature, and a classic double feature.

New manager, Wayne Kozart hopes to make Campus Cinemas into a moviehouse similar to the Welles, which was the first house to show "The Harder They Come", "Hester Street", and "Bugs Bunny, Superstar". A commendable touch is the distribution of film notes in the lobby that discuss the particular film maker's ideas, past works, and themes. These notes are prepared by the director of the Welles.

Competition for the Campus Cinemas has come from the only movie theater located in Amherst, our own Amherst Cinema (253-5426). This theater, located in the center of town on Amity Street has catered to scores of college students since it was first built. When I first came to this area, they were running a classic series, but in recent years the bookings have seemed to go down hill. It wasn't until just recently that they've made an attempt to upgrade the bookings. But they have been running a number of good double features since springtime.

Heading out of town on Rt. 9 toward Northampton you cannot miss the Mountain Farms Mall, within which lay the Mountain Farms Four (584-9153). A few short years ago the spot was a farmers field. Not it's concrete and plastic, good for an occasional stroll, but little else. The theater finally got around to erecting a marquee last spring, but they still don't light it up. And it's located in a spot well after you've passed the Mall entrance if you're driving west on 9.

I've seen about ten films there in two years and it seems as if each one broke in the middle at least once. The films there are generally new, but not often first run, and very often in miserable condition. I marvel at how a new film can look worse on their screens than anywhere else. I think they own their own copy of "American Graffitti" which played there for almost half the time they have been open. Final complaint is the house policy of no dollar nights. When almost all theaters have Monday and Tuesday religiously designated as $1.00 nights, the management at Mtn. Farms 4 touches you for an extra 25c and makes you arrive for an early show aroond 4:30 p.m. Settle for this place if they are showing a film you missed and know you have to see.

Just down Rt. 9 a bit from the Mall is Hadley Drive-in. (584-4701) Under new management, apparently, there are showing interesting double bills and have the extra feature of broadcasting the soundtrack over the am radio dial. Provided you have a decent car radio, this means that the sound is of much higher fidelity than those battleship grey jobbers found at most drive-ins. This feature is best displayed in a musical, but you have to have a battery with a good charge or you may not start your car at the film's end. I don't know if the management jumpstarts cars gratis. The only other solution to that is to bring a transistor radio, and that generally means sound quality on a par with the crummy box speakers again. The Hadley Drive-in also has the most unique snack bar operating in the area. Here you can get all sorts of natural foods, most of which seemed a bit over-priced. I couldn't even get popcorn here.

Well, if you've made it all the way down Rt. 9 into the funky limits of Northampton and past the bars, you will find three theaters to choose from. Take a right at the lights and there's the Calvin. Take a left and it's the Globe. Go straight ahead and you'll come upon the Academy of Music. Since this is my favorite I'll start here.

The Academy (584-8435) is a gem, a fine old theater like there may have been in your town when you were just beginning to go to movies. If there was no place, like it in your past, make the Academy of Music in your future. It is the sixth oldest operating theater in the nation. That coupled with the good films featured, basically first run or new films, art films, and the American Theater film series, and the absolutely gorgeous decor of the place make it an experience you won't forget. Last year the Academy also housed a fine concert series that hopefully will pick up again this year. The Academy is a piece of our nation's history, having sheltered the Barrymores and that's fine enough company for us to keep, isn't it?

The Globe Theater (586-0935) has been the local 'art' film house for a few years now. It would be a shame if they were to suffer from competition of the Campus Cinemas. If there's justice, they won't, for an area like this can support more than two such places. It is a tiny, funky, comfortable joint that shows adventurous films. Right now they are running Richard Dreyfuss's "Inserts", for example, which few major places would touch. The people there deserve your support. The candy counter has an array of things good for you, not your dentist's wallet, and the entrance to the seating is an experience worth having. Get to it and you will see what I mean.

Just up from the Globe is the Calvin Theater (584-2310). The Calvin is an old, comfortable house that shows a fairly typical selection of movies. This is the working person's theater of Northampton where you'll see Disney's latest, "Godfather, Part 3" or whatever is picked up for mass distribution. I'm not slighting the place. You would have to drag me to Mtn. Farms to see my favorite films; if you'll go to the Calvin with me, I'll offer to drive.

A notable omission I am making here is the Majestic Theater (527-2346) in Easthampton, which is the area's house of pornography. I can't recall an X-rated flick that wasn't pretty dull after the first six inches; the Majestic at least gets credit for not showing the same ones over and over. Maybe they just change the names and the faces remain the same. Who could tell, who's looking at those faces?

Springfield has a great number of theaters, none of which I have ever been to. I've been content to wait a while and have the film come to me and have paid less for the same. Most theaters in Springfield have those cheapie daytime matinees that you skip classes to catch. Otherwise it's $3, $4, maybe $5.00 per ducat and i've yet to see the film worth that.

Within the academic confines of the Five College area there are innumerable films being shown on the campuses. The best advice for you here is to get the Five-College Calendar available at the Campus Center Information Desk, or read Below-the Salt's Weekend, a compendium listing almost all the films your eyeballs can handle at any given time.

Word in closing here should be given to the Amherst Film Cooperative who have run an educational and entertaining film series over the last years. They show films on the UMass, and Amherst College campuses and can be reached for information just by dialing 253-7525. The co-op members are engaged in a labor of love and are always happy to greet new people interested in becoming members.

Twenty-second Ambitious Season for University Ensemble Theatre

The University Ensemble Theater announced this week its 1976-77 season. This will mark its 22nd consecutive year of productions and will prove to be the most ambitious ever, with seven different plays in two theaters, The Frank Prentice Rand and The Curtain. Both these theaters are in the critically acclaimed Fine Arts Center of the University.

The Rand, though it seats 606 is remarkably intimate. It is only 14 rows deep, front to back, and with its excelent acoustics and raked auditorium provides excellent viewing and hearing from anywhere in the house. The Curtain (formerly called The Studio Theater) is a delightfully intimate theater. It offers the luxury of flexible staging of fully mounted plays.

The season itself will offer a wide range of theater to audiences. Opening the Fall semester will be a frantic farce by Joe Ortin, "What The Butler Saw". It will produced in The Curtain, October 8 through 16. It features a psychiatrist, his wife and a cast of outraged characters who merge into a wild melee of disappearances and discoveries that would do credit to the bawdiest of Restoration Comedy. "Butler" will be directed by William Pullman, MFA candidate in The Department of Theater. Auditions will be announced shortly.

The next three University Ensemble Theater's productions will be in The Rand. Due to the installation of the lighting systems in both The Curtain and The Rand, productions will have to be bunched to free up the theaters for the installation procedure.

Following "Butler" Harry Mahnken will direct the highly acclaimed "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead", November 4, 5, 6 and 11, 12, 13. This comedy by Tom Stoppard won the Tony Award and Critics' Circle. "Rosencrantz" gives the audience the perfect existential answer to what really happened behind the scenes in "Hamlet". Or does it? The New York Times described it as "Very funny, very brilliant, very chilling; it has the dust of thought about it and the particles glitter excitingly in the theatrical air."

The Fall semester will close out with Henrik Ibsen's "Peer Gynt" and will be directed by Department Chairman David Knauf. "Peer Gynt" is a vivid fantasy with music and dance that has enthralled audiences for decades. A true masterpiece of theatricality written by one of the world's greatest playwrights. It has been hailed by critics as "a lusty, inspiring and vivid experience! Rich and elaborate."

The Spring semester will open with "The Mother of Us All", February 24, 25, 26 and March 3, 4, 5. "Mother" was the last of several outstanding collaborations by Gertrude Stein and Virgil Thomson. It is an opera set as a pageant, and tells about the life of Susan B. Anthony and her struggles in the women's rights movement. It will be directed by Vincent Brann.

The Department will return to The Curtain Theater for its final three productions. Pullman will again direct, this time Lanford Wilson's highly popular "The Hot L Baltimore". "Hot L" was voted the best play of 1972 and tells with a blend of comedy and sadness about 12 hours in the lives of the residents of a rapidly decaying Baltimore hotel. Dates of production are March 11th through the 19th.

Doris Abramson will direct the next production. Lorraine Hansberry's "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window." This is a poignant play about a young couple and their struggles as they attempt to confront problems that affect us all...fragility of love, morality, ethics and rebellion. "Sign" will be produced April 8th through 16.

The season will close out with a unique theatrical treat, a world premier play. At the moment the play is untitled. It is being written by MFA candidate Michael Melton. Last Spril The University Ensemble Theater produced Melton's "China Princess" which was hailed as "a powerful, living, theatrical event." It will be performed May 4th through 11th.

The University Ensemble Theater has announced that to go along with this new and exciting season of comedy, drama and opera it is offering a season subscription plan that can save students as much as 31 per cent on ticket prices. Normal student and senior citizen tickets cost $2.50 per performance. With a season subscription to all seven plays a student or senior citizen pays only $12.00 for an average of $1.71 per ticket. Or the student or senior citizen may elect to see only five plays. The cost of this mini-subscription is only $9.00 or an average of $1.80 per ticket.

Non students may also take advantage of season subscription benefits. A regular ticket for non students costs $3.50 per performance. A subscription to all seven plays only costs $17.50, an average of just $2.50 per ticket. Also non students may elect to see just five plays for only $14.50 per subscription.

Subscribers receive other benefits besides saving money. They alone may exchange tickets for the best remaining seats for later performances, and if they lose their tickets the Theater Box Office will gladly make duplicates for them. Also season subscribers never have to worry about sold out houses, since they have their tickets well in advance of production dates.

To find out more about the subscription plans or the upcoming season stop by the Rand Theater Box Office, 1-5 p.m. daily, and get your free subscription brochure with a calendar of the 1976-77 season or give a call to 545-3511 and The University Ensemble Theater will be glad to drop it in the mail to you.

Summer Record Record Rerun:

Music Not Totally Extinct, Roach Reports

by Craig Roach

There was an edge missing to most of the music that was released over the summer of 1976. A look at the Hot 100 for the past three months shows a list dominated by disco, oldies, and only the very safe middle-of-the-road material. A brainstorm of mine in mid-February, that of releasing "Yankee Doodle Disco" in time for the big Fourth of July celebration couldn't be packaged in time. Too bad for you, you missed it. Too bad for me, I'd like to have been at the top of the charts (and making money) this year. Here follows a look at some of the material, not necessarily at the top, but a cross-section of styles and trends, that made up the summer's releases. With a debt to Christagau's Consumer Guide for format, I've put them into some broad, easily digestible categories.

Easily the most digestible of all would be the disco album market. For every ten released, there is maybe one with style and distinction. Dr. Buzzard's Original Savannah Band (RCA) tops the list. Fusing the dance beats of today with a big band sound of thirty years past, this band (from New Jersey I think) scores strong and early. If the Big Bands were still touring, playing to two hundred dancing couples a night, they would be playing Savannah Band music. A bad warp makes two-thirds of one side unplayable, but all of the remaining cuts are fantastic. Give it an A.

The Average White Band's Soul Searching, (Atlantic) to no surprise, is also a good combination of dance and direction. All the material is written by the AWB now and done in the style that's established them. Production by Arif Mardin helps, too, but the AWB will forever be in debt to earlier groups, the Isley Brothers in particular, for creating the lines and dynamics that the band has done so well here. (B plus)

Wild Cherry is perhaps an American counterpart to the AWB, as they are a white band from Cleveland. Their album Wild Cherry (Epic) has a strong single in "Play that Funky Music" now selling briskly. Cover versions of older Stax and Motown material sound neither as fresh or charged up as their own. Again, like the AWB, most of this music is like recycled forms if not licks. It merits a B because "Funky Music" balances out the weaker lines here.

Buddah Records leapt into disco over the summer. They shoulda looked first. Andrea True had a hit, "More, More, More" that is the title of her debut disc. Every time I was trapped near an AM radio that tune came on, and since the lyric message lasted 43 seconds and then was repeated for over four minutes, I'd heard it enough in one day. If you haven't heard it enough, then you owe it to yourself (do you ever) to get this because it has a long version, you probably can't get enough of. I always felt the AM version was overlong. The rest of the album probably took no longer to prepare and record then the times listed, so I won't dwell on it.

Super Disco (Buddah) offers even less, but at least promises less. Less is not more. There are more instruments on this lp playing the same two notes bridges than any band since I caught a fifty mandolin all-girl band performing in Germany. (Summer idea — Mandolin Disco?) Get this only if you've tired of all the current disco tunes and still can't get enough. (C-)

Candi Staton, with her Young Hearts Run Free (Warner Bros. Records) album helped me and AM radio a lot. The song and album are frothy but flavorful things. She sounds like she could be an entertaining performer, so if you get the change. Besides, she does a cover of an Al Green favorite, "Living for You" that melts in the mouth. Strong B.

Two Heavyweights, Lamont Dozier and Curtis Mayfield slipped discs in the summer. Both albums are more the kind of music for couples engaged in intimate dining rather than discussion in a paper to be read in the Hatch over coffee and doughnuts, but everyone decries the lack of control in our lives.

Right There (Warners) is smooth. Distilled into an alcohol, Dozier's album and vocal talent would be as smooth and rich as a Brandy Alexander. It's been years since he was a third of Motown's Superteam of songwriters, Holland, Dozier, and Holland, but Lamont has lost nothing over the years. Grade A material.

Curtis Super Fly Mayfield is in love too, it would seem. His album, Give, Get, Take and Have (Warners) is foxy music in praise of all the good feelings generated in steamy love. Curtis has never been one to get too intellectual, and he's been most successful when keeping away from philosophy. Give, Get is his best in years. Even his falsetto, a bit too much for me sometimes, is right on here. Out from behind the SuperFly image, Curtis has made an A album.

It is just a short Bus Stop from disco to salsa, and the Fania All Stars album, Delicate and Jumpy (Columbia), is reason enough to travel. Uniting a number of Latin music's best intrumentalists (with a guest shot from Steve Winwood on guitar) Delicate & Jumpy is the only A plus of all albums here. My only contact with true slasa has been at last year's excellent Eddie Palmeri concert at UMass. This lp is another perfect look into a musical genre that offers far more than a good dance beat. Again A plus.

As reggae artists appear as frequently as buds on a plant, we learn that all that grows is not gold. U-Roy who was the almost highlight of the almost-Summer Reggae festival here performs a quirky, indescribable form of reggae on Dread in a Babylon (Virgin). His accent is so think it obscures much of his message as totally as the smoke billowing from a giant chillum hides his face on the album cover. A much more accessible brand of reggae is performed by the Mighty Diamonds on Right Time (Virgin). These three men have well mixed voices clearly intelligible lyrics, and good tunes to work with. And finally, This is Reggae Music Vol. 2 (Island) is a fine primer into the various artists on the island of Jamaica. The songs are all cuts from various Island Albums that will introduce you to many new names and styles.

Jazz artists eager to reap a little cash by mixing a disco beat in their music would do well to follow Gabor Szabo. It's not good jazz, but it's better than average listening material. A good stereo will help his album Night Flight (Mercury) as it is one of the better sonic experiences. The voice-overs, ala Barry White are funny without really trying to be, and get in the way of taking the record at all seriously. (B)

A man who's a master of sounds comes to America as a virtual unknown. Philip Catherine debuts to listeners on Nairam (Warner Bros.), which is actually a compilation of material off of two albums available in Europe that Catherine made in 1974-75 in France. He is one of the few jazz guitarists capable of making music that doesn't sound like a John McLaughlin mutation. People familiar with some of the groups on the European scene (Passport and Focus) may have found his name on an album or two, but Nairam should go a long way toward establishing him here in the states on his own. (A)

Sadly lacking any real sure-shots, mainstream rock efforts this summer have been few and far between. I had my ears toasted at Shaboo in June when I saw Rick Derringer's new group step out, followed quickly by Derringer (Blue Sky). This is the most violent of that power rock categorie that Rick's been in for the last five years. It is down a notch from the quality of his solo albums, and up in decibels from the material he's done with Edgar Winter. Had I not heard the new band vefore this, I'd have expected much more. As it is, the record has lived up to my worst expectations. (C-)

Jon Anderson, singer-writer for Yes released an arty effort, Olias of Sunhillow (Atlantic) which purports to be a saga of a space-hero named Olias. That much is clear, but after that, even with the lyrics in front of me, it gets hard to follow. His writing is often more for his vocalising at the expense of story continuity, here it is always so. I can't make any sense of a true fabric of plot. It does sound gorgeous, but also very limited in scope. Anderson's big trick is to have an instrument, say a synthesizer, play one note, on top of which he multi-tracks voices and more instrumentation to make a chord, a basic chord. It all sounds great over the headphones, but is music in its most basic European form blown out of proportion. If it were an aircraft, it never would get off the ground. (C+)

Is the name of Jay Ferguson familiar to you? His album, All Alone in the End Zone (Asylum), emerges as the strongest entry (re-entry for him) in rock this summer. Ferguson, once a part of Spirit and later Jo Jo Gunne, displays a healthy attitude toward power music with touches of both earlier bands slipping in and out of his tunes. All written by him except a version of Traffic's "Medicated Goo" that goes thiers one better and a pair of tunes by Jay and producer Bill Syzmczyk, Ferguson makes a successful move to stand on his own. Joe Walsh contributes on guitars, but Ferguson is still at the center of all the music. (B+)

Another familiar face has come back this summer. Richie Furay's got his own band and a new album, I've Got a Reason (Asylum) but nowhere new to go. This is all ground covered by bands Furay has been with before. The group he fronts is competent but seem to be carefully in place so as not to upstage Richie. If you're comfortable with his past, this will fit on your ears. Merely average white country. (C)

New Riders (MCA) also on a new label with no new stuff, makes for some lackluster listening. One new tune by the band, the rest is no great shakes either. I've about given up. (D)

The Marshall Tucker Band keeps pumpin' hard. Long Hard Ride (Capricorn) takes off with the title (Instrumental!) tune ala Duane Eddy. Jerry Eubanks' sax work is too lightweight to be serious, but Toy Caldwell's guitar licks and songwriting pull these Southern boys through. (B)

Grinderswitch (Capricorn) is yet another Southern band, one that shows signs of improvement on their latest. A lot closer to the Allmans than the Tuckers, Grinderswitch has yet to develop a style of their own. Yet they do catch fire here and with the Tuckers mellowing and the Allmans disbanding, they could get hot. (B-)

The problem with a lot of the Capricorn bands is their lack of identity. It's as if the label's been skipping out different blends of the same whiskey. Volunteer Jam is an example of why this music has such a following. No one will play with more guts than Duane Allman did, but the musicians drawn from the Charlie Daniels Band, Marshall Tucker, the Allman Bros. Band, and Wet Willie captured live here display some fo their best, hottest licks in a real jamming atmosphere. Like the classic Live at Fillmore, Volunteer Jam isn't as good as being there, but for those too far from Tennessee to have made it, the album gets off. (B+)

Nearing the end I notice that I am grading more severely than in the opening. I guess this is because I feel disco material is fairly trivial at best and so formulaic and limited. This Southern music, strictly limited in its formulaic and limited. This Southern music, strictly limited in its formula also, is at least roots music, in touch with both its past and the audience. The bands are playing to people, not to robot dancers.

Two outstanding examples: We've Got a Live One Here, the new Commander Cody lp, and Live & On theMove, (Buddah) the latest from the James Cotton Band. Both capture the respective groups in firey live performances. The production of the Cotton lp in a bit weaker than the Cody disc, but Cotton is rousing the crowd (recorded at the Shaboo Inn in Willimantic, Conn.) while working up a sweat. Both groups have been at UMass, and both albums are more representative of the good work they put out than were their shows here. Not every show can be the peak of a performer's career, but hearing the good sets laid down by these groups does make me expect more from them than what they've put out here. Back-to-back B+.

Israeli Government Stars in Warner Bros. Film

Hollywood thinks it has found the hottest property since "Jaws" — and Tel Aviv has final script approval.

Israel's decision to sanction a $10 million Warner Bros. film on the Entebbe raid, starring Steve McQueen, marks a new level of cooperation between Tel Aviv and the U.S. film industry. Ted Ashley himself, Warner Bros. chairman of the board, flew to Israel to negotiate the deal and sign the contract.

The Israeli government agreed to provide Warner Bros. with troops, planes and military vehicles, as well as inside information on how the raid was planned and executed.

In return, Warner Bros. will give Israel script approval rights and has pledged to donate a portion of the film's gross to an Israeli soldiers' benevolent fund. Warner Bros. has also announced its intention to produce more films in Israel in the next three years.

Tel Aviv hopes the Entebbe film will generate pro-Israeli sentiment. Warner's publicity director Ernie Grossman thinks the film will have an enormous international audience and that the Entebbe raid, "like the invasion of Normandy," will have lasting box office appeal. "It's part of our history," he explains.

Jordan Rosenfeld, Israeli consul for economic affairs in Los Angeles, says the choice of Warner Bros. to do the film over a dozen other Hollywood studios was based on the "quality of the project. Our interest," says Rosenfeld, "is that the film be presented in the right way. The story must have the right moral."

Grossman says Warner Bros. is equal to the task. "There's a right way and a wrong way to do this picture. Sure, we could run out to the Mojave desert, put up a cardboard set and do a Mickey Mouse job. But we won't. We'll spend $10 million, use Steve McQueen, get a heavyweight director, work with the Israelis, and do it the right way."

Grossman speaks disparagingly of a proposed Twentieth Century-Fox NBC-TV version, calling it a "hit and run" job to cash in on the Warner film.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has told his country that the Entebbe raid will "become a legend."

Besides the Warner epic it has already spawned two "quickie" books and plans for several competing movies by Merv Griffin productions, Paramount and Universal.

But the pop glorification of the raid and the race to cash in on it have also prompted the publication of a satire in the Jerusalem Post, entitled "Entebbe: Now It Can Be Sold."

The introduction to the mock book reads: "Humbly, yet profitably, we over at Instabooks, Inc., take deep pride in being the very first to fling at you the thrillingly true, throbbingly human document of the Entebbe triumph."

It begins: "His left eyebrow twitching almost imperceptibly, Major Uri Ben Uri glanced swiftly across the instrument panel of his Hercules...Yes, this was it. Through the silent Bicentennial night, the giant airships swept southward over the turbulence, along a dotted line soon to be published in Time Magazine."

The satire appears on the same page as a scathing Post review of Israeli reporter Dan Uri's first-off-the-press Entebbe paperback. According to the Post, Uri ground out his "dreadful...chaotic" 35,000-word account in five days. Material from the Uri five-day wonder was later incorporated in the Bantam version. Bantam president Oscar Dystel predicts that sales "may go to a million."

LOWEST PRICES IN TOWN!

Amherst's Common Market

by
John Silletto

Garden fresh vegetables for sale. Corn, tomatoes, peppers, lettuce, cucumbers, squash, and carrots picked fresh this morning. The prices are low and the salespersons are friendly and competitive. And it's right here in Amherst at the Amherst Common Market.

Many of the growers have been up since 4 a.m. picking their produce to bring it fresh to the Saturday morning market that opens at 7:30 and runs till noon on the Amherst Town Common. If you're not an early riser on Saturday, the market is also open Wednesday evenings from 3:30 - 6:30 p.m.

Vendors offer fresh produce, baked goods, pickles, jams and jellies all grown, baked or cooked in the area by the vendors themselves. Usually there are about 20 booths at the common market. There is quite a bit of competition among the vegetable growers with five or six stands to choose from each market day for common produce. Other vendors specialize in baked and canned goods.

Several of the regular vendors feature organically grown vegetables. Fresh cut herbs are almost always for sale. Live potted herbs are also sold. Flowers are for sale both cut and growing in pots. Early in the growing season young tomatoes and pepper plants are also sold for transplanting in a garden. On Wednesday afternoon you may also find some of Amherst street vendors selling buritos and fruit juices at the market. Wednesday afternoon you may also find some of Amherst street vendors selling buritos and fruit juices at the market.

Anyone can sell his product at the market. Vegetable growers at the market range from professional truck farmers to home gardeners with a surplus. The only requirement for vendors is that they register with the market and pay a small fee for vending space. Vendors are not allowed to sell any manufactured goods and any processed foods must conform to state health regulations.

Amherst Common Market was organized four years ago. According to Gene Wormer, a member of the Common Market Committee which supervises the market, the market was inspired by the energy shortage, inflation, and a revival of home gardening. It was organized as an expression of community spirit and good fun.

Wormer stressed the social aspect of the market as a Saturday morning meeting place for local residents. Friendly salespersons and good-natured bartering contribute to a fair-like atmosphere. In past years the market has sometimes featured German bands, jugglers, and other entertainment on Saturday mornings.

There is also the business side of the market. One vendor stated that his entire summer income came from Saturday mornings at the market. He stressed that although the prices are low compared to supermarkets, they offer a financial alternative to the farmer or gardner faced with even lower wholesale prices. One vendor commented that there is some friction between the original organizers of the market who are concerned with the aesthetic value for the town and those vendors who are financially dependent on the market and would like to see more advertising and business orientation.

There is an educational side to the market too. One vendor remarked that when the market first opened, some customers did not recognize many of the vegetables offered for sale. He said that kale and other greens sold poorly simply because people did not know how to prepare them.

Amherst Common Market runs from late May to early October, although the Wednesday afternoon sessions end after Labor day. The market is run as a non-profit organization by the seven-member Common Market Committee. Daily operations are supervised by a Market Master. Nine rules govern its operation. In four years of operation, the simple bureaucracy has had no trouble insuring the smooth operation of the market.

'76 '77 Fine Arts

The Fine Arts Center of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst will be presenting its own Broadway Theatre and Center Concert Series along with special events to start the new academic year.

Inagurating the season the Fine Arts Center will offer the very popular One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest, a play by Dale Wasserman from the novel by Ken Kesey. The fully staged Broadway show will appear for one night only on Wednesday, September 15, 1976.

The Broadway Theatre series will follow on Sunday September 19 with a Little Night Music starring Julie Wilson. This operetta with an all star Broadway cast won six Tony Awards in 1973, including one for the best musical of the year. The romantic musical comedy is an adaptation of the 1956 Ingmar Bergman film "Smiles of a Summer Night."

Audiences will be offered the opportunity to experience the wealth of local talent in the Amherst area when the Fine Arts Center offers a five night run of the Bicentennial Musical 1776. Stubby Kay, original Broadway star of Guys and Dolls and Li'l Abner and more recently The Ritz will star as Benjamin Franklin. The production will also star Broadway and Hollywood actors, William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge.

The professional actors will be supported with talent from the Pioneer Valley area. Fredrick Tillis will be musical director, conducting the University of Massachusetts Jazz Ensemble.

The musical opens on Friday October 15 and plays on both Saturday and Sunday, October 16 and 17. The production then resumes its salute to the Bicentennial again on Saturday and Sunday October 23 and 24.

On Thursday December 9 the long playing Broadway award winning drama Equus will move into the concert hall. The exciting drama by British Dramatist Peter Shaffer is a thrilling psychological detective story where the spectators embark on a fascinating journey inside the mind of a 17 year old boy who is charged with the crime of blinding six horses with a metal spike. The six horses are mimed by actors wearing equine masks of silver wire, a breathtaking sight to behold.

The Broadway Theatre series ends with the timeless production of Sherlock Holmes featuring Barrie Ingham. This Victorian melodrama by William Gillette has been delighting theatre audiences for over 75 years. This is the same production of the Royal Shakespeare Company that has received rave reviews including the one word by Clive Barnes of the New York Times that says it all, "Miraculous." The play which matches Holmes against his arch-enemy Professor Moriarty will run one night only, on April 28, 1977.

Season Events

The Fine Arts Center Concert Series appears as an international salute to excellence featuring the finest in talent from Spain, Russia and France.

Internationally acclaimed pianists Gary Graffman will begin the Concert Series on Thursday October 7. Graffman's performance in the Fine Arts Center concert hall will precede an appearance at Carnegie Hall.

The National Festival Ballet of Spain, performing in its debut tour of North and South American will appear Friday November 12. The 45 member company featuring Spanish classical and flamenco stars will offer both classical and original pieces. The Ballet Festivales de Espana is Spain's first national ballet company and represents an enormous effort on the part of the Spanish Ministry of Tourism and Information to combine all the finest dance elements in the country into a super ballet.

Complete with a full orchestra, the Boston Ballet will offer its famous presentation of the Nutcracker Ballet Sunday and Monday, December 5 and 6. The cast and orchestra is the same which will be appearing in Boston for its annual Christmas time display of talent.

World famous flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal and his keyboard partner Robert Veyron-Lacroix will return to North America and the Fine Arts Center in February. They will appear at the Center on Friday, February 18. Their performance during last season at the Fine Arts Center drew rave reviews.

The finale of the Concert Series will feature the Osipov Balalaika Orchestra under the direction of conductor Victor Dubrovsky Monday, April 4. Direct from Moscow, the company of 75 will feature singers from the Bolshoi Opera Company and dancers of the Bolshoi Ballet. The presentation of the Osipov Balalaika Orchestra at the Fine Arts Center will be part of a 12 week tour in the United States in which the orchestra will play in over 70 cities.

Ticket information for individual events and season tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, (413) 545-2511.

Auditions for parts in the forthcoming University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center production of "1776" will take place Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, September 7, 8, 9, 1976 from 7 to 10 p.m. in the band room of the Old Chapel UMass Amherst campus.

The hit Broadway musical "1776" will feature Broadway actor Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge.

Auditions

The remaining 23 parts will be filled with actors-singers from the Pioneer Valley area. The parts to be filled include two women, Abagail Adams and Martha Jefferson, sopranos, and 21 men, mainly character parts who play members of the Continental Congress.

Musical director for the production will be Fredrick Tillis.

All area actors-singers are invited to try out. Please be prepared to sing, and bring your own music. An accompanist will be provided. For further information, call (413)545-0202.

Celebrity Series

The University of Massachusetts Arts Council Celebrity Series for the 1976-77 Season will consist of four concerts, all to be given in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Leontyne Price, world-famed American soprano, will be heard in the opening concert on Wednesday evening, September 29. Ms. Price, whose operatic and concert career has been staged in the great music centers of the world, including the Metropolitan Opera, La Scala, Convent Garden, Salzburg, Teatro Dell-Opera, Paris Opera House and the Bolshoi Opera, has been awarded unprecedented and continuing accolades by the music world.

The second concert in this Series will be a performance by the celebrated Guitarist and Lutenist, Julian Bream, Thursday evening, October 21. Mr. Bream, who occupies a pre-eminent position in the world of guitar and who is undoubtedly the finest lutenist of his generation, has been awarded the Order of the British Empire by his country for his services to music.

The third event in the Celebrity Series, An Evening of Giants, will bring together jazz greats Dizzy Gillespie, Jo Jones, Charles Mingus, James Moody and Mary Lou Williams, each one a solo artist of international stature, they will join their talents for two evening concerts on Friday, December 10 and Saturday, December 11.

The final event in the Series will be a return engagement of Professor Peter Shickele in his irreverent musical spoof, The Intimate P.D.Q. Bach, Sunday evening, February 27.

Season tickets for the University of Massachusetts Arts Council Celebrity Series for the 1976-77 Season may be obtained at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, UMass-Amherst, 01002, (Tel. 545-2511) and are priced at $22 and $19 for the general public; UMass-Amherst students, $13. The Box Office is open from 9 to 4 each day, Monday through Friday.

Chamber Series

The University of Massachusetts Arts Council has engaged five outstanding ensembles to appear on its Chamber Music Series during the 1976-77 Concert Season, including Tashi and the Fisk Jubilee Singers, both groups to perform during the first semester.

Tashi will open this Series on Tuesday, October 5. Tashi (Tibetan for good fortune) brings together four of the country's leading young instrumentalists — pianist Peter Serkin, violinist Ida Kavafian, cellist Fred Sherry and clarinetist Richard Stoltzman. Since their New York debut in 1973, they have been hailed for their unusual programs and exciting performances in concerts across the country and in Europe.

The second concert in the five-event Series will be the Fisk Jubilee Singers of Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee, on Wednesday, November 3. Under the direction of Matthew Kennedy, himself a noted pianist, the Fisk Jubilee Singers, have packed the leading halls of Milan, Rome, Salle Gaveau in Paris and Festival Hall in London. The spirituals which the Fisk Singers first introduced to northern listers more than 100 years ago retain their power, their eloquence and their ability to move an audience when sung by these young artists.

The Quartetto Italiano, I Solisti Di Zagreb and the Karr-Lewis Duo will be heard during the second half of the Council's concert season.

The Quartetto Italiano, now making its 25th American tour, will perform on Tuesday, February 15. Based on performances they have been giving, American and Canadian critics are asking, "is the Quartetto Italiano the greatest string quartet in the world?" After a recent concert, the Cincinnati Enquirer wrote that "if there were an Academy Award in Chamber Music, the Quartetto Italiano would win it."

The fourth offering in the Chamber Music Series will be a concert on Monday, March 15, by I Solisti Di Zagreb, the unique ensemble of eleven string virtuosi from Yugoslavia. Founded by Yugoslavia's Radio Zagreb in 1954, I Solisti Di Zagreb is now on its twelfth American tour and records for both RCA and Vanguard and performs regularly on the national radio and television networks of many European countries.

The Karr-Lewis Duo, double bass and keyboard, will bring the Series to a close on Thursday, April 7.

Acclaimed by critics as the greatest living string bass virtuoso, 31-year old Gary Karr, has brought the double bass from the back of the orchestra to center stage stardom. Karr and David Harmon Lewis are artists-in-residence at Dalhousie University in Halifax.

Tickets for the UMass Arts Council Chamber Music Series for the 1976-77 Season are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (545-2511).

Fine Arts Events

76-77 Season

Concert Dance Series

The University of Massachusetts Arts Council's Concert Dance Program for the 1976-77 Season will feature two separate series, each consisting of four internationally famous dance ensembles.

Series A will include: Sounds in Motion, Saturday, October 30; Royal Winnipeg Ballet, Friday, February 11; the Masked Dance-Drama of Korea, March 4; the Nikolais Dance Theatre, March 11.

Series B will consist of: The Martial Arts of Kabuki, October 12; Royal Winnipeg Ballet, February 12; Pilobolus Dance Theatre, February 26; Nikolais Dance Theatre, March 12.

The opening event in the Series will be the Martial Arts of Kabuki, under the direction of Bando Yaenosuki, Kabuki's leading tateshi (arranger), who will be accompanying the troupe on its American tour. Now in his sixties, Yaenosuke is revered in Japan as a national treasure.

The stage battles of Kabuki (tachimawari) are formalized encounters which play a major role in the production of many Kabuki plays. Though the movements and techniques employed in the various types of tachimawari are based on those actually used in such martial arts as Kendo (the way of the sword) and judo, they are transmuted on the Kabuki stage into stylized, dance-like patterns. The movement is intertwined with striking poses and tableaux, as well as exciting flips and somersaults.

The second offering, Sounds In Motion, is a company of young Black dancers and musicians under the artistic direction of Dianne McIntyne. Sounds In Motion will perform varied pieces, which speak to all peoples, including McIntyre's Memories, a number which receives rave reviews from critics whenever it appears on Sounds In Motion programs.

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet, the third company appearing on the Dance Series, will be seen in two different evening performances. In 1953 her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, II, distinguished the Company by granting it her first "royal" charter, making it the British Commonwealth's first "Royal" company. Only afterwards was the famous Salder's Wells company of London accorded "Royal" status.

Appearing in a single concert on Saturday, February 26, the internationally famed Pilobolus Dance Theatre will appear on the Fine Arts Center stage in a first-time visit to the University of Massachusetts.

March 10 and March 11, The Alwin Nikolais Dance Theatre, will offer a different program each evening during their residency. Patrick O'Connor writing in Good Times in February of this year said of this Company, "An evening with the Nikolais Dance Theatre is the most pleasurable experience (visually, aurally) it is possible to have in the New York Theatre." Nikolais is making a return engagement to UMass, where he is extremely popular.

The final event in the Dance Series will be the Masked Dance-Drama of Korea which will be seen on March 4. The Pongsan Masked Dance-Drama, which will tour the United States and Canada this Season, originated in Hwanghae Province in Korea and is a festive comedy in which laughter triumphs over life's everyday cares.

Four musicians will accompany the dancers and players. Western audiences will be delighted by the vigor, humor and earthiness of this drama, which has never before been seen on the North American continent.

Season tickets for the Dance Series are now available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office, (Tel. 545-1515) which is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. each day, Monday through Friday. Prices for Season tickets are $17 and $14 for the general public; $10 for UMass-Amherst students.

National Black Theater

The National Black Theatre, founded in 1968 by master craftsman Barbara Ann Teer is a Temple of Liberation; an Institution of Re-education, a Center for Communication, a Theatre for a Black Nation — It is a multifaceted creative factory that seeks expression of human consciousness.

These gifted, young black artists will be seen in a single performance of a yet-to-be selected vehicle on April 9.

Orchestra Series

Four of the world's most outstanding musical aggregations have been engaged to appear on the University of Massachusetts Orchestra Series during its 1976-77 Season.

Leading off the Series will be the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa on October 18. The Boston Symphony has selected an All-Beethoven program for its appearance and has invited the noted pianist, Andre-Michel Schub, to appear as soloist that evening. Mr. Schub will be heard in Piano Concerto No. 5, "Emperor."

The second concert in the Series will be given by the Prague Chamber Orchestra on March 30. Hans Richter-Haaser, the distinguished German pianist whose playing has often been compared to that of Gieseking, Backhaus and Schnabel, will be the guest soloist with the Prague. Today, Hans-Richter-Haaser is one of the most in demand concert artists throughout the world, and his tours are sold out many months in advance.

The Prague Chamber Orchestra is returning to America this season on its sixth tour. This sterling ensemble of 36 virtuoso musicians who perform without a conductor, made a tremendous impact on the American public during their first U.S.A. tour in 1964-65. The Prague Chamber Orchestra was founded in 1951. Prague has long been known as one of Europe's best-known centers of musical erudition, a city of rich cultural heritage, especially renowned for orchestras and chamber ensembles. In its establishment, the artists had in mind a body of classical orchestral type which would utilize the full instrumentation of the many works it would perform — works calling for strings, woodwinds, brass and percussion. With such instrumental combinations and performing without conductor, the orchestra, therefore, is a rarity in the world.

The Minnesota Orchestra, under the direction of Stanislaw Skrowaczewski will appear in concert on April 19. Founded in 1903, the Minnesota Orchestra has developed over its long history into one of the top major orchestras in the United States. As one of the nation's most widely-traveled symphonic organizations, the Orchestra has brought fine music to residents of hundreds of communities, playing annually to some 500,000 patrons at more than 150 concerts on tour and during its regular series in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Among the noted conductors whose genius has brought the Orchestra to its present eminent-position were three leading pratitions of the conducting art: Eugene, Ormandy, Ditmitri Mitropoulos and Antal Dorati. The present maestro Stanislaw Skrowaczewski, who has been with the orchestra since 1960 holds a unique position in the musical world: - eminent conductor and composer, he bridges the traditions of Viennese classicism and the nineteenth century with the new concepts of the twentieth. He is distinguished for his interpretation of both the contemporary repertoire and the great Romantic symphonies. Skrowaczewski has guest conducted nearly all the leading and European and American orchestras and has directed performances of both the Vienna State Opera and the Metropolitan Opera.

The fourth and final concert on the Series will be given the Chicago Symphony under the direction of Sir Georg Solti.

Since it was founded in 1891, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra has played a significant role in the introduction of new works to the orchestral repertory. Sir George Solti made his debut conducting the Chicago Symphony in Orchestra Hall in Chicago as guest conductor on December 9-10, 1965 and he became Music Director of the Chicago Symphony in 1969 while he was serving as musical director of the royal Opera House, Convent Garden, London, a position he relinquished in June, 1971. He was knighted by Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain in March of 1972 for his decade of service at Convent Garden.

With the Chicago Symphony, Maestro Solti currently is riding the crest of one of the most historically successful marriages of conductor and orchestra in our time. The collaboration has inspired critics around the world to hail the Orchestra and its conductor as the "sine qua non" of today's musical ensembles.

Contemporary Music Series

Four outstanding musical artists and ensembles have been engaged by the University of Massachusetts Arts Council to appear on its Contemporary Music Series during the 1976-77 Concert Season.

Count Basie and his Orchestra will open the Series on Friday evening, October 1. Basie, who has been called "the most explosive force in jazz," has seen his audiences become greater with each passing season of performance. In this day of rock and small groups and electric sounds, the age of the Basie Band has remained in the fore. This year, Count Basie and his Orchestra will tour Japan, South America and Europe. Basie was last on the Amherst campus in March of 1974 when he also appeared on the Arts Council's Concert Series and played to a "sold out" house.

Two Generations of Brubeck, featuring jazz immortal, Dave Brubeck and sons, Darius on keyboard, Chris on electric bass and trombone and Danny on drums, will come to Umass in the second of the four-concert series on Saturday, November 13. Dave Brubeck, who holds a number of first in the world of jazz (first jazz artist to perform at a state function in the White House and recorder of the first jazz single to sell a million copies — TAKE FIVE, 1963), played as many as 250 one-nighters in a year during the fifties and sixties. In those years, Brubeck made tradition-breaking appearances with major symphony orchestras, including performances with Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic. He has now come full circle with the presentation of Two Generations of Brubeck and this season the ensemble, in addition to a nationwide tour of concert halls, jazz festivals and campus concerts and seminars will also embark on an extensive world tour.

The third event in this series will be a concert on Saturday, February 5, 1977, when Gil Evans and his Orchestra pay their first visit to the Amherst campus. At 62, Gil Evans, composer, conductor and pian virtuoso, is a living legend, having been on the American musical sc ie since age 21 when he assembled his first corps of musicians. Gra my Award winner, he was also awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship fo omposition in 1968, a rare fete among jazz artists.

Tito Puente, the King of Latin Music, will ig the Contemporary Music Series to a close on Thursday, April 14 uente, who began his musical career as a professional dancer, is a is time the best known Latin Orchestra leader in the world. He h spent most of his life expanding the range and scope of the Latin m and to this end has become an excellent composer, arrange bandleader. He and his orchestra have performed in the largest e halls and concert grounds, worldwide.

All of these conce ll take place in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at the Amherst C where Season Series tickets are on sale at the Box Office lo in the Center. (Tel. 545-2511). Ticket Prices for the Contempo usic Series are $19 and $15; UMass-Amherst students, $11. x Office is open from 9 to 5 each day, Monday through Friday.

Ride the UMass Transit

by Arthur Sesnovich

The small, rural town of Amherst has much to offer in the way of culture, rich heritage, and beautiful surroundings.

It also offers what is possibly the largest no-fare bus system in America.

This distinction may come as a mild shock to anyone who knows the relatively small size of the town. Amherst has a population of approximately 50,000, including students of three colleges within the town limits.

Situated close to the center of town is the University of Massachusetts, which operates a fleet of 23 buses. The university boasts its bus system carries possibly more passengers per day than any other no-fare system — it makes 17,000 passenger trips per day and close to 2.5 million annually. Running eight different routes (five off-campus and three on-campus), the UMass buses log 1650 miles per day, 447,000 annually. The routes themselves, laid end to end, cover approximately 35 miles.

On each of two off-campus routes, buses make 50 runs per day; on the other three, 23 total runs are made per day. The three on-campus routes combine for a total of 213 daily trips.

The UMass Transit Service employs 140 drivers, 115 men and 25 women, all of them students. This provides a welcome opportunity for student employment in days where work-study jobs are becoming increasingly harder to find.

Most of the drivers are informal in their approach to the job, says Ms. Dawn Renear of Martha's Vineyard, a recent UMass art history graduate.

"Often the driver will turn on a radio for you, or just talk to you. Sometimes, they give you a break and let you off closer to where you're going than right at the stop."

University of Massachusetts Prof. Dario Politella tells of the time a driver turned her bus into a personal taxi service for him.

"I was taking the bus to the Sunderland Post Office," he recalled. "When I got there, because there were so few people on the bus, the woman driving said that she would wait for me if I didn't take long.

"I went in, did my business, came back out, and got back on the bus. Now where else can you find service like that?"

At the head of this extraordinary program is Robert Godding director of transit and transportation at the school, and former student operations manager. Jeff McCormick is the present student operations manager, while Steve Murphy and Michael Scharff are assistant managers.

Frank Bonneville heads a ten-member student maintenance crew to handle minor repairs and upkeep. The University employs two full-time mechanics for major repairs.

Allan Byam, head of the auto pool and field trip service, and Bill Porter, in charge of driver training, round out the management positions.

The system also has eight driver supervisors, who handle any major problems with scheduling and directions, and 15 radio operators, who are in contact with all buses by two-way radio. Drivers check in with the radio operators every few stops to help maintain prompt service.

Established in February, 1973, the UMass bus system is not in business to make money, according to McCormick, a veteran and senior at the University.

"If that were the case," he said, "we'd have to start charging fare, and that would defeat the Transit Service's objectives.

"The purpose is to help clean up the air and alleviate the traffic problem in Amherst and the surrounding towns. If we charged a fare, people would just go on riding in their cars."

To start the project, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration granted the University $475,441. To this amount the University added $157,728 in cash, labor and services, while the Student Senate contributed $30,000.

Under the direction of Prof. William F. Goss, project director, and Prof. Paul W. Shuldiner, project coordinator, 10 31-passenger buses were purchased, to which were added three buses already in service on the UMass campus.

The fleet was later expanded to its present strength of 23 buses, of which 16 are exclusively transit. The rest are field trip and back-up buses.

Yearly operation of the system runs about $400,000. Part of this money comes from parking fees and meter receipts, while the Student Senate foots a portion of the bill.

The University, which used to pick up one-third of the tab, is expected to pay only one-fifth during this fiscal year, because of budget cuts; by July 1, 1977, it will supply no funding at all. To help create extra revenue, the Transit Service accepts advertising in the buses from local merchants and vendors. Public service advertising also gets a spot on many of the vehicles.

The UMass Transit Service began rolling on February 12, 1973. "There was no trouble getting the system going," recalls McCormick, who took over the student operations managerial position from Robert Godding last year. "The main reason was that there were no other buses in service in the area that our buses now run.

"As a matter of fact, we got a lot of encouragement from the commercial bus lines in the area, since we actually feed their systems with passengers."

Each UMass bus driver is put through the U.S. Safety Council's Defensive Driving Course after his or her application for a driving position has been accepted. "We usually will not accept freshmen," McCormick said, "because we feel that they are not ready to handle the job. We also do not usually accept seniors, because the training takes more than a semester, and therefore a senior will not have much driving time, assuming he will not stay on after graduation."

While a trainee is taking the Defensive Driving Course, he or she is out on the road driving under the supervision of an instructor. This goes on for an entire semester, at which time the trainee is tested for his Class 2 license.

"If the trainee gets his license, he can start driving the next semester," McCormick said. "He is still supervised the first few times out, though. Then he's on his own."

Although most of the drivers are men, the Transit Service does employ 25 women, and is constantly encouraging more to apply.

Mrs. Sylvia Byam, a senior accounting major and one of the drivers, says, "I do not get too many remarks about being a woman — not from the students anyways. The parents of the kids are the ones that sometimes give me the funny looks.

"I guess it's harder for them to get used to the idea of women bus drivers."

Bill Porter, head of driver training, and a driver himself, says that the actual driving of a UMass bus is the same as driving a commercial bus; the camaraderie that can be created on one of the buses is something else, though.

"Sometimes, you get a busload of people who all know each other, and it can turn into a regular party."

As to the efficiency of the system, praise is quite abundant. Steven Cooper, a senior economics major from Caracas, Venezuela, says, "The bus service is surprisingly efficient. If the whole University were run as efficiently, it would be a lot better off.

"If a bus is supposed to come every ten minutes, it comes every ten minutes."

There are some complaints, however. According to McCormick, they are usually complaints of overcrowdedness or of buses not running to certain areas.

Although the UMass Transit Service is a big operation, it does not run the only large-scale bus operation among colleges in the U.S. Far from it. The University of Michigan at Ann Arbor has one of the largest in the country in terms of passengers carried per day, although it charges fare.

"Kent State also operates a large system," McCormick says. "It runs the only bus service in all of Kent, Ohio, as a matter of fact."

But Amherst, Massachusetts, small as it may be, still boasts one of the giants.

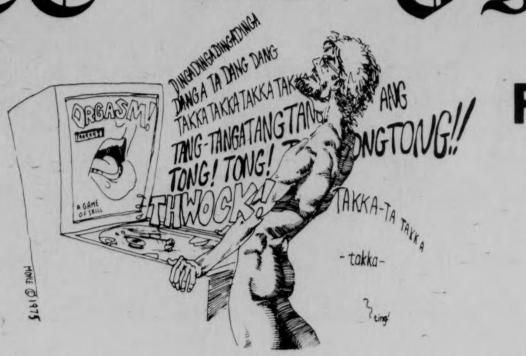
Pinball in the Promisedland



by
E. Patrick McQuaid

What would Freud say? Presuming, that is, that the man would even consider the thing. An electronic battlefield, a "game" in which the human opponent pulls a plunger and catapults both body and spirit into a galaxy-under-glass; where a small, silver foetus bumps and richochets from one set of fireworks to another, forever conscious of its ultimate destiny beyond the flippers. Another coin and the cycle begins again.

Pinball has been a core requirement at UMass longer than most people can remember. The machines were purchased to help offset Campus Center operation costs, Since then, with an increasing number of students, machines, and players the Campus Center has netted thousands of dollars with 50 per cent going to the Trico Vending Company. As of last February the machines in the CC have netted $78,000 since July 1, 1975. $39,000 being direct profit to the CC.

The CC has a three year contract with Trico and currently maintains machines in the Bluewall, in the CC near the Hatch, and in the Student Union near the game room. Hamden Dining Commons in Southwest has several machines and there are quite a few spread across various dorms. The dorm machines have a separate contract with the Russell Hall Vending Company who also take in 50 per cent of the profits and average a $20,000 annual intake.

Pinball is an international "wrist-sport" and grosses millions of dollars in this country alone each year. The market has been cornered by D. Gottlieb, Bally, Williams, and Chicago Coin.

The Bally Co. got the ball rolling in the late 1920's when employee Herbert Jones designed the first successful pinball machine, the Ballyhoo. It cost $16.50, was operated manually, and 50,000 were sold; today a machine is priced in the range of $1800.

As in most cases, your money went a lot further back then than it does today. For one penny a player got seven shots. Today, most machines offer one game (five balls) for a dime or two games for a quarter; an establishment will usually offer only one of the two machines and you'll usually end paying a quarter. But your quarter will take you a game further on campus where the agreement is three games for 25 cents.

In 1933 machines were battery powered and a year later they were run electrically. The incentive to play has not changed over the years, however, it's the replay or free game. Score a designated number of points or chance matching up of your score with a number that the machine has calculated and the player is rewarded. The UMass machines offer a free, extra game while machines elsewhere sometimes only reward with an extra ball or two.

But justice is blind and so, supposedly, are the machines. A little too much enthusiasm on the player's part and the result is punishment; the "tilt". If the player bangs or jolts the machine the wrong way the machine will turn itself off. In some cases a tilt will only claim the ball-in-play while in others the entire game will be lost.

Like any popular amusement, pinball has its fallbacks. One of them is not the machine itself, but the player. The advent of technology has given birth to an entire generation of pinball "addicts". Pinball machines are money consuming, they are time consuming and many people will testify that they are evil. Pinball has a history more disturbing than billiards. It was thought to be an underground gambling device at its conception and no one under 16 years old was allowed to play.

In June of 1942 Reader's Digest decided that "Children who hang out in places where pinball is played form bad associations, are often led into juvenile delinquency and eventually into serious crime."

Third World health show on WMUA

by:
L. Patrick Horten

WMUA (91.1 FM) this fall will feature unique and painless public health programming. The Salsa-Soul Medicine Show will be heard Wednesdays from seven to ten p.m. and if last year's demonstration hours are any indication, the new show will be chock full of surprises. If you're listening at all you may win a free meal, a movie ticket, a record or among other prizes, free admission to a local concert.

But its real strength is its music, comedy, poetry and drama skits. A traditional talk show it isn't. In fact, on first tuning in you may be hard pressed to find the public health rap. Most times it will only be found integrated in the music, comedy, skits and short spoken messages in between.

The Salsa-Soul Medicine Show builds its concept of health from the framework of the World Health Organization's definition: "Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well being and not merely the absence of disease and infirmity." Luis Garden-Acosta, the creator of the show believes further that the pursuit of health is tied intrinsically to the development of a community, that the use of media in health education must stimulate and support the community's self-determined effort for total liberation.

A community's struggle to attain good health cannot be separated from the politics and public policy that oppose it. We cannot, therefore, look at a health problem solely from the physiological effect to the individual. If good health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well being then our radio broadcasts must reflect that reality, according to Acosta. For example, in a show produced on the use of coffee we could not simply go into the question of caffein intake but necessarily had to address ourselves to the social history of coffee, its use in sexist ideology and its everyday relationship to economic, social and psycho-physiological depression. And of course no program on coffee would be complete without a mention of the exploitive nature of its production.

Content, however, is not enough. We believe that the message is qualitatively enhanced when delivered through a medium that respects the cultural communication of the community. The programming of relevant music and comedy along with short raps on the physical, mental and socio-political aspects of the particular health issue in question is in essence the Salsa-Soul Medicine Show."

I asked Luis, "Why Salsa-Soul?" He replied that Latin and Black rhythms are a major influence in American music. "Beatle and rock music owes much of its form to Afro-Cuban and Soul rhythms. Yet comparatively little air time is given to Third World music when played in a pure form by its own composers. This music is rich in messages of all kinds but especiaaly in those that sustain life, for survival has always been the main ingredient of Third World Music."

He was quick to add however that the Medicine Show is committed to the use of all music appropriate to both the subject material and the listening audience. "If we prefix "Salsa-Soul" to "Medicine Show" it is not to declare that this show will relate solely to the needs of Third World people but rather that it is in concept and design a Third World contribution to all who would listen. The show in fact, offers an equal balance of music meeting the musical tastes of the Black, Latin and White communities."

The Demonstration Alcohol Education Project has provided the leadership in developing resources for the Medicine Show. Additional resources are coming from Room to Move, the Bilingual Collegiate Program, the Black Mass-Communication Project and other individuals who are working as part of the Nutrition, Alcohol and Mental/Health committees of the Salsa-Soul Medicine Show. Local merchants are being encouraged to sponsor the show and if anyone is interested in contributing their time or resources to the development of the show, they can contact Luis at the Alcohol Education Office in Health Services, 549-2671 ext. 177.

Where'd your jeans come from?

Blue Denim Jeans — the classless uniform of the world today — got their start in 1850 as Brown Canvas Pants made by a man who didn't like the word "Jeans" and insisted that his products were "Waist Overalls." Somehow it's hard to imagine the "Brown Canvas Revolution" and "The Waist Overall Generation", let alone a "Canvasmachine".

The man who started it all was Levi Strauss — yes, there really was such a man — and although the first Levi's for California's Gold Rush Prospectors were made from tent canvas, sailcloth or whatever heavy material he could find, he stitched as soon as possible to denim color blue with the native American dye indigo.

Denim is the Americanized name and version of a rugged fabric once known as "Serge De Nimes" (cloth of Nimes, France). Legend has it that the durable cotton material was used for the sails on Christopher Columbus' ships but while that can't be verified there's no question that denim was a major reason why cowboys, miners and lumberjacks made Levi's "The Pants That Won The West".

Denim's durability and economy made it ideal for workclothes and that remained its principal use until the 1950's. When it became increasingly desirable — and acceptable — for school and casual wear. It was about this time that Levi Strauss & Company began its rapid growth from a small regional company to the world's largest apparel manufacturer and introduced its "Shrink To Fit" denim in the eastern United States as the jeans "Guaranteed to Shrink, Wrinkle and Fade".

The "Youth Revolution" of the 1960's and a continuing trend toward a more casual lifestyle for people of all ages focused still more attention on denim, as did interest in the fabric throughout the world. From that time until the present there has actually been a shortage of quality, heavyweight denim.

Denim has since proved itself for everything from its original uses to upholstery to luggage to bookbindings to high-fashion apparel and now is taking to the road in the form of the "Denimachine" vans customized for prizes in a promotion co-sponsored by Coca-Cola USA, a division of The Coca-Cola Company, Levi Strauss & Company and the Ford Motor Company.

Stage West publicity director

Stephen E. Hays, Managing Director for Stage-West, Massachusetts' only resident professional theatre, has announced that Jeff Wilson is the new Director of Public Relations. The theatre is preparing for its tenth anniversary season to begin in November.

The position itself is a new one for Stage-West, Wilson said. "The entire Publicity Department at Stage-West has been reorganized. In the past we have concentrated on our contact with the press. This year we will be concentrating more on relating to the public," he said.

Wilson, a native of Burlington, Vt., has been involved with every facet of the Performing Arts. A 1973 graduate of the University of Vermont, he holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in theatre.

He has worked as Publicity Director for the Champlain Shakespeare Festival in Burlington, Vt., and most recently as the Production-Box Office Manager for the Hudson Valley Philharmonic in Poughkeepsie, NY.

Wilson has produced concerts by artists Ben Vereen, John Denver, James Taylor, Chicago and Loggins & Messina, among others. He has also produced plays such as "That Championship Season" and "Waiting for Godot".

Among theatrical credits covering acting, singing, directing and designing, he recently stage managed the performances of the Erick Hawkins Dance Company at Carnegie Hall in New York City.

Wilson also worked for nine years as a professional radio announcer and newscaster.

Wilson and his wife, Darlene Ritchie, also an accomplished actress and stage manager, are residing in Springfield.

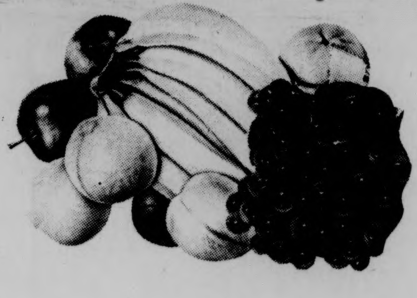
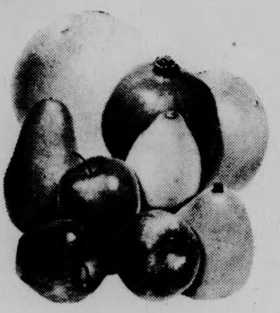
A Guide To Vegetarian Restaurants





by
John Silletto
and E. Patrick McQuaid

If you're a vegetarian you've probably been frustrated when going out to eat with friends and finding no meatless dishes on the menu. Next time, you might want to take your friends to one of the fine vegetarian restaurants in the Pioneer Valley. There are also several restaurants that offer a large selection of Vegetarian cusine along side more traditional cusine that even your hardcore meat and potatoes friends would be delighted with.

Chances are you're not a vegetarian but you might take notice of the many non-vegetarians who find vegetarian dishes a refreshing treat. Vegetarian food is not necessarily exotic and only fit for foreign tongues. You may find vegetarian dishes that you can easily duplicate in your own kitchen that are tastier than many traditional meat dishes.

In days of increasing cholesterol levels, worsening world food shortages, and skyrocketing meat prices, being a part time vegetarian is desirable for medical, political, and economical reasons. Most people eat meat mainly because it's easy to cook and they have no idea of how to cook without it. Try out some of these restaurants and you may be surprised to find that vegetarian food can also be easy to prepare and highly desireable.

Equinox Cafe

In Amherst center, at 51 North Pleasant St. is the Equinox Cafe which serves lunches from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and dinner from 5 to 8:30 p.m. A breakfast schedule is currently under preparation.

The cafe was originally a small natural juice bar located a few doors up the street. Last March they moved to their present location expanding both menu and elbow room. The Equinox can comfortably seat 60 and serves a wide variety of vegetarian and natural dishes such as vegetable pilaf, vegetable shishkabob, and eggplant parmagiana, as well as numerous salads. The lunch Poor Folks Special is only 95 cents and worth investigating. Average prices range from $2 to $3.50. A guitarist is on hand for entertainment every night.

The Equinox serves one of the finest cups of coffee in the area and is complimented by a choice of desserts that are as intriguing as they are delicious.

At the time this article was written the Equinox was not open on Sundays. Call for information at 256-0240.

Hadley Drive In

On Rte. 9 Hadley is the one time popcorn, hot dog stand at the Hadley Drive In, now converted entirely to a vegetarian restaurant open both during the day and at showtime.

The menu offers soyburgers and "supersoyburgers", Greek salads, standard salads, juices, rice dishes, omletes, and fresh fruits.

The Drive-In was leased by Amal's Garden, a natural foods restaurant in Wendell, and is changing and improving both menu and film. Where else can you get something that's good for you and enjoy America's most popular form of entertainment at the same time?

The Wok

Further along Rte. 9, still in Hadley, is the WOK. They serve primarily Chinese dishes, but all vegetarian ranging from $3 to $4 per dish. The Wok has a very good reputation in this area and should be checked out at sometime.

The Soup Kitchen

The Soup Kitchen on Main St., Northampton has a wide selection of vegetarian dishes but offers something for the carnivori also. Their salads, very low priced, are a meal in themselves. They offer a selection of soups both cold and hot, omletes, and various breads and cheeses.

Beardsley's

Beardsley's, right across the street from the Soup Kitchen offers a similar menu as well as a very fine hoice of French cusine. Beardsley's is not cheap, but you get what you pay for. They are very fine for a night out or just a coffee or tea. Their cheesecake takes the blue ribbon from this critic.

Home Comfort Restaurant

Offering a fine selection of various ethnic vegetarian dishes is the Home Comfort Restaurant at 25 Bank Row in Greenfield. They offer a complete dinner, including soup, salad, bread, and entree, with a choice of three vegetables for $3.75 to $5.25. Among their selections are French, Greek, and Chinese entrees.

Earthfoods

Here on campus, students have formed their own vegetarian restaurant despite opposition from Saga Foods (Bluewall, Coffee Shop, etc). Last semester, Earthfoods ran a very inexpensive and excellent lunch from out of the Colonial Lounge; since taken over by the Credit Union.

Where and when they'll open, hopefully, this semester is a mystery. Watch the Collegian or keep your eyes open while strolling through the Student Union building for details this fall.

DURA ACE PANTS

The Bicentenial year, like any other, began with puddles and melting snow.

Summer's Through

Summer, slipping past without heeding a call to last.
Plans, laid back in Spring are quickly running out of time.
Love, the summer fling, hanging out everything will soon be lost in the structure of lives demanded by hard work.
Sunshine, beaming bright, ever brightning up and warming your smile loses its gleam as the summer wanes.
Plants, growing towards the harvest moon, it will be soon that the land will yield great fruit from the field.
Friends, come and go, but you know that many will soon show their faces as the entourage migrates back to UMass.
Summer stars, how I wish you would not pass. But each season holds a beauty too wonderful to miss, so
Adieu, Adieu. I love these remaining days with you.

Tombstone

These winged, human symbols gave way to the classic symbols of the urn and the tree around 1780-1800. The most common tree depicted in these stones is the weeping willow, expressing nature's sorrow at the loss of the departed.

You may choose to visit a graveyard simply to look at or photograph the old stones, but increasing numbers of people are pursuing the rewarding activity of gravestone rubbing. Reproducing the relief surface of the stone on paper by rubbing is a fairly simple and inexpensive pursuit, requiring only paper, colored rubbing wax, masking tape — and a little patience and enthusiasm.

Any pliable paper will do, from inexpensive newsprint to rice paper (available in art supply stores). Avoid the temptation to use school wax crayons as they are soft and tend to smear badly. Hard, colored rubbing-waxes are available in art supply stores and produce the best results. Don't forget the masking tape, and it's a good idea to bring along a stiff brush for removing dirt from the stones to be rubbed.

When choosing a stone to rub, look for a smooth one with clear lines for the best results. Rough and eroded stones will produce unclear reproduction. Smooth slate stones are the best, but may be hard to find, as porous red sandstone is most prevalent in the Connecticut Valley area.

Once you have selected a stone, brush excess dirt and moss from it, and tape your paper over the top and around the edges of the stone. Rub lightly and slowly with wax until the outline of the carving is visible. Take your time, to avoid smearing the wax or ripping the paper. When the rubbed area is well marked, go back to darken it in. Practice on several stones until you achieve the desired result, an exact duplicate of the original carving.

Other rubbing techniques use paint and inks, but the chance of damaging a gravestone with these methods exists. Extreme caution should always be used; the stones are irreplaceable. Some towns require a permit for grave rubbing bue to the threat of damage, and the city of Boston forbids rubbing entirely.

Much can be learned from a visit to an old burial ground, and gravestone rubbing is an enjoyable way to spend a sunny, autumn afternoon. Some old burial grounds in the area include: Old Deerfield, Amherst, Pelham, Hadley, Hatfield, Northampton, and Wilbraham. Many small towns in the area have grounds dating back to the 1700's, and small plots along backroads are not uncommon.

Pack a lunch, hop on your bike, and see what you can find.

Peoples Gay Alliance

Politics and Practice

People's Gay Alliance: Politics and Practices

The People's Gay Alliance is a student-run co-operative serving the five-college area gay community. Our efforts are threefold:

1.) social: to provide social interaction between gays

2.) political: to stand in opposition to gay and lesbian oppression and demand full civil rights for gay men and lesbians

3.)educational: to educate ourselves and others, especially regarding what it means (sexually, socially, and politically) to have an emotional and sexual preference for another of the same sex.

Although the People's Gay Alliance has traditionally been a gay male dominated group, our office and activities are also open to all lesbians, bisexuals, and supportive heterosexuals. Though we strive to meet the needs of all gay people we realize these needs differ from person to person, therefore we focus on five main functions which are diverse in their orientations:

1.) Workshops: various scheduled workshops will explore relevant topics.

2.) Disco-Dances: held monthly at Farley Lodge.

3.) Coffeehouses: held monthly, provide a subtle atmosphere conducive to conversation and personalization, with live entertainment.

4.) Gay-Line: an informal referral telephone service in which concerned gay men listen and give advice to persons concerned with-about homosexuality.

5.) Speaker's Bureau: in co-operation with the U. Mass. Lesbian Union sends gay men and-or lesbians to classes, counseling seminars, and interested groups within the U. Mass. and general communities to speak and answer questions about Lesbianism and Homosexuality on a personal level.

The People's Gay Alliance is located in room 413B of the Student Union. Our office is an informal area for gays to meet, rap, or read Gay Community News. Our phone number is 545-0154. Come out!

WMUA

by Eric Blair

WMUA is the student run FM station on campus, serving university students and residents of the Pioneer Valley. According to the station's constitution and by-laws, WMUA takes on the dual responsibility of being a training ground for UMass students interested in radio while maintaining continuous broadcast service for all segments of the community.

Any university student is eligible to participate in WMUA. Full training in all aspects of radio is available for any student want to learning about script-writing, electrical work and voice control. WMUA is constantly in search of people to try DJ'ing, news reporting or the hosting of Public Affairs Programming. No prior experience is necessary to become involved with WMUA.

WMUA has been on the air for the past 28 years, programming news, sports, music, and public affairs. This semester, WMUA will continue in that tradition. There is talk of limiting WMUA's sports broadcast schedule to major games. In the past, WMUA has provided broadcast coverage of hockey, basketball, women's basketball, and football. This semester may see a cutback in the number of games aired although no solid plans have yet been formulated.

WMUA also broadcasts speeches of politicians, authors and professional speakers who come to campus by way of the Distinguished Visitor's Program. Most of these speeches are aired live.

Musically, WMUA prides itself in being able to offer a diverse selection of musical programming. Although the format is described by station personnel as "progressive", care is taken to ensure a diverse representation of all musical forms. During the last two semesters, WMUA aired a three hour weekly show devoted exclusively to Latin music. Gary Nunez, a university student, produced the show.

Sundays have always remained somewhat different from WMUA's weekday programming. It's seen as an opportunity to expose music that often receives little airplay during the week. Sunday mornings, WMUA broadcasts its Sunday Classics show. Sunday Classics is four hours of music from the Baroque, Renaissance and Viennese periods. Also highlighted during the show are contemporary 20th century classical pieces.

Sunday afternoons are devoted to Country, Blues and Bluegrass (CB&B). CB&B is a time when hosts Al Flanagan and Pete Travisano bring three hours of country music to the airwaves of Amherst. Included in the program are early blues artists, contemporary Nashville groups and obscure Bluegrass bands. Local country groups frequently stop by MUA's studios and play live music during CB&B.

Jubilation Jazz is WMUA's most popular program. It's aired between the hours of 7 p.m. Sunday evenings and 6 a.m. Monday morning. Jubilation Jazz is eleven hours of all types of jazz — ranging from New Orleans and Chicago to contemporary and avant-garde. Hosts Steve Berkowitz, Andy Reiter, Freeport and Louie Cronin often feature entire programs around specific eras, musicians or instruments.

Besides entertaining UMass students, WMUA recognizes its obligations to the public as an "educational" station. WMUA is so classified because of its location at 91.1 on the FM dial. To live up to this responsibility, WMUA has a large news and public affairs staff that produces newscasts and talk shows. WMUA news offers comprehensive world, national and local roundups at 7, 8, and 9 in the morning, 12 noon, 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. Primary news sources include the Associated Press, United Press International, local newspapers and news releases. A rapidly growing Public Affairs department is now producing several shows weekly, including Gay Break, Off the Hook, The Women's Show, Zamir and Masspirg reports.

There are two other campus organizations who use the facilities of WMUA to entertain and inform specific segments of the community. The Sunday News Collective presents a weekly anti-imperialist perspective of the news airing stories and viewpoints frequently ignored by other media outlets. The program is broadcast on Sundays between 6 and 7 p.m. In addition to the weekly news broadcast, Collective members do radio shows emphasizing "positive political struggle through music that is non-racist and non-sexist."

The Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP) also utilizes WMUA as a means of programming directly to the Third World community in the Five College area. BMCP produces music shows, talk-interview shows and provides an opportunity for Third World people to receive training in a supportive atmosphere.

In addition to news and music, WMUA continues to inform people through the airing of Public Service Announcements. WMUA frequently airs spot announcements promoting local events. Although this is a free service for non-profit student organizations, WMUA does place a few restrictions on the number and nature of public service announcements that can be aired. For further information about the advertising policies on WMUA, call the station at 5-2876.

New people are always welcome at WMUA. The studios are always open during business hours for people to stop by and visit. The studios are at 42 Marston Hall, just behind the Graduate Research Center.

WFCR

Five College Public Radio

With the start of a new school year, the UMass student may be ready for a different type of radio entertainment.

A turn of the radio dial will bring him or her to such a place, at WFCR 88.5 FM, where calm voices, in-depth information, and uplifting music await.

The call letters of WFCR stand for Five College Radio, which is a public, non-commercial, professional station operating from studios in Hampshire House, next to Whitmore Administration Building and the Southwest complex.

The stations special character stems from two sources: WFCR broadcasts no commercial messages and offers unusual, high-quality programming not found on commercial stations.

Many programs are produced by National Public Radio, a private non-profit corporation in Washington, D.C. WFCR and about 200 other public radio stations across the United States are members of National Public Radio (NPR).

"Public radio doesn't try to please everyone," said WFCR General Manager Godwin Oyewole. "But," he added, "most people will find at least five hours of programming each week that are directed specifically to their needs and interests."

WFCR's classical music schedule, which is the base of its programming, includes opera, symphony orchestra, and chamber concerts by major ensembles, some aired live.

One of the most popular programs is "Morning Pro Musica," a program of five hours of classical music heard seven days a week, beginning at seven a.m.

WFCR also presents its own classical program live each afternoon from two to five p.m. with host Steve Zakar. On the other side of the day, late night listeners can enjoy classical music with "Music for Night People," heard Monday through Thursday, 11:30 to two a.m.

Speeches, interviews, and discussions involving prominent persons also are heard on WFCR public affairs programs, such as "National Town Meeting," "Options," and "National Press Club."

On "Five College Forum," WFCR carries recorded speeches delivered at area colleges, thereby providing students the opportunity to hear speakers like Ralph Nader even if they don't have time to attend the event.

The evening program "All Things Considered," heard daily at five p.m., is billed as offering "more information wtih more depth on more subjects than any other daily news program." Topics on ATC range from nuclear power to a hog calling contest.

Besides classical music and public affairs, WFCR has programs of folk, bluegrass, and black music. In addition, the station airs two foreign language programs, "Que Tal, Amigos," a Spanish program heard Monday through Saturday at 7:30 p.m., and "Tout en Francais," carried Tuesday and Thursday at 6:30 p.m. "Tout en Francais" is produced by Beatrice Braude of the French and Italian Department.

Other shows include drama, British humor, the arts, and interviews with people from WFCR's listening area.

Although WFCR is a professional station, some positions are open to students. Students who own a Third Class Radio Operator's Permit with Broadcast Endorsement may be employed as control board operators and production assistants. Volunteer help is needed during the annual spring fund drive.

Students may become members of WFCR by donating $5 or more. This amount entitles a member to a year's subscription to WFCR's monthly program guide.

WFCR is directed by the Western Massachusetts Broadcasting Council, Inc. made up of representatives of the Five Colleges, and private citizens. The trustees of UMass, however, hold the station's license and fund about 35 per cent of WFCR's yearly budget.

Listener contributions make up another 40 per cent of WFCR's funds, and other money comes from the four colleges and the federal government.

WFCR broadcasts from 6:45 a.m. to 2 a.m. daily, with a power output of 35,000 watts. The transmitter operates from a tower on Mt. Lincoln in Pelham. WFCR's signal reaches from New Haven, Conn. to Putney, Vt., and from Worcester to Albany, N.Y.

Listeners in New Haven receive WFCR through a translator whose installation was financed by the "Friends of WFCR in Southern Connecticut."

The Final Saying

In Memory of

New England History is not to be found only in our hard-bound text books nor in a lecture hall full of students. It is inscribed in brief, sharp verse beneath a gaping skull and a winged hourglass on the gravestones that fill colonial cemeteries across the Pioneer Valley.

Resurging interest in local folklore has brought with it both fascination and concern over the proper preservation of these burial grounds, and more and more people are occupying themselves in gravestone rubbing and the study of quaint and unusual epitaphs. The folk history recorded on the stones is a rich source of historical interest, and we are fortunate to have many such gravesites in the five-college area.

A walk through any of these graveyards will always provide interesting reading, etched in the tombstones. This inscription is from the 1795 grave of a Wilbraham woman:

The longest life must have an end, therefore beware
how time you spend

Advice to the living is found in abundance as in this example, also from Wilbraham:

Death is a debt
that's nature's due which I have paid
and so must you

Epitaphs tell the story of the hardships of early settlers in the valley. For instance, at Old Deerfield is the grave of Mehuman Hinsdell "the first male child born in this place and was twice captivated by Indian savages." He died in 1736.

Debbie Schafer

Even more fascinating than the epitaphs and inscriptions on the stones are the carved symbols and designs which adorn them. The carvings contain symbols of death, resurrection and eternal life. The evolution of the symbols over a period of time reflects the changing attitudes toward death among the settlers.

The oldest motif is the death's head, a mortality symbol often consisting of stark, anatomically correct skull carvings. Later, skulls became less gruesome and were carved with wings, symbolizing the soul's flight to heaven. The older stones are arched and rounded on top like a doorway, the portal to heaven. The mid 1700's saw a shift from the skull motif to attractive portraits, carved in great detail.

The Student's Guide to Campus Lif

An Article About Plants

by
Alice E. Horner

You've moved into your dorm, house or apartment; lugged in your clothes, stereo and maybe a few books. Yet, decidedly something is missing... and so you join the hundreds of UMies in the annual pilgrimmage to plant places. You emerge armed with spider plant, coleus and asparagus fern in an attempt to turn your humble little shoebox into a veritable Garden of Eden. You brandish plant food and aphid killer with the concern of a new mother. But by October, terrible things have happened: your spider plant is a web of dried leaves, your coleus looks colicky, and your asparagus fern has asphixiated. A depressing prospect indeed, since it isn't really difficult to grow healthy plants — it just requires an understanding of one or two basic principles.

To begin with, most house plants have relatives thriving in the tropics, so it makes sense to try and duplicate their original environment as closely as possible. And it isn't so much a question of growing lights and hygrometers as it is a matter of choosing your plants with some forethought. If your dorm window faces north (indirect light) you should leave geraniums in the plant store because they need several hours of direct light daily. Likewise, if you're absent minded about watering, you should avoid ivy and ferns that need moist soil. And so on. Duplicating environments is largely a matter of common sense, and an awareness of four factors: soil, light, air and moisture.

SOIL

Dirt and soil are not the same thing. Dirt is the brown stuff in the backyard; soil is the equally proportioned mixture of sand (for drainage), clay (for solidity), and humus (for nutrients), that you put your houseplants in. Premixed potting soil is available at most supermarkets and garden supply stores in various quantities and works fine for most purposes; although some more exotic types of plants require special mixtures — such as cacti and succulents (which need extra sand) or orchids (which require special fibers).

At any rate, you'd be better off buying your mixtures instead of attacking Orchard Hill with a trowel. And it will be easier to work with the soil if you first dump it out of its plastic bag into a box or large paper bag and use an empty tin can to scoop it out with.

LIGHT

Natural lighting depends upon the exposure of your windows, i.e. the direction they face. South exposures provide intense, direct sunlight (5 or more hours daily), north exposures: indirect light (also called "bright" light, which means just beyond the reaches of the sun's rays); while the east and west exposures offer morning or afternoon direct sunlight (about 2-5 hours).

Most plant places offer lighting instructions when you buy your plants; generally, flowering plants, cacti and succulents prefer south exposures while foliage plants like philodendron do well with north exposures. East-West exposures offer versatility in plant selection, with eastern exposures tending towards more direct light. Below is a partial listing of some popular plants and their lighting preferences, however, don't be afraid to experiment with plant locations, just keep an eye on them for several days and see how well they react to their new situation.

A final word or two on light. Be careful of plants in strong light, especially in the winter when the glare off the snow gets intense. Either move your plants back a few inches, or try and screen out some of the rays with loose-weave curtains or some masochictic cacti. Also, if you want symetrical plants, remember to turn them every few days (depending on their rate of growth.)

AIR

Although plants thrive in fresh air (which provides them with continuous carbon dioxide), they rarely do well in front of open windows where they're exposed to drafts. Since most houseplants are adapted to temperatures in the 65 to 75 degree range, it is understandable that they should be moved away from open windows at night. And since UMass dorms don't hoave storm windows, you'll either have to relocate your plants come winter or else experiment with some form of window insulation (like old newspapers). Another reason for moving plants in the winter are heating units, which tend to bake plant roots when you tastefully arrange your plants on the radiator.

MOISTURE

Moisture is water, which is what you put in your plants (by watering) and around your plants (by misting). It takes a bit of self control to water successfully —: plants just do not respond to promises or apologies like they do to water, neither do they appreciate being flooded twice a day out of concerned devotion.

First you figure out what amount of moisture is required for each plant's soil, then you attempt to maintain that on a regular schedule; taking into consideration light (a philodendron in a dark corner needs less water than a philodendron in direct light); humidity (plants grouped together or over a kitchen sink will retain moisture longer); and type of container (water evaporates through clay pots while plastic pots and hanging ceramic planters need time for the soil to dry out).

There are two basic moisture types for plants: the "keep moists" and the "allow to dry outs". For the "keep moist" plants (and the word was moist, not wet), start out by watering them every other day and decrease if necessary. Yellowing leaves is a sign of over-watering; brown-edged leaves is a sign of under-watering. Very few plants (eg. the Browallia) require daily watering, and it is more important to water a plant thoroughly than daily — i.e. the soil should be watered until excess water starts to come out the bottom. Even the "allow to dry outs" should be given a thorough watering when they are watered. Try watering them no more often than every three or four days for the first couple of weeks, and adjust according to container, humidity, etc. Succulents, cacti, and fleshy-leafed plants like the jade need only to be watered weekly or even every other week; depending on their size and how much water they can hold.

It's a good idea to mist your plants about twice a week, especially ferns and other moisture-requiring plants. You can buy a mister or use an empty pump-spray bottle. The misting provides a humid environment and also serves to keep leaves free of dust.

Another way of providing humidity for plants is to leave them in the bathroom by the sink overnight. Misting is especially important during the winter months when the air gets dry; other precautions are to group plants together and to leave plans of water by window sills and on radiators. For both watering and misting, have the water at room temperature (i.e. mix in some warm water with the cold tap water), plants seem to prefer it this way.

Generally, the instructions that come with plants about soil, light and watering should be followed; however, if the plant doesn't do well it's a good idea to move it around, change its watering patterns, etc.

GETTING NEW PLANTS

Although there are a variety of ways to propogate plants (by seed, air layering, etc.), I'll describe only two of them here: cuttings (the free method) and seedlings (the plant store method).

"Cutting" refers to the process of rooting a cut-off stem section or leaf in water, soil, or vermiculite (a moisture holding material that looks like brown styrofoam and is available in garden centers). Take a cutting, stick it into a pot containing the rooting material (vermiculite is the fastest), water it, and place it in bright light. If you put a plastic bag over the top, it creates a greenhouse effect and will probably root quicker. Check the cutting in a couple of weeks by pulling gently on top to see if roots have formed. If they have, the cutting can be planted in soil, if not, give it some more time.

The type of cutting that can be taken depends on the plant. Upright growing houseplants, such as begonias and geraniums and most hanging plants can have three to four inch sections (with several leaves on them) cut off the original plant with a sharp knife and stuck in vermiculite. Woody stemmed plants, like dracenas, will root well in damp sand if three to four inch sections are planted on their sides, almost totally submerged, and given several weeks to develop roots from "eyes" on the stem.

Some plants, such as African violets and snake plants, root directly from the leaf. This tends to be more bother than it's worth — usually requiring a small section of the original stem (the "petiole") and taking a long time (African violets can take up to two months to root). Snake plants are about the easiest leaf cuttings: two-inch pieces of the broad, thick leaf are cut width-wise, stuck upright into the rooting medium and kept moist in a cool place.

Rooting runners is similar to rooting cutting: when the original plant sends out small plantlets at the end of long "runners", stick them into small pots of soil, using toothpicks to hold them down, and wait for the roots to develop (watering them as often as you do the original plant). When they do, cut them off from the runner stem. Hanging plants, such as spider plants and strawberry geraniums, characterisitcally send out runners and it's an easy matter to get a couple from a friend's plant.

So much for free plants. The other kind of propogation is when you go to the plant store and buy them. Chances are it'll need re-potting right away (especially if you buy it in a supermarket or marked down). It should also be immediately checked for bugs, and be given a thorough watering. Expect it to suffer culture shock for a few days as it adjusts to its new surroundings.

POTTING

Now that you've grown or bought your new plants, you should know how to pot them. There are three kinds of pots: clay — which are porous and drain well but break easily; plastic — which retain water; and ceramic — which have no drainage holes, and hence should be lined with an inch or so of gravel and be watered sparingly. After the pot is selected (size of pot is determined by the size of the plant, i.e. the length of the plant should be double to two-thirds the diameter of the top of the pot; for re-potting, plants should be shifted up one size), its drainage hole(s) should be covered with a rock or piece of a broken clay pot, and then a little soil poured in. Next, the plant should be removed from its previous container by holding it upside down, placing one hand around the plant over the open end, and knocking the pot against the rim of a table. Place the plant into the pot, holding the stem in the center with one hand while you pour dirt in around it with the other. Fill the pot to the top, then water it thoroughly.

Generally, a plant needs re-potting when its roots push through the drainage holes, when it hasn't grown in a while, or when a mass of roots are all that is left of the soil you planted it in. A common mistake is to re-pot in a container that is too large, which encourages the plant to develop its root system and ignore the foliage.

CUTTING BACK

In order to have full, bushy plants, sometimes you have to cut them back. The plants that really need to be cut back are geraniums, coleus and avocados; and its best to train them when they're young rather than have them develop spindly stems. To cut a plant back, pinch the stem off above a leaf (the growing point called the "node"), and it will probably branch off from there. Plants with pairs of leaves, like the avocado, should be pinched in the center of the stem, between pairs. The only plants that never require pruning are plants grown from center crowns, such as strawberry geraniums and African violets.

BUGS

If any of your plants develop bugs, first of all separate it from the rest of your plants. If you want, you can try to cure it (eg. washing it well under the faucet or applying alcohol to the affected areas with a Q-tip), but generally it's safer to throw it out rather than endanger all your plants. Chances are the bugs have attacked the roots or are breeding in the soil and will come back again even if you do get rid of the ones you can see.

EASY PLANTS TO GROW

Some plants are easier to grow than others, and every plant collection should include at least one of the following, they're good for the go.

Philodendrons — come in several varieties, stem and erect, including "elephant ear", "common", and "tree". There are about fifteen different different kinds of philodendrons, which grow in normal soil, any light but a south exposure and don't mind it if you forget to water them every now and then. They're also cheap (often sold as terrarium plants or in supermarket planters) and given a little care they grow all over the place.

CACTI and SUCCULENTS are easy to grow, especially if you leave them alone and give them plenty of direct sun. There are countless varieties, and they grow well in arrangements, rarely needing re-planting. But basically, given the proper conditions and half the chance, any plant is easy to grow.

SNAKE PLANTS have stiff, sword-like, varigated leaves and will take a great deal of neglect calmly. They prefer semi-direct light and infrequent watering, and their leaves should be sponged off when they get dusty.

SPIDER PLANTS and WANDERING JEWS are to hanging plants that grow fast and have a propensity towards survival. Both prefer indirect light and moist soil, but rarely need re-potting. Also, both are easy to grow from cuttings.

VACATION CARE

If you go away for the weekend, or even longer, most houseplants do better in their regular surroundings rather than being moved home or into the apartment of some well-meaning friend. Just take them away from any potentially cold windows, water them thoroughly, put a plastic bag immediately over the top (attach it to the base of the pot with a rubber band) and put the plants away from direct (but still some) light. I did this to a couple of plants over intercession last year, and when I came back they were healthier than when I left...

Creative College Cuisine

for nonmajors

by
Alice E. Horner

I've always had a theory about the compatability of being a student and liking to cook. Studying is, after all, a very intangible sort of activity: hours are spent, day in and day out, listening and reading and thinking — with really nothing concrete to show for it until the end of the semester. Cooking, on the other hand, offers the most tangible of all products: food.

And nothing is more theraputic to the study-weary soul than the rhythmic beating, kneading or stirring; the predictable magic of boiling or baking; the smugly satisfying success of cooking your own dinner. You might also take into consideration the high cost of convenience meals and the monotony of dining commons food. Perhaps you think that you don't know how to cook. It's really not so much a matter of knowing how to cook as it's a matter of knowing where to begin.

D. Schafer photo

One begins in the supermarket. There are two legitimate supermarkets in the Amherst area, both on Rt. 9: Stop & Shop and Finast. Louis' (Amherst Center) and outlying variety stores like Watroba's (North Amherst Center) will charge you extra for the convenience of their location, have items on their shelves longer and don't offer el cheapo store brands. Atkins' Farm on Rt. 116 just beyond Hampshire College, is well worth the trip and offers wide selection of fresh fruits and vegetables. If you're planning to do a lot of cooking, join a food co-op (you save because they buy in bulk and avoid the pretty packaging.)

Wherever else one shops, however, time must still be spent in a supermarket. Supermarkets are fascinating places. They can sell you almost everything you need and a good deal that you don't. In an attempt to make the most of what little money you have, try to remember at least some of the following.

— Never shop when you are hungry. (This is a Basic Truth of Life.)

— Have some idea of what you're going to cook before you hit the aisles. A meal or two? Study break food? Dorm dinner? And it wouldn't hurt to bring a cookbook along for when you're struck by inspiration but don't know what to put in beef stew besides stew beef.

— Try to avoid buying "non-foods" like sugary breakfast cereals, instant dinner mixes ("Hamburger Helper"), plastic bread ("Wonder Bread") and the cellophane bag crowd (like potato chips). They cost too much, aren't good for you, and aren't at all satisfying.

— A word about enriched flour products, i.e. bread, cereal, and pasta (spaghetti, macaroni, etc.) In order to give these foods a long shelf life, the highly perishable wheat germ is removed from most flours, and along with it, thirty-three nutrients. "Enrichment" refers to the process of synthetically replacing three of these nutrients. If possible, buy food made with unbleached flour or at least avoid a steady diet of spaghetti.

— One packaged mix worthwhile to have on hand is Bisquick, which is a mixture of flour and shortening that you use as a base for everything from biscuits to pancakes to muffins (see the back of the box for receipes). All you add is liquid and seasonings.

— Don't be intimidated by brand names. Stores brands are almost always as good and save money.

— "Specials" aren't special if you buy something you don't need or more of it than you can use. Introductory offers, on the other hand, are often a good deal.

— When you buy dairy and meat products, be aware of the "sell by" freshness dates that are on each package.

— Storage is a problem to be considered at the supermarket, especially if you live in a dorm. Sharing a small refrigerator is a good idea, but they don't hold much. Compensate by buying in smaller quanities: half a dozen eggs, small loafs of bread, etc., and sharing with a friend. Also buy smaller cans and bottles, what you lose on packaging you'll save in space.

— Buy the medium size eggs (usually called "large") and the medium grade eggs (Grade "A", grading refers to freshness). To test eggs for freshness after they've been in the refrigerator a couple of weeks, put an egg in a bowl filled with cold water: if it sinks it's fresh, if it floats it's rotten. By the way, the color of the egg has nothing to do with its nutritional value.

— When you buy meat, check the color for freshness. Beef should be dull red in color with threadlike lines of fat throughout; lamb should be pinkish in color with flakey white fat; and pork should be nearly white in color with soft, white fat. Plan on ¼ to ½ lb. of meat per serving (not counting the bone). Generally, the more expensive the meat, the quicker it cooks.

More nutritious, cheaper cuts should be cooked over low heat for several hours and seasoned well. They also can be marinated in a vinegar mixture overnight, which will soften them.

An easy marinade is a combination of ½ cup wine vinegar, ½ cup salad oil, 1 small chopped onion, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon dry mustard, 1 clove garlic, crushed, ½ teaspoon Tabasco (optional) and 1 teaspoon parsley flakes. This works well for chuck steak or lean lamb.)

— You might want to stock an emergency shelf of things to have on hand that cook fast. It could include canned soup, hash, tuna fish, etc.

— Plan on the following seasonings to have on hand to improvise with (tasting as you go along): salt, pepper, onion salt, paprika, bay leaves (for slow-cooking meat dishes), parsley flakes (i.e. dehydrated parsley), oregano and a mixture of salad herbs. If you're going to do any baking, add vanilla, cinnamon, nutmeg, baking powder and baking soda to the list. You should also have small (5 lb.) bags of flour and sugar in stock.

After you've torn yourself away from the supermarket, you're about ready to start cooking. As far as equipment goes, you should have a saucepan, a frying pan, a baking pan or two (8" x 8" is a useful size), a large spoon, preferably wooden, measuring spoons and cups, a spatula, and a pair of potcloths.

Everybody knows about the Four Basic Food Groups (bread and cereal; meat; milk; fruit and vegetables) all of which should be incorporated into your daily diet. With that in mind, I'll preceed to the receipe section, and leave it to you to serve them with various healthy things.

"Hamburger and..."

The way this receipe works is to make the basic hamburger mixture and add to it one or more of the following ingredients. The hamburger you use should be of good quality or it'll all cook away as fat, the medium priced stuff works fine.

The basic mixture:

1 lb. hamburger
1 small onion
1 green pepper
1 can tomato soup
salt and pepper

Melt a tablespoon of margarine in a medium-sized frying pan over medium heat. Crumble the hamburger up into the melted margarine in the pan and stir it around until it's browned on all sides. This takes about 5 minutes. (At this point you may want to skim off any excess fat with a spoon.) Meanwhile, chop the onion and the (cored) pepper into small pieces and cook them int the frying pan with the hamburger until they are soft; about ten minutes. Add the undiluted soup and salt and pepper to taste, along with whatever you've chosen to throw in with the hamburger. Cook everything together over medium heat until it starts to bubble, about fifteen minutes. Serve with a salad and bread and butter. This makes enough for 2 to 4 people, depending on what you put in and how hungry you are.

Five College Cooperation

History

Cooperation among the colleges began with their founding. Amherst College faculty and administrators assisted in the establishment of Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the original Massachusetts Agricultural College (now the University of Massachusetts at Amherst).

Informal student and faculty exchanges have existed since the 1930's. Cooperation among the libraries was formalized in 1951 with the creation of the Hampshire Inter-Library Center (HILC). The first Five College Coordinator was appointed in 1957.

In 1958, a four college committee recommended the establishment of a fifth college, to be centrally located and to take advantage of resources at the existing institutions, while experimenting in new educational concepts. Hampshire College, founded in 1965, is the result.

Interaction

Members of the five college community take advantage of academic, social and cultural activities at all institutions.

Students at any institution may take courses, without additional cost, at any other institution. During the last year, students took nearly 6,000 semester courses away from their home campus. Faculty members from one college may teach courses at another college for a semester or a year. Arrangements are made on an additional-time or released-time basis, or by exchanging one faculty member for another. Twenty-six semester courses were taught by faculty off their home campuses last year.

Not all cooperative programs are formal; interest groups affiliated with one or more of the campuses often have participants from several of the five colleges. Members of music groups, dance groups, casts and crews for theater productions, community service groups, third world organizations, religious groups, and women's organizations often come from different campuses. Occasionally, groups from each college with converging interests will meet together to plan joint programs.

Five College Joint Faculty Appointments

There are two types of appointments: a distinguished five college visiting scholar is a person of national or international distinction, appointed for one academic year; a junior faculty appointee teaches in a field that is new or unique in the Valley for two or three years. Any one of the institutions may host a five college appointee, but courses are conducted on more than one campus.

Current appointees are:

Eugene Frankel, Assistant Professor of Technology Studies. This year Mr. Frankel will offer the following courses: Technology and Society: A Critical Look Nuclear Energy and Social Problems, and Energy and Society.

Ronald Reuven Kimelman, Assistant Professor of Judaic Studies. In his courses, Mr. Kimelman will explore The Mystical-Hassidic . . . Tradition, Postbiblical Judaism, Twentieth Century Jewish Thought and The Jewish People.

Janice Raymond, Assistant Professor of Women's Studies—Medical Ethics. Ms. Raymond's course offerings will include: Women and the Health System, Religion and Culture: Religion in a Patriarchal World, and A Women's Studies Analysis of Bio-Medical Issues I and II.

Maria Tymoczko, Assistant Professor of Irish Studies. Ms. Tymoczko will offer courses in Aspects of the Irish Tradition, Early Celtic Literature in Translation, and both Introductory and Advanced Old Irish.

Academic Calendar

All five institutions use similar calendars with identical class registration days in order to simplify interchange procedure and to give all students equal access to courses at another institutions. Vacations are also scheduled as concurrently as possible — first semester exams are all held before winter vacation and second semester classes start in late January or early February.

January Term is a deliberate change of pace from the rest of the academic year. A wide variety of courses and student activities are undertaken at all five colleges, with Hampshire and Mount Holyoke offering more formal January programs than Amherst, Smith, and the University. January may be used to work on independent projects, to focus exclusively on one course, to travel, or to participate in a cooperative project with other members of the college community. The value of the time spent during January Term is determined by the initiative of the individual student.

Course Registration

Five College registration is the [illegible] first week of school in Machmer Hall. Course listings can be picked up in 24 Machmer Hall. It is recommended that students take no more than 2 courses at other colleges. It is important that the student allow at least one half hour between each class. Students must follow the ground rules of the schools they are attending. Each 5 College course is 4 credits. End of Interchange Registration is September 17.

Classes start in: Amherst College — September 10.

Hampshire College — September 13

Mt. Holyoke — September 13

Smith College — September 9.

For more information call Sara Haws at the 5 College Registrars Office (545-0555).

Five College Services Transportation

A five college bus system serves all institutions every day and evening of the week. On weekdays a bus leaves each campus at least every half hour.

Meal Interchange

Any five college student need only present an ID and proof of participation in a meal plan to the Food Service Office of another college to obtain lunch free of charge. To eat dinner or breakfast at another college, a student needs a justifiable academic reason (course, music rehearsal, etc.) subject to the approval of the Food Service Office.

Five College Lecture Fund

The lecture fund provides financial support for five college groups sponsoring five college lectures, performances, or symposia. Examples of programs

Repair Bicycle

by
Debbie Schafer

Many people depend on the bicycle as their primary mode of transportation, but find themselves at a loss when their bike is in need of repair. Bicycle maintenance can be quite expensive. The Bicycle Repair Collective in Amherst offers an alternative to high priced repair shops, as well as offering advice and instruction in repair and maintenance.

The Collective is operated by four people in a garage located at 51 South Prospect St., and is a "worker's collective who repair bicycles and try to teach bike repair in a non-oppressive way. We try to de-mystify bicycle repair and make people comfortable about learning how to take care of bicycles," according to one co-op member.

For people wishing to repair their own bikes, the Collective offers the use of tools and garage space, as well as mechanical advice. Accessories and spare parts are available at non-profit prices, and members of the co-op repair bicycles for patrons who request this service at nominal fees.

The Bicycle Repair Collective serves as a learning center as well as a shop. Advice is available on all aspects of buying, operating, and caring for a bike. Since the Collective does not sell bikes, advice on purchasing bikes is given with a concern for people rather than profit.

Free, one session classes are now being offered by the Collective every Wednesday afternoon at 4:30. Classes will run through October on a monthly schedule as follows:

First and Third Wed. — Basic Maintenance and Repair
Second Wed. — Ten Speed Riding Techniques
Fourth Wed. — How to Buy a Bike

An additional request of the Collective is a "Parts Fund" which utilizes small loans from the community in order to buy and sell parts at low prices. This provides a community base for the Collective as well as eliminating profits. By borrowing money from non-institutional sources, the Collective is able to work within a self-dependent context.

The Bicycle Repair Collective is open from Monday through Saturday from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., and welcomes anyone who needs bike repairs or simply wishes to learn more about their bikes.

Riding Hints

by
The Bike Repair Collective

Adjust the saddle height so that your leg is almost straight at the bottom of the pedal stroke. The saddle should be almost level. The center part of the handle-bars should be about 1" below the nose of the saddle. But make sure that at least 2" of seat post and handle-bar stem is still inside the frame.

DON'T RIDE AGAINST THE TRAFFIC! It's unsafe for you and other cyclists.

Avoid curbs, bumps, and holes. If you must hit them, stand up on the pedals with your knees slightly bent to take your weight off the wheels.

Wear light-colored clothing at night. Use a leg light, generator or battery powered light and reflectors or use reflective tape on pedals. BE VISIBLE.

Using your gears: For easier pedaling, use the gear that is most comfortable for the road grade. For longer distances, try raising your cadence (pedal speed) to 65-75 revolutions per minute or higher. Practice by riding in a slightly lower gear than you normally would.
(On 10-speed bikes, avoid riding with the chain on the inside chain wheel in front, and the outside sprocket in back. This combination causes excessive wear on the chain.)

If your gears don't work properly, fix them yourself or have them fixed. Most gear problems are easy to fix and inexpensive too.

Bicycle Maintainence

Here are some tips on bicycle maintenance from the Bicycle Repair Collective:

FREQUENTLY

Check tire pressure. Under-inflated tires are damaged easily, and make the bike harder to pedal. Check also for holes, bubbles, imbedded glass, etc. Most ten-speeds (27" by 1½" tires) should have 70-75 lbs. of pressure and most three-speeds (26" by 1 and three-eighths in. tires) should have 50-55 lbs. of pressure.

The best pumps are hand pumps with built in pressure gauges and most bike shops will let you use theirs. Use gas station air hoses with considerable caution. Their gauges are often inaccurate and they fill bike tires with too much air, too fast, causing frequent explosions. If you have to use a gas station air hose, we suggest that you set the gauge 10 lbs. under the desired pressure and if possible check it with a pocket pressure gauge.

Oil chain frequently. Chain should look wet with oil at all times. Use extra-light-weight oil (WD-40, LPS 1 or 3) on five and ten-speed chains. Oil derailleurs (gear changers) too. Try not to get oil on tires or brake rubbers because oil eats rubber.

ABOUT ONCE A MONTH

Oil three-speed chains, rear hub, three speed trigger, and rusty parts with 20 weight machine oil (sewing machine oil). A well lubricated bike is easier to pedal...lack of lubrication causes damage to parts. If you have to leave a bicycle out in the rain, it should be oiled more frequently. Never use 3-in-1 or other household oils, they gum up the works.

PERIODICALLY

Check brake, gear, bearing adjustments. Check for loose nuts and bolts, especially brake bolt nuts, axle nuts, and fender bolts. Check out rattles and clunks. Go ahead and tinker, it's the only way to learn.

EVERY YEAR OR TWO OR AS NEEDED

Clean and re-grease bearings: Front and rear hubs (except 3-speed rear), bottom bracket (crank bearings), headset (front fork), and pedals. Use a light-weight grease such as Lubriplate.

Grease cables where they pass through cable housing. Use light-weight grease.

"Bicycles are not monstrous machines that only wizards can understand. They are all simple enough that with a little know-how and patience, anyone can work on them. You can do it!...The mechanical mystique is a lie."

Area Food Co-ops

by
E. Patrick McQuaid

By now you know what a food co-op is; if not, you've come to the right place. Co-ops have sprung up in almost every community and the Amherst area is no exception.

Basically, the philosophy behind a food coop is quality food at affordable prices. This marvel is accomplished by purchasing collectively and in bulk and sharing the work load as well as the savings. In exchange for buying food wholesale, members take on various tasks such as purchasing agent, weighing and bagging groceries, or secretarial work. In most co-ops the jobs like bagging or picking up a specific item one week or another are traded back in forth. In smaller co-ops members assign themselves a job and stick to it.

Most co-ops accept food stamps and operate on a pre-order, prepaid basis. Some operate like a storefront.

The following food cooperatives are in the area:

Amherst Food Co-op
24 Churchill Street
(Parish House)
165 Main St.
(Basement, Congregational Church)
Telephone 256-0333

The Amherst Co-op (pre-order) was the first cooperative in this area and since its formation in 1970 several other co-ops have branched out from it.

Distribution is on Wednesdays and Thursdays, but if you're interested you should attend one of their orientation meetings (usually on Wednesday afternoons. Call to be sure).

Work commitment is that each buying unit must provide the co-op with 3 hours of work per 3 week buying period and each buying unit must make a deposit that is refundable upon termination.

Join your Co-op --- TODAY !!!
©1975 MOYLE

The co-op sells in wholesale pluse a ten per cent markup for its members and a 15 per cent markup for non-members. Senior citizens may purchase food at 10 per cent without any work commitment. If you buy in bulk you may order at a members price.

Child care is provided free of charge on the Thursday afternoon distribution period.

Belchertown Co-op
Rte. 9 near Rte. 202
intersection.
Telephone Joann Clade
323-4513

Unlike most co-ops, the Belchertown Co-op offers meat, fish, and cheeses. They are a preorder co-op and supply produce, syrup, honey, breads, grains, oils, dried beans, nuts, and raisins.

You may join this group by filling out an order form and after using the co-op once or twice you are expected to arrange 3¼ hours of work per month. There is a $2.00 building fee and a deposit is required approximately equivalent to the average of three months of purchasing.

Distribution is on Thursday evenings from 6:30 to 9:30. Members who buy in bulk are given a 10 per cent markup. Items range from 10 to 15 per cent and nonmembers are marked up 30 to 40 per cent like regular markets.

Mixed Nuts Co-op

Hampshire College
Greenwich House
Telephone Laurie Beth
Clark, 542-5875

Each membership group must have one member who is in some way connected with Hampshire College. One 2¼ hour work shift per semester is their work requirement. There is a $3 nonreturnable deposit per semester and markup has been only 7 per cent but may rise this semester.

Ordering is done on Tuesday evenings and pickup is on Thursday. They offer hamburger, fish, chicken, dairy products, various vegetables and fruits, breads, grains, and cheeses.

Northampton Food Co-op
First Congregational Church
Main St., Northampton
Telephone 586-4366

The Northampton Co-op has a wide variety of natural foods but they do not strictly buy only natural foods.

The members pay 10 per cent for items and 14 per cent for food purchased through the Amherst Co-op.

Call for membership information.

People's Market
Student Union, UMass
Telephone 545-2060

This is a member of the Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) and is set up like a store front with hours Monday through Friday, 9:30 to 5:30 and on Saturdays from noon to 5:00.

The People's Market carries dairy products, canned goods, some natural foods, and various breads, yogurts and cheeses.

The markup varies from 12 per cent to 18 per cent and is fixed on each item on the shelf. The Market has absolutely no work commitment, no deposit, no special fees. All university people, students and faculty and staff are considered automatically members. Anyone from outside the university will not be excluded from purchasing.

Creative College Cusine

Things to add:
1 can of corn or any canned green vegetable
2 cups cooked rice (rice triples when cooked, so you start out with 2-3 of a cup dry rice)
2 cans vegetable soup (undiluted)
2 cups cooked macaroni (macaroni doubles when cooked, so start out with 1 cup macaroni)
2 cans kidney beans and chili powder to taste whatever else occurs to you...

Paprika

"Baked Papriko Chicken"

Ingredients:
Chicken piece(s)
Special K cereal
(or Rice Krispies, etc.)
salad oil or margarine onion salt
paprika

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. Crush up 2 tablespoons of cereal per piece of chicken in a small bowl with the bottom of a glass. Take each piece of chicken, rub oil or margarine on it, then dip it into cereal until it's coated. Shake a lot of onion salt and paprika on it and bake at 350 degrees in a greased baking pan for about forty minutes (turn it over after 20 minutes).

"15 lb. Broccolli"

Ingredients:
1 package frozen broccolli
(or fresh broccolli, or asparagus)
½ cup plain yogurt
2 tablespoons parmesean cheese

Preheat the oven to 325 degrees, and grease a baking pan (a casserole dish looks better if you have one). Cook the vegetables in ½ cup of salted boiling water for about five minutes (so that they're still a bit firm when tested with a fork). Drain them, and lay them into the baking dish. Spoon the yogurt over them, and the parmesean cheese over that. Bake for about five minutes, or until the cheese starts to brown. This feeds one by itself, or two as a vegetable.

"Very Edible Porkchops"

Ingredients:
two porkchops
flour
salt and pepper
1 can of cream
of mushroom soup

On a plate, measure out 2 tablespoons of flour and season with salt and pepper (and parsley or oregano if you want to). Dip both sides of each porkchop into the flour mixture. Meanwhile, melt 1 tablespoon of margarine into a frying pan put over medium heat. After it's melted, brown the pork chops quickly on each side in the frying pan. Then, pour the soup over the porkchops, cover the pan, and turn the heat down. Let them simmer for about thirty minutes.

These are good with rice, especially brown rice. (If you cook the brown rice, start it when you start the pork chops so they'll be cooked at the same time. To cook 1 cup of brown rice, bring 1 cup of salted water to a boil in a saucepan, add 1-3 cup of brown rice, cover, turn the heat down and cook until the rice is soft and the water has cooked off, about forty minutes.)

The soup idea works equally well with "cube" steak or with chicken, and is fixed the same way. If you feel really creative, you can brown a small, sliced onion along with the meat.

"French Toast"

This is good for breakfast or lunch, or as study break food.

Ingredients:
1 egg
a few grains of salt
about 2 tablespoons of milk
2 teaspoons of sugar
1 teaspoon of cinnamon
4 slices bread
(toast them lightly
if they're soft)

In a small bowl, lightly beat the egg with a fork until it's all the same shade of yellow. Then, add the salt, sugar, cinnamon and milk and stir them all together.

Heat a frying pan over low-medium heat with a tablespoon of margarine in it until the margarine foams. With your fingers, dip the bread on each side into the milk mixture and drop it onto the frying pan. Cook a couple of minutes on each side until lightly browned, turning with a fork or spatula. (Put more margarine in the pan each time you put more bread in.)

Serve with maple syrup, jam or confectioner's sugar. Feeds two.

Note: Try 1 tablespoon of cranberry juice or 1 tablespoon apricot juice or a couple of drops of vanilla instead of the cinnamon sometime.

"Baked Apples"

Useful as dessert or as an accompanyment to pork or for breakfast or for a snack or when you're feeling cold inside.

Ingredients:
apples
sugar cinnamon boiling water
margarine (optional)

Core the apples. Place them in a baking dish. In the center hole of each apple put 1 tablespoon of sugar and a good shake of cinnamon. Cover the bottom of the dish with about an inch of boiling water. Bake at 400 degrees until soft, about thirty minutes. Two or three times while they're baking, spoon the juices over the apples.

Variations: Instead of cinnamon and sugar, you can put a mixture of 1 tablespoon each flour, brown sugar and rolled oats over the apples. Or fill them with 1 tablespoon honey and 1 tablespoon chopped walnuts each.

"Banana Bread"

Should you ever feel moved to make something like a cake, try baking a quick bread. They are very easy to make and store well.

Ingredients:
3 ripe bananas
2 eggs
2 cups sifted flour
¾ cup of sugar
1 teaspoon of salt
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ cup chopped walnuts
(optional)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a large bowl, mash the bananas. Add the eggs (which were first beaten together in a small bowl until light yellow in color). Stir in the flour, sugar, salt and baking soda (and nuts, if desired) and beat together well.

Pour into a greased loaf pan (or an 8" x 8" baking pan) and bake 1 hour at 350 degrees.

"The Classic Grilled Cheese Sandwich"

This receipe is indeed a classic — an old standby and a friend in need.

For each sandwich use 2 slices of bread and 2 slices of American (or Swiss or sliced up Jarlsburg) cheese. If you have it, add thin slices of tomato, or bacon or mustard to the middle. Toast under a broiler until browned on both sides; or grill in a heated, greased frying pan until browned on both sides.

Non-Traditional Booklet

by
Paul Logue Jr.

Having trouble finding out where the various agencies and organizations are located on campus? Well, it is a lot easier to look up that information in a booklet compiled for non-traditional students.

One of the coordinators of the booklet, Steve Keane, said "people get the run-around too often at the University needlessly. We put this together in order for people to pick it up and find out where various groups, agencies and resources are located, who they can contact in that area and what to expect when they get there."

The booklet should be both interesting and informative to the non-traditional student — the student who has come to the University from somewhere other than high school, Keane said. There are about 8,000 non-traditional students at UMass with the approximate age of 25.

Some 500 copies of the booklet are being printed and will be dropped off at strategic places such as the Registrar's Office, Heads of Residence rooms, Everywoman's Center and Room to Move.

Some facilities to be indexed will be Child Care Centers, centers for add-drop information, special programs (BDIC and UWW), physical education facilities and about 500 other entries.

Keane said the table of contents "will be a grid type with color-coded organization to enable quick and easy reading. Also, everything will be cross-listed so all the functions of a particular group or office are right out front for identification."

Yellow Sun Natural Foods Co-op

23 North Pleasant St.,
Amherst
Telephone 256-8401

As its name implies, the Yellow Sun is concerned with macrobiotic and natural foods. It's a storefront co-op and operates from 9:00 to 6:00 Monday through Thursdays and on Saturdays. On Fridays it is open from 9:00 to 8:00.

Foods such as whole grains, dried beans and seeds, dried fruits, nuts, flowers, herbs, spices, teas, whole grain pastas, juices, beverages, dairy products, cheeses, mild powder, butter, yogurt, nut butters, oils, and honey may be purchased at the Yellow Sun.

Members are required to work 3 hours per month (a buying group consists of 3 adults or fewer) and each group is expected to purchase a $5 stock certificate each year. This money is refundable when a member leaves the co-op.

Every item in the store has two prices; one is a 20 per cent member's markup and the other is a 45 per cent non-member's markup.

Food Stamps for Students

by Jack Flynn

You don't have to be poor or even dishonest to get food stamps this year. Of course, being beat would enhance your chance, and being in debt might make you a sure bet; still, in the last year food stamps have been easier for students to get than ever before.

Food stamps, of course, are coupons used just like money, and can buy food, beverages, plants and seeds to grow food. They cannot purchase alcoholic beverages, tobacco products, pet food or soap and paper products.

Obviously, not everyone is eligible for food stamps. The Department of Public Welfare advises that people may qualify for assistance if they earn low wages, work part time, are unemployed, have high medical or dental bills, receive social security, or are on Public Assistance.

Beyond that, however, there are more specific requirements that must be met. An applicant cannot be claimed by his or her parents as an exemption during the current tax year. Also, an applicant can own one vehicle, with any others considered part of his-her persons resources.

Students living in dorms may apply for food stamps only if they are not already on any type of meal plan.

If an applicant shares a house or an apartment with roommates, he or she may apply as a "household of one." Currently, a single person — a "one person household" in government jargon — can have a maximum "adjusted monthly income" of $215, a figure that is up $19 from 1975's maximum. For a two person household the maximum is now $300, for three $427 and for four $540.

A spokesperson for the Food Stamp Office points out that couples living together may apply in two ways. Each can apply as a separate household, or one person can apply, claiming the other as part of his or her household. A drawback to the second method is that, should the relationship not last, only the person who applied for the stamps will continue to receive them.

If you think you might qualify, you should submit an application to the Food Stamp Office and be ready to document all income and expenses. Applications may be submitted to the UMass Food Stamp Office, located in the basement of Munson Hall, and opening the first week of class. The Northampton Welfare Office, 355 Bridge St., Northampton, will accept your application as will the Greenfield Welfare Office, 31 Federal St., Greenfield.

UHS offers new services

The University Health Services continues its efforts to provide a comprehensive health program for the University community. With the extension of services to student dependents, and to faculty and staff and their dependents through the Valley Health Plan, the Health Services will move another step closer to making the health program a model prepaid health care system. Barry Averill, UHS Director reports that to help students realize optimum physical and emotional well-being in order that they make the most out of their educational experience, will continue to be a major commitment of the staff at the Health Serviies.

The many divisions of UHS continue to provide a comprehensive program, including medical, mental health and dental health care, health education and environmental health and safety surveillance. Special clinics are organized for such services as eye care, cold self care and contraception, among others. Other special services include those of a nutritionist, public health nurse and patient educator.

One new service is pediatrics, including general medical care for acute and chronic illness, well-child check-ups, immunizations, treatment of injuries, evaluation of problems related to growth and development, behavioral problems in children and adolescents, and learning disorders.

An expanded gynecology and obstetric clinic will provide follow-up contraceptive care, general gynecological care, pre and post natal care, problem pregnancy counseling, infertility studies, and referral for genetic counseling. The services are provided by a team of physicians, nurse practitioners, health educators and women's health counselors. Ob-gyn consultants are available when referred by a primary physician. Routine gynecological care is also available from the member's physician-nurse practitioner team in the general medical clinics.

A new patient educator will be working with the clinical staff in developing new programs in such areas as pre-natal education and smoking cessation and will be working with members in delineating other educational priorities.

Mental Health services, in addition to individual consultation, will include couples and family therapy. Mental Health records, as all other medical records, are strictly confidential and can not be released to anyone without the patient's written permission.

A detailed account of UHS programs and how to use them is provided in the new UHS Member Handbook, which will be mailed to all members within a few weeks. In the meantime, if there are questions, call the Health Center at 549-2671. If your dorm or campus group would like an informational session on University Health Services, call the Health Education Office at the same number.

Team approach at Health Center

This fall the Health Services is instituting a new procedure for providing medical care to the University community — the health care "team." Physicians and nurse practitioners will work as primary care teams in assessing and treating health concerns. Depending on medical needs, a patient may see either the nurse practitioner or the physician team member when visiting the Health Center.

Thomas McBride, M.D., UHS Medical Director says, "We hope that this will encourage continuity of care for the patient and frequent and ready consultation between the physician and the nurse practitioner. Patients get to know care providers over the year promoting communication around treatment and prevention of health problems." At least one of the team members will usually be available during regular clinic hours, therefore providing more accessibility for patient care. When necessary, a member of the primary care team will arrange for appropriate referrals for specialty care with UHS specialists.

The physician-nurse practitioner team will encourage the use of appointments, phone-in consultations, preventive care, and health education, according to Diane Smith, Director of Nursing. When feasible, members are encouraged to anticipate health needs and arrange for an appointment. This generally saves time and allows the staff to serve patients more efficiently and sensitively. Appointments can be made during regular clinic hours (8:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday by calling 549-2600).

Each health plan member is encouraged to select a physician-nurse practitioner team with whom she would like to build an ongoing relationship. When making an appointment, a patient may ask for a nurse practitioner or physician that she has previously seen, or have had recommended. If a member would like to discuss any aspect of this process, they might call the UHS Member Advisor, Barbara Estabrook at the Health Center, 549-2671.

The University Health Services exists to serve students and other members of the University community. Students pay for personal health services through their health fee and should have a say in the kind of care and types of services they receive. Therefore, a viable mechanism for consumer involvement is a high priority.

In 1971 the Student Health Advisory Board was established as an organization for consumer involvement. The Board serves as the official liaison between the Health Services and other student organizations, and participates in the planning, implementation and evaluation of the health program, undertaking specific projects as the need arises.

Contributions to program planning and service expansion have included family planning, dental and eye care, DES daughter care, and planning for the care of faculty, staff and dependents through the new HMO (health maintenance organization).

To promote convenient use of the University Health Services, increased van service, emergency parking, review of the grievance procedure and patient advocate services have been established.

One of the most important functions of the Board is the review of the Health Services budget, thus considering priorities for services. This student input is an important factor in determining the health fee, and the scope of the overall health program. The supplemental health insurance plan are also reviewed annually. This past year, the Board reviewed the new pharmacy copayment policy.

Board members and other interested students interview all candidates for professional staff positions, an exchange which allows the applicant to learn more about the needs of our community, and which gives the students a chance to estimate his or her ability and interest in working with students.

Chairpersons this year are Bill Kober and Jim Nesti. Membership on the Board is open to all students who pay the health fee. Voting status is attained by registering with the Board and attending two previous meetings in a semester. Meetings are held approximately twice a month and are announced in the Collegian. The Board always seeks to maintain membership representative of the student body and welcomes those interested in the delivery of health care on campus.

Office of Handicapped Student Affairs

Handicapped Services

by
John G. Silletto

Many services are available to physically disabled students at UMass. According to Paul Appleby, Director of Handicapped Affairs, UMass compares favorably with other New England schools in the quality and quantity of services it offers to handicapped students.

About 400 handicapped students will attend UMass this fall. Most of these students receive some aid from the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission. The Office of Handicapped Student Affairs is available to provide counseling, transportation, and academic assistance to all these students. According to Appleby, his office works mostly with students who have been seriously and permanently disabled. This includes students with visual, hearing, and mobility impairments.

The Handicapped Student Affairs Office usually meets with new handicapped students when they apply to the University. They discuss and explore the possible problems the students might encounter in coming to the University because he or she is handicapped. The student can then make an intelligent decision on whether or not UMass can provide for his-her needs, and the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs can be prepared to assist the student when school begins.

Unfortunately, all UMass buildings were built before state building codes required that all public buildings be completely accessible to handicapped persons. Major modifications are often necessary to remove architectural barriers that limit the independence and mobility of the physically disabled student. Appleby said this situation is improving, however.

The number of wheelchair and other mobility impaired students on campus is increasing. Handicapped persons have found favorable attitudes towards them from the student population, and the fear of vandalism of modifications designed for handicapped students in dorms and buildings has not materialized.

Designs are presently being drawn for extensive modifications of architectural barriers in UMass academic and administrative buildings. The work is being funded by a state grant of $161,000, and actual construction should begin this winter, to be completed next summer.

Presently, Patterson House is the only dorm on campus equipped for persons confined to a wheelchair. There will be five such students living at Patterson this semester. Appleby stated that plans call for modifying Gorman House to provide an on-campus living situation for wheelchair people in Central Area. Modifications in Gorman House could be completed as early as Spring semester, he said.

To provide transportation around campus for permanently handicapped persons as well as persons temporarily disabled by broken legs or sprained ankles, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs operates two vans. The transportation is free to students. The vans are equipped with hydraulic lifts for wheelchairs. They were purchased by the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission and are maintained by the Dean of Students' Office, and driven by work-study students.

Handicapped Student Affairs will also intercede with the Scheduling Office on behalf of the wheelchair student who wishes to take a class in a building that is completely inaccessible to them, such as third floor Machmer Hall. Appleby said that the Scheduling Office has been cooperative in rescheduling rooms when such a situation existed.

Merle Ryan is the coordinator of Deaf Services at the University. These services include interpreters, lecture notes, tutoring and a caption film series that features current movies with subtitles every week.

Ryan's office provides interpreters to deaf students at a cost of $750 per semester. This fee is usually paid for the student by the Massachusetts Rehabilitation Commission, Appleby said.

Appleby said he would like to be able to find qualified interpreters who could be hired with work-study funds, but to date that has not been possible. This could help reduce costs for some deaf students. Student interpreters are presently paid approximately $3 an hour.

While there will be only one student on campus who is legally blind this semester, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs does provide services for the blind. About 50 per cent of all text books can be found on tape. When tapes are not available, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs provides listings of available readers, both volunteer and paid. According to Appleby, the UMass library braille collection is limited to little more than an encyclopedia and a dictionary.

The library does have a closed-circuit television system to assist partially-sighted students in reading. In conjunction with the Commission for the Blind, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs can also arrange mobility orientation of the campus for blind students.

The Office of Handicapped Student Affairs attempts to make the University accessible to physically handicapped persons who might otherwise not be able to attend school here.

Whitmore Administration Offices

by
Claudia Reimer

Whitmore Hall is the large building with a ramp on its campus side, located at the edge of the University. It is positioned in between a parking lot and the Hagus Mall horseshoe, with one side on Massachusetts Avenue. It is inside this building that most of the administrative workings of UMass take place. Although most of the special programs and CASIAC (the College of Arts and Sciences) are located in other buildings, the second floor of Whitmore is the place to start for aid in any problems involving money, financial aid, schedules, grades, transcripts, exchanges, housing, and records.

Upon entering Whitmore from the ramp on the campus side, there is a lobby. This is the second floor. Immediately to the left is a series of windows and tellers. This is the Bursar's Office.

BURSAR

The Bursar's Office cashes checks if presented with a valid I.D. card. A student can put money on deposit here, like a bank account, but with no interest. Scholarship and excess financial aid money is processed through here and would be picked up from this office. The Bursar also handles any problems in fee bills, payment, and short term loans. In short the Bursar's Office processes anything to do with money except book loan and lab fee payments which are handled in the Campus Center.

Walking clockwise around the second floor, the next office is the Registrar.

REGISTRAR

The Office of the Registrar processes all changes in address, major, courses, credit overload or underload. During the semester, it is the place to go for questions on schedules and grades. A record of the original grades are kept in the registrar.

The Registrar is also the place to sign up for the pass-fail course option and after 14 days the drop-W option. Five College forms and information are available in the CASIAC Office (E-20 Machmer Hall) but the forms must be submitted to the Registrar. This also includes anyone wishing to audit a class.

RECORDS AND TRANSCRIPTS

These offices have little to do with Freshmen as they deal with past semesters, however, the Records office does hold High School transcripts and S.A.T. scores.

ADMISSIONS

The Admissions Office deals mostly with applications to UMass from high school students, but it can be used as a starting place to solve problems or questions as it has many resources and can be used as a place of reference.

FINANCIAL AID

The Financial Aid office supervises all Aid, Scholarships, and Work Study Allotments. It is the place to apply for assistance, forms are attained and returned to this Office.

HOUSING

Students are assigned to a dormitory at first but any changes or problems are managed by the Housing Office. After September 7th, if a student assigned to a dorm does not arrive their space is deleted so that if another student is dissatisfied with their housing they can transfer. The transfer must be worked out with the permission of both heads of residence before taking it to the Housing Office. The Housing Office only handles the administrative end of the change.

Changes in rooms assignments can be made during the first month of the semester. The Housing Office does not anticipate any triples this year or problems in changing rooms. Students are permitted to live off-campus in the following circumstances; Seniors, commuting from the home of a parent, married, veteran, or a special exemption granted by the Housing Office which is attained by a personal letter and documentation as to why it is necessary to live off campus.

OTHER FACILITIES

The International Programs Office, which handles most of the UMass exchange programs, and The Veterans Affairs Office, which provides aid in many capacities for Veterans, are the last Offices on the second floor, at opposite ends of the building.

Downstairs is a cafeteria and around the corner, The Schedule Office. The Schedule Office does the actual administrative work of scheduling students into classes and classes into buildings. All the problems involving a student's schedule are handled between this office and the Registrar.

"A student should have a high tolerance for frustration the first couple of weeks of school," said Rob Brooks, Assistant Dean of Admissions. "They can't let the first obstacle throw them." The key to functioning within Whitmore is "to ask for help." "Picture a city of 20,000 people with a turnover rate of 20,000 people a year. A student must ask for help, either academic or personal, and give feedback to the people administrating. Do not be intimidated by titles, ask questions, be patient and carry a lot of no. 2 pencils in your pocket!"

28 STORIES
(COUNT 'EM)

by
E. Patrick McQuaid

The great red brain rises above the campus, its reflection dominates the small pond, its shadow reaches out in immeasurable proportions. This is the Umass Library. The 28 story brick and book structure is, according to Guinness, the world's tallest library but it doesn't stop with the highest study hall in Amherst. Attached to this great brain is an intricate nervous system that reaches out not only throughout the campus, but across the entire five-college area.

Located on the second floor of the Morrill Science Center is the Biological Sciences Library for biological and geological research.

Engineering, chemistry, mathematics, water resources, computer science, wood technology and other related materials are to be found on the second floor of the Graduate Research Center in the Physical Sciences Library.

The Music Library, a non-circulating collection of thematic indexes, scores, and recordings, is housed in the Fine Arts Center in room 149.

The five-colleges jointly operate the Hampshire InterLibrary Center (HILC), a collection of frequently used research materials located in the basement of the Amherst College Library. These materials circulate only among faculty and graduate students but are open for consultation by all members of the five-college academic community.

UMass students and faculty have the same direct borrowing privileges at all the main Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Hampshire College libraries as they do at the UMass Library.

The Library system as well as the University itself should be considered the greatest resource that we as students can possess. If there is one thing we learn at UMass, or any college for that matter, it should be how to take advantage of what is at hand.

More than a research center, the library offers us a form of entertainment that is vastly different from any other experience on campus. The library staff has invited us not only to come and learn how to use the library, but also how to enjoy it. Retracing historical events through microfilmed newspapers or scanning foreign periodicals on a rainy day can prove to be a memorable, and often repeated occasion.

> "A great university deserves a great library. A mediocre one does not. It is as simple and crucially important as that."
> Frederick S. Troy
> Professor Emeritus of English on dedicating the new library at the Amherst campus, University of Massachusetts, October 19, 1974

CATALOG INFORMATION

The Library system's main-card catalog (main floor) is divided into two sections:

Author and Title Catalog:
Contains cards for names of persons and agencies considered to be authors of publications. Most works also have title cards in this catalog; periodicals are listed here by title and also in the Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings.

Subject Catalog:
Contains cards indicating the subject areas of materials. To find the exact subject headings used, consult the Library of Congress List of Subject Headings, located on tables near the card catalog.

Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings:
Periodicals in the UMass system and in other major collections in the Valley are listed alphabetically here by title, with locations, call numbers and volumes held. The librarians at the Reference Desk will gladly provide assistance in using these catalogs and in locating other items, such as government publications which are not fully listed.

BORROWING MATERIALS

How to Borrow a Book
Identify the publication from the entry in the card catalog. Note the call number from the upper left-hand corner of the card and go directly to the stacks or to the special location indicated. Present the book with your ID card at the Circulation Desk on the first floor. Books may also be charged out at the second floor Circulation office, which handles renewals and requests for books not on the shelves.

Loan Period
Books circulate for two to four weeks. They may be renewed in person or by phone at the University Library from which they were borrowed, unless they have been requested by another borrower. Periodicals do not circulate.

Recalls
Books are subject to recall after two weeks if requested by another reader, and at any time if needed for Reserve.

Reserve Books
Reserve materials circulate for time periods varying from two hours to three days. They must be returned to the Reserve Desk on the second floor.

Book Returns
Books may be returned to the library from which they were borrowed or to the Main Library. There are book deposit boxes near the main entrance and on the west side of the building: do not use these to return Reserve books.

RESOURCES AND SERVICES

Archives
Located on the 25th floor, contains a collection of material relating to the University of Massachusetts and several groups of personal and historical manuscripts.

Audiovisual Department
Located in Goodell Building. In addition, the main Library houses an audiovisual reserve room on the fifth floor, for course-related materials, and the necessary viewing and listening equipment.

Government Documents
The Documents collection on the 21st floor houses official publications of the United States, United Nations and Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Most of these materials are not listed in the main card catalog, but are accessible through special indexes.

Interlibrary Loan
For faculty and graduate students engaged in research, the Interlibrary Loan service obtains materials not available in the UMass Library system. Undergraduates may also use it for materials in the Valley area.

Maps
A collection of approximately 80,000 sheet maps, geological and topographic, demographic and historical, is in Room 269 of the Morrill Science Center.

Microforms
Microtext copies of newspapers, government archives, and many other types of Reference Dept Services

The main function of the Reference Department is to facilitate access to the University Library and its collections through helping individual users to find the materials and the information they need; the Department also serves as a referral point to other libraries and information services.

Reference librarians are on duty at the Reference and Information Desk on the Main Level of the University Library whenever the building is open for service, with the exception of hours after 10:00 p.m. (6:00 p.m. on Saturday).

The reference staff is prepared to give information on library holdings, services, and policies. (Readers will be referred to other departments or service desks for interpretation of policies not administered by the Reference Department). They will also provide answers to specific questions from materials in the reference collection if the search is not too time consuming. The accuracy of answers cannot be guaranteed, although every effort will be made to use the most reliable and up-to-date information available.

The Department will provide information to telephone inquirers from library records or from materials in the reference collection. If the question is a complicated one and difficult to handle over the telephone the caller will usually be encouraged to come to the library in person. Checking of library holdings is limited to a few items. It is the department's policy that service to readers who come to the library takes precedence over service to telephone callers and an inquirer may be asked to wait or to call back if there are people waiting for help at the desk.

Apart from the "quick reference" information service described above, searching for materials and information will ordinarily take the form of providing suggestions concerning likely approaches and sources rather than providing the information itself. The amount of time that can be devoted to the individual inquirer may vary depending upon how busy it is at the reference desk and how many staff members are available to help. Students beginning work on a term paper or similar project may wish to make an appointment with a reference librarian for a conference on how to make best use of library resources as this way more time can be devoted to an individual.

Requests for books listed on order slips in the card catalog should be made at the Reference and Information Desk. If the book has been received, arrangements will be made to have it ready for use within several days; if not received, a "hold" will be placed on it for the reader. Reference staff will attempt to locate other in-process material and make it available for use.

General orientation tours of the University Library are offered several times daily at the beginning of each semester and once a week thereafter. Tour schedules are posted on a bulletin board in the entrance lobby of the University Library building. Arrangements may also be made at the Reference and Information Desk for special tours if the posted times are not convenient.

Formal instruction in the use of library records, bibliographies and other references sources relevant to a particular course or a particular subject is also available. Instructors may apply for such class instruction at the Reference and Information Desk or may call the Instructional Services Librarian (545-0150) for an appointment.

Because of staff limitations it is not usually possible for the reference staff to prepare bibliographies against library holdings. Reference staff will provide advice and assistance to users who are compiling and checking such bibliographies.

Requests for interlibrary loans from other libraries should be made at the Reference and Information Desk. Reference librarians will write letters of introduction to other libraries when the resources of this library have been exhausted and interlibrary loan is not appropriate. A letter of introduction does not guarantee admission to another library; it is merely a request for a courtesy which the other library has a right to refuse. Letters to other libraries or services asking for information not available here will also be written when it is felt that the information may be more easily obtained this way; generally, it is preferable for the reader to make the request directly.

The Reference Department has access to a large number of bibliographical data bases in various subject fields and trained staff members will conduct searches; information on available data bases, costs, etc., may be obtained at the Reference and Information Desk.

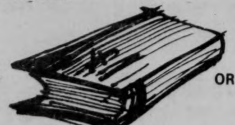
Library fines defined

Effective 15 October 1975, the University Libraries will resume collection of monies owed for overdue charges. The fine amount will be 25 cents per day, per book. On October 7, 1,255 (12 per cent) of the books currently charged out in the computer file were more than eight weeks overdue. The patrons having these items received an overdue notice at two weeks and a Bursar's bill at four weeks, yet the books have not been returned or renewed; so further action is warranted. Also, approximately 20,000 books in the non-computer file have not been returned for periods of two months to two years. We believe the inactivity of the fine system has resulted in this unfortunate circumstance.

PLEASE, RETURN



OR RENEW PROMPTLY

Any NON-RESERVE book may be renewed by telephone, by mail, or in person whenever the Library is open. The fine will be stopped the day the book is renewed. All bills will be paid at the Bursar's office; however, we will be available for any questions, corrections, errors, or any other problems encountered.

Alcohol education to continue

The University Health Services' Alcohol Education Project has been funded for its second program year.

The Project will continue to work toward its goal of promoting a campus environment which is conducive to responsible alcohol use and which discourages irresponsible use.

The Project has outlined several approaches it will take to help meet its goal. The first is an attempt to increase the positive uses of alcohol, which includes encouraging students to drink in pleasant, responsible settings, and to give support to their friends who either don't drink at all, or who don't feel like drinking at the moment.

Other approaches are designed to help decrease some negative effects of drinking. Vandalism, belligerant behavior, driving under the influence, physical injury, and physiological and psychological dependence on alcohol: These are all behaviors which do not have to accompany alcohol use, but which often do, to the detriment of life quality for both individuals and for the campus community as a whole.

Last year the Project focused much of its effort on residential areas, as the dormitory system is already organized in such a fashion as to make it easier to reach than commuter groups. This past spring, students working for the Project began to contact and develop programs for those off-campus groups that were interested, and will continue those efforts this fall.

The Alcohol Education Project has developed several approaches designed to start students thinking about responsible alcohol use. These include such things as posters and pamphlets, as well as small group discussions. Staff members have been involved in counselor training sessions as well as facilitating workshops for general groups of students. Topics for discussion have varied from Alcohol and the Family, to How to Help Someone with a Problem, to Values Clarification, to Alcohol and Sex Roles.

The Project is interested in working with student groups to design and implement programs which fit the needs of specific populations. You can get more information by calling the Health Center (549-2671), and asking for E.T. Mellor or Evelyn Duston in the Alcohol Education Office.

Bicycle Repair

Your brakes will work better if the wheels are straight and the rims don't have "blips" on them.

If your bike pulls to one side, your front fork may be bent. You should have it straightened: a straight-riding bike is safer in traffic, and is less tiring to ride over long distances.

Don't leave your bike unlocked outside, even for a minute, even if you are "keeping your eye on it". It's awfully hard to catch someone when you're on foot and they're on your bike.

Be aware of the limitations of your lock. Chains can be cut with bolt cutters even if they're very heavy and expensive. Cable locks can be cut with bolt cutters, but they're light and inexpensive. They're good if you're in a store or restaurant, watching your bike (even an expensive one) through the window. If you have to lock your bike for longer periods of time, specially designed bolt cutter resistant bicycle locks are best.

Lock your bike properly. Lock frame and both wheels, if possible, to a stationary object that bike and lock cannot be lifted from.

Tools, etc.: Carry at least a patch kit, tire irons, and a small (6") adjustable wrench for emergency on-the-road repairs.

BASS 100'S.
WE BUILD 'EM TOUGH SO YOUR FEET DON'T HAVE TO BE.

Bass 100's are built for hustlin', bikin', joggin', hikin', or just plain getting around from class to class.

And they'll come through it looking as great as the day you put them on.

That's because we don't skimp. We use only quality leather. Durable and natural gum rubber soles for a cushy, bouncy walk.

Once you put yourself in our shoes, you won't want to take them off. Because Bass 100's baby your feet. Whatever you do outside, the ride is smooth and comfortable inside.

And Bass 100's match your every casual fashion. They're the most versatile shoes we ever soled. Sporty and stylish with whatever you wear.

So kick up your heels and step on the Bass. Bass 100's. The shoes that stand up to you.

Five College

funded in the past include: a Roman Baroque Festival, a symposium on San Francisco and the Arts, an Irish Studies series, and a New England Conference on Environment and Behavior.

The Massachusetts Review

A journal of literature, the arts and public affairs, the Massachusetts Review is a quarterly published with the cooperation of the five Valley institutions. Several of MR's special sections became books, a recent one being a double issue on women whose contributors included Bella Abzug, Anais Nin and Angela Davis, as well as members of the five college community. In addition, the Massachusetts Review publishes fine art reproductions

Five College Radio

WFCR (88.5 FM) is a professional radio station broadcasting from the University. Supported by funds from the five institutions, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the federal government, and contributions from listeners, it has greatly expanded its operations in recent years. (See W.F.C.R. article elsewhere in this issue of the Collegian.)

Five College Union List of Films

This catalog of film holdings in the Valley is the prototype for a complete listing of film resources at all five colleges.

Five College Calendar

Every month, a calendar of five college events is published and distributed to all five campuses. It lists the numerous offerings in lectures, films, art exhibits, theater productions, concerts, and special programs occuring on all of the campuses.

Five College Newsletter

The Newsletter, which contains current information on five college services, news of recommendations and decisions by five college groups, and details on activities of interest to the Valley community, is published quarterly by the Coordinator's Office.

Five College Charter Flights

Inexpensive and reliable charter flights to Europe are organized for members of the five colleges by the Director of International Programs at the University. One flight is scheduled for the winter vacation and another for the summer vacation each year.

Registry of Workers

A registry of people looking for work is maintained by Ruth M. Beebe in the Coordinator's Office as a resource to the institutions and others in search of individuals with specialized background and training.

Get with it...

by

Many students are content to go to class, do some partying, and with luck get out of here in four or five years with a college degree, if not an education. Every now and then, though, some people get a suspicion that there is more to know about this University than where the Bursar's Office is. Every day, decisions are made affecting the cost of going to school, the quality of a UMass education, the way people have to live their lives, even how much a pitcher of beer in the B-Wall is going to cost. The amount of influence students have over these decisions is limited, at least in part, to how much they know about what's going on, and how much pressure they can organize.

The Student Government here is more than a training ground for future bureaucrats. People of every conceivable interest find themselves working through the student government because they want to improve the things they care about. People who never wanted to have anything to do with government of any kind find out that there's a lot more to student government on this campus than parliamentary procedure.

Through the Student Senate, the Student Government Association distributes more than $1 million every year for student services and activities. Every undergraduate pays a $55.00 Student Activities Tax, which the Senate uses to support student-operated activities such as student newspapers, radio stations, and other media projects; a free public transit service; free legal help for any student; support services for Third World student groups; free alcohol and drug counseling; a student-run academic program; organizing support to help students gain control of their lives; a resource center for campus clubs and organizations; and activities in each residential area sponsored by Area Governments.

Senators are elected from the residential areas in the fall, with each dormitory apportioned at least one senator. Commuting students, and students living in the Greek system, elect their senators at-large. You don't have to be an upperclassperson, or a political science major, or an honors student to run for the Senate. If you can get twenty-five people in your dorm or area to sign nomination papers, then you're on the ballot. Elections are held a month after school starts in order to allow new students to become familiarized, and there will be notification in the Collegian concerning nomination deadlines. For more information, contact the Student Senate office, 420 Student Union, or call 545-0341.

Elections will also be held, on dates to be determined within each area, for membership on the Area Governments. Each Area Government receoves almost $10.00 for every person living in the area from the Student Senate, to spend on activities of benefit to the people of the area. In the past, the Area Governments have sponsored colloquia programs, concerts, Spring Days, and other social programming.

There are many ways of getting involved without running for elective office. The SGA President, elected in the Spring, appoints students to dozens of boards and committees all over campus, dealing with almost every conceivable area of interest. There are student positions on boards concerned with everything from Fine Arts to Pet Policy, and interested people to work on them are always needed. The Office of the President, 430 Student Union, 545-2129, has more information on appointive positions.

The Student Judiciary and Attorney General's Office also provide an opportunity for people to get involved without putting their names on a ballot. Cases arising within the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) system are tried before student judges, and the cases are argued by student advocates. Student judges are appointed by the Student Senate and the Area Governments, and more information can be obtained from the Clerk of Courts, 428B Student Union, 545-0716. Any student who wishes may become a student advocate, and should contact the Attorney General, also at 428B Student Union.

Student governments everywhere have many problems, not the least of which is that they can be, and frequently are, ignored by the college administration. In response to that problem, the Student senate several years ago set up the Student Organizing Project, charged with attempting to establish a Union of Students with the legal right to collectively bargain with the University on issues of importance to students.

The Project is working to help set up union councils in academic departments, living areas, and areas of communiiy interest. To get more information on the Project and council organizing, drop in at 426 Student Union, or call 545-2415.

The University often seems a confusing place, but it is possible to begin to understand what makes it work. There is work to be done on behalf of students in every department and every office of the University, work that will only get done if people will take some time, meet some people, and see what they can learn.

...affirm yourself

by
Anne E. Thorkelson,
Affirmative Action Coordinator for the SGA

What is Affirmative Action? Some say it's "reverse discrimination". Others believe it to be a costly liberal sham designed to mask the real problems of racism and sexism. Some, who would like to believe in it, see it as a law about as effective as the one which prevents smoking in public places — nobody's going to enforce it.

It is actually a concept which embodies a series of laws, requirements and regulations all aimed at eliminating discrimination in employment and education on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin. Unlike the smoking law, which merely prohibits without stopping, Affirmative Action requires employers, administrators and admissions people to make active, positive efforts to recruit, hire, train and promote members of discriminated against groups, i.e. third world peoples and women. The idea behind these efforts is this: through affirmative action the rut of neutrality toward the issue of discrimination will be avoided in favor of an aggressive commitment to changing the traditionally white and-or male status quo.

Schools and work places are now required to have as many third world people and women in them as there are in the general population. For example, UMass, in all its departments (administration, student body, and staff) should be composed of the same racial and sexual percentages of people as there are in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Underutilization is a term used when there are fewer minorities or women in a given area as would be expected given their numbers in the larger population. Proper representation is a key issue. To insure advancement toward that representation, employers are required to conduct extensive outreach programs, in an attempt to find qualified minority and women applicants, without excluding any qualified white and-or male applicants. Only in this way can real equal opportunity be assured.

Every department at UMass is required to have an Affirmative Action Statement and Guidelines which includes a Statement of Commitment, a statistical breakdown of staff by race, sex and salary, a review of hiring and promotional trends and a plan or program for further development and improvement, which identifies problem areas as well as successes.

The Student Government Association's Affirmative Action statement will be available for public review in the Fall, and can be found in the Student Senate Office, rm. 420 of the Student Union. The SGA's Affirmative Action Officer can be reached at the same office for questions, grievances, or just general discussion.

In order to make sure that Affirmative Action is being upheld where it affects students most, an A.A. Committee on Sexism in the Campus Center-Student Union has been founded over the summer. The Committee plans to deal primarily with employment, programming, resources and services as they relate to women. Upgrading the status and pay of women's work, getting women's bands into the Bluewall and Hatch, establishing baby-sitting services and watchdogging administrative policies are just a few of the things planned for this year.

All this work can't be done by just a few people, we need your energy to make it go. If you're interested, please give us inp[illegible] time. We'll be working out o[illegible] University Women office, rm. [illegible] Campus Center starting in [illegible] middle of Sept.

Avoiding the costly lube job

by
Paul Logue Jr.

Is your car busted, boiling over, sick and dying? What can you do to avoid getting ripped-off by the local gas station who knows that you have never been under the hood of your car?

There is a place you can go to get in touch with your car and learn to do what is needed to maintain the vehicle. That place is the Automobile Repair Co-op, located on Rt. 66 in Northampton, a mile from Rt. 9 and at the fork in the road across from the Smith Riding Academy. The phone number is 584-7098 and they don't mind answering questions about problems you are having with your heap.

The Co-op is operated by people who are interested in helping themselves and others get back in touch with their vehicles and working on them with the help and guidance of expert and friendly mechanics. The cost of joining the co-op is $15-yr. or $5-a quarter year. This entitles you to space (depending on the schedule), tools, and advice for a dollar an hour. Mechanics can work with you for $5-hr. Dropping off your vehicle to be worked on cost $10-11hr.

The garage is equipped with 2 hydraulic lifts, a front end pit, has four overhead truck doors, is heated for winter work and can accommodate about 10 cars at a time.

It all started at the beginning of the year with an idea and a lot of initiative from a few people working on Saturday afternoons getting their own vehicles running well. One of the men who has worked from the beginning is Randy, who says, "We started out small with about 30 members paying dues and teaching informal classes to raise capital for tools. Then trying to find out a location was the next battle, with zoning and neighborhood obstacles, which finally ended with our present location on Pleasant St. But now we have over a hundred members and a lot of cars sitting around taking up valuable working space, and it's time to move. We desperately need a large five-bay garage, or a barn with plenty of field space to expand and improve our service to the community."

Randy wants the co-op to expand and evolve at a normal pace in a step by step method. "We have been getting classes together for people to learn about their cars. There are also women's groups who meet regularly in order to transcend the mystique of the garage as a male-oriented workshop. We are well aware of the capitalist profit motive of keeping the women ignorant of their own cars so they will get ripped-off at the local stations for unneeded repairs at high labor cost," Randy explained.

While working on his 1962 Volvo, repacking his wheel bearings, Arnie Zarkessler responded, "Within its expectations, this place is successful. People need technology on the level of their own vehicles and we are accomplishing that."

A woman who is working on her 1970 Gremlin is trying to handle her care herself. She said, "I change the transmission mount, put in grease fittings and grease, a rubber bushing on the tie-rod end, and changed the oil." This is only my first week, although I had some experience from Everywomen's Center. You get in there and get dirty. That is the whole trick. Most women are easy targets in the traditional garage for rip-offs, since women have been discouraged in doing this sort of thing throughout high school. But the men here are very sensitive to the issue and are very helpful in giving advice and then letting us do it ourselves."

The yard is located with junk cars which eventually find their way to the scrap heap. In turn for the junk business, the dealer allows them to get various parts for free in return for the valuable scrap metal the Co-op had donated. One member of the Co-op calls this a sort of symbiosis.

Some of the tools are really expensive but are available to the members and the people who need the help. "It was great when we first got this off the ground because people would come by and let us borrow their tools in order to function until we could raise enough money to buy the community tools." "We're performing a public service to the community and we really like working in an easy social atmosphere.

The three-bay garage walls are adorned with posters of the July 4 Coalition at Philadelphia, greasy finger marks, a sign asking all to "clean up after themselves" and a boycott scab grapes sign. Everybody is cordial and willing to help you out in any situation.

Are you a clean car buff?

The aesthetic upkeep as well as the mechanical maintenance of your vehicle will obviously increase its resale value. A shiny new, showroom look will add distinction to a well tuned motor and keeping it that way needn't be a great expense.

Aside from any extensive damage to the vehicle's body, the original luster will stay with your car or truck through normal road wear with a periodic cleaning and waxing which can total less than $1.50 annually. A minor expense considering the price of repainting it.

If you seldom wash the vehicle you may want to begin sponging down the body in mild detergent with clear, lukewarm water. Always use soft sponges and rags to avoid scratching the surface. If rust has accumulated on bumpers, wheel covers, or chrome, steel wool can be used with care not to harm the paint.

After rinsing, a quick spin around the block will air-dry most of the car and clean, soft rags will wipe off any excess water.

Along with the regular dirt, you'll find that bugs, bird droppings, and tar have added to the auto's atrophy add you'll want to rub these off. A twelve ounce can of tar remover usually runs for about $1.20; the average car may use less than 40 cents if it's average dirt.

After you've applied this you'll want to remove it; as well as any soap film or old wax. You'll need a polishing, not rubbing, compound; they're too abrasive. Dupont manufactures such a compound for $1.70 of which you may probably use only 50 cents worth in one year.

When you finish applying this you may still find some oxidized paint in places. A second coat, according to directions on the can, will remove this. Some areas of the vehicle will oxidize more than others producing various colour tones. Places such as near the hood may need even a third coating to ensure the colours match all over.

Immediately after you've cleaned all of the paint, follow the directions on the can and begin to wax. Don't wax in strong sunlight or in cool weather and only do small sections at a time. Apply the substance, rub it in, and wipe it off before moving to another section of the vehicle.

Areas where rust has been removed will need special attention and so will areas that get over abused under normal road and weather conditions such as the wheel openings.

If you're interested in protecting your work for a full year, you'll want to purchase a hard, non-silicone wax. Most combination cleaner-waxes won't hold up after a good rain or washing and they usually contain silicone to give the car a "fish-eye effect". The shine will suffice but the silicone will cause some areas of the paint to brighten while fading others. You will want a shine and colour tone that matches all over.

If you're a real auto wax "buff" you'll also want to invest in a professional, industrial wax that can be obtained at a professional car waxing shop. It may not be cheap, but you'll get it at cost as it's probably not marketed or advertised, but you'll use only about 50 cents of it in one year.

In total you'll invest more hours than you will dollars in one entire day-long stint. From wash to wax it's a tiring job but a worthwhile investment.

Ed. Note — UMass students Patricia Callahan, Monica Sheridan, and Dave Weisberg, a Hampshire student, conducted a survey of Pioneer Valley Banks in April for the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG).

Students in the Five-College area will have some help in choosing banks, thanks to a MassPIRG pamphlet entitled, "A Guide to Banking in the Pioneer Valley."

The guide is based on a survey of local banks done by three Five-College students.

The survey (see chart) details the checking, saving and Negotiable Order of Withdrawal (NOW) accounts offered at the dozen banks and credit unions in the Amherst, Northampton, Easthampton and South Hadley area.

The survey was done in an effort to guide students in choosing a bank by considering some of the more important factors, according to Monica Sheridan, UMass student who worked on the survey of MassPIRG.

A look at the comparison chart of local banks reveals that there is a variety of interest rates, accounts and charges offered.

The three types of accounts considered in the pamphlet are checking, saving and NOW accounts. According to the MassPIRG guide, a checking account allows a person to pay bills with checks instead of cash, but pays no interest on the money deposited in the account.

Savings accounts pay the depositor interest but require the depositor to withdraw money from the account in person, according to the guide.

The pamphlet points out that a convenient account is the NOW-account, which combines the features both checking and savings accounts. NOW accounts permit depositors to earn interest and write checks at the same time, according to Sheridan.

Following is a glossary of banking terms that go along with the comparison chart:

CHECKING ACCOUNTS A checking account provides easy access to one's money, but does not pay interest. There are different types of checking accounts, each with certain charges.

OVERDRAFT CHARGES A charge for each check drawn on an account that does not have sufficient funds behind it.

MINIMUM BALANCE A minimum amount of money that some banks require the depositor to keep in her-his savings or checking account.

INTEREST RATES Interest rates differ between banks and savings institutions, and they differ in the notice required before a depositor can withdraw funds.

STOP PAYMENT CHARGES A charge for writing a check which later a person decides she-he does not want the bank to honor.

CHECK CLEARING The approximate number of business days required for a bank to make sure that a check deposited in Savings or NOW account has sufficient funds behind it. Prior to the check's clearance, one cannot draw upon the money.

Take advantage of the chart and compare for yourself.

Former dean Allen to become teacher

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

Former Dean of the School of Ed, Dwight W. Allen has returned to his teaching duties at UMass after a two-year sabbatacal in Africa.

Allen resigned in January, 1975 in the wake of a controversy concerning missing federal funds in the School of Ed. During the summer, former UMass administrator Cleo Abraham was convicted for embezzlement in the same case.

Allen's return has caused "little if any reaction so far from faculty members and staff in the school," said a spokesperson for the School of Ed.

Allen will be teaching two graduate courses and one undergraduate course this semester to fulfill a post-sabbatical obligation, and to maintain the full tenured professor's salary of $33,560. in compliance with University regulations.

For two years, Allen has been working as a UNESCO educational policy adviser in Lesetho, Africa, while from October 1974 through October 1975 he was receiving half his $38,822 a-year salary.

University regulations require a professor returning from sabbatical to teach at least the following two semesters or else reimburse the University for the sabbatical salary.

A University spokesperson predicted yesterday that Allen will merely fulfill his obligations and find a job elsewhere after this year. Allen was unavailable for comment.

The results of an audit earlier this year indicated that some $364,000 in federal grants may have been misused at the school while Allen was dean. Auditors have urged the U.S. Office of Education to request the University to return the funds.

Grant management procedures have since been tightened according to school officials.

This past summer, Marie Fantini, Dean of the School of Ed at the State University of New York at New Paltz was chosen as the new Dean of the UMass School of Ed.

Since the Allen resignation, the position has been filled by Louis Fischer and current Acting Dean Grace Craig, who was formally assistant Dean of the Ed school.

Dwight W. Allen, the former Dean of the School of Education will begin teaching in the school.

Fall semester lengthened; now equal to spring term

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

While most college students across the state are still enjoying the last days of summer, classes begin today at UMass.

The fall semester has been increased a week, to 14 weeks, to become the same length as the spring semester.

"Students here were getting ripped off academically with only 13 weeks in the fall semester," said Anthony Borton, associate professor in the Department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences.

"By starting classes early this year, we are attempting to bring both the fall and spring semesters into harmony," he said.

"This will clearly be a major problem for students with jobs through Labor Day," he added. "Many will have to suffer financially by losing a week of work."

Borton said there was an overriding concern by the faculty in 1974 concerning the shorter fall semester, especially for science courses with labs. He was then chairman of the Faculty Senate space and calendar committee, which outlines each semester's schedule two years in advance.

After considerable discussion, Borton said the committee, consisting of three students and five faculty members, decided to begin classes before Labor Day this fall and next September. He said the holiday falls later than usual these two years.

Gordan A. Wise, associate professor in Zoology, said students taking science courses during the fall semester last year received "diluted" class material during labs.

"They lost valuable training which could not be made up because we just didn't have the time," he said.

According to a spokesperson from the State College Systems in Boston, the national average semester length for universities and colleges is 15 weeks.

Collegian moving

Your student newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, is in the process of moving its offices.

At present the news and editorial offices, which include sports, Black Affairs, women's news, Below the Salt, photo and the editors' offices are located on the first level of the Campus Center (below the concourse level). The new Collegian complex is located in Room 101.

The business and graphics offices of the Collegian will remain in Room 404 second floor of the Student Union Building for at least one more week. All advertising will be accepted there.

The graphics office will be moving to our new location this Friday. The business office will move Friday, Sept. 10, completing the entire move. The Collegian's telephone number will remain the same, 545-3500.

Because of the complexity of moving a newspaper office, such as installing a plumbing system for our darkroom, and moving telephone lines to our new offices, the Collegian staff is striving to serve you despite many inconveniences.

For instance, our photo facilities are temporary until a more permanent plumbing system is installed. Telephones in our new office will not be in service for another week or so. If you need to contact the Collegian's new editorial offices, messages will be taken by a person in the business office who will forward it to the news and editorial offices. Please do not call the Collegian requesting resource information until Sept. 17.

Although we will be working with severe handicaps for a couple of weeks, we will continue to service all the students through your daily publication. We will not stop publication or abbreviate our editions.

We need all your help in completing a successful move. Please bear with us during these first few weeks of the semester. We would appreciate your consideration and assistance.

Thank you.

Kennedy to visit here

U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) will be in Amherst Friday. His itinerary includes a stop at the Amherst Senior Center, Kellogg Street.

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) will be visiting the UMass Physical Plant tomorrow during a campaign tour of the Amherst area.

According to the Amherst Committee for the Re-election of Kennedy, he will be at the Physical Plant around 3 p.m. to meet with workers and visitors.

Following the visit to the Physical Plant, Kennedy will go to the Amherst Senior Citizens between 3:30 and 3:50 p.m.

Darleen Grotton, the Amherst Campaign Coordinator for the Kennedy Campaign, said labor and senior citizen support is needed in the Amherst area, plus the public exposure.

Kennedy is running for re-election to the U.S. Senate.

Kennedy will conclude his visit at the Lord Jeffrey Inn, at a public reception in the Living Room, where refreshments will be served. He will then attend a rally in Holyoke, and other events.

Grotton said the day's events are intended to get people interested in Kennedy, and to solicit help for his campaign.

Telephone bill payments not accepted on campus

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Cashier's Office does not collect New England Telephone Company payments anymore, according to Robert R. Mishol, bursar at UMass.

The decision by Mishol became effective Aug. 27, in order to shorten the lines for check cashing and because of security, space, and administrative work problems.

"The lines were too crowded and some of the activity had to be removed from the office," Mishol said.

Mishol was recently given the responsibility for all cashiering functions at UMass.

He said the decision may be reviewed after negotiations to relocate the service are completed.

The cashier's office closing hours will also be shortened from 4:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. to remove work load pressure from tellers.

Luther Smith, Jr., manager of the N.E. Telephone Company's Northampton office, said, "The cashier's office did a fine job and a new agent to collect payments is being sought."

He said an average of 1,300 payments a month, or 25 per cent of students who have phones on campus, are made at the office.

The Student Federal Credit Union and Campus Center Travel Agency have been approached as relocation possibilities, and negotiations are continuing, said Smith.

Agents receive eight cents for each telephone payment collected, and Smith said there is a definite need to establish another payment agency on campus.

Former head of residence killed in crash

Pierre L. Marchando, a former head of residence in George Washington Tower, Southwest was killed instantly in a traffic accident near Joilet, Illinois Monday afternoon. He was 26.

Marchando had recently resigned his post and suspended his doctoral studies in the School of Education to accept a position in the Division of Personnel Services of the Illinois State Prison system at Joilet.

Born Oct. 26, 1949, in Cambridge, Mass., he was recruited by former football coach Vic Fusia in 1966 after he was graduated from Cambridge Latin High School.

He was an offensive lineman for UMass for three years, but was forced to sit out his senior year because of an academic difficulty that was later corrected. Coach Fusia said this could have cost Marchando a career as a professional football player.

Marchando, after graduating, remained in the area and was an assistant football coach in the Northampton school system while completing work on his master's degree.

Until last May, Marchando was a doctoral candidate, specializing in Future Studies in the School of Education.

Cause Still Uncertain

Fellow workers in Illinois have speculated that Marchando may have fallen asleep at the wheel, but a friend at UMass discounted this theory.

Marchando was driving a state vehicle and could have been the victim of a cracked axle or a tire blowout, according to one of his many UMass friends.

"Because He Liked It"

"He taught courses in racism and urban problems, but he didn't receive any pay for it. He taught them because he liked the people and felt that these were issues of concern," according to Al Peakes, who described himself as "a good friend".

Funeral services will be held from the Long Funeral Home, 1979 Massachusetts Avenue in Cambridge at 1 p.m. tomorrow. Visiting hours will be held tonight between 7 p.m. and 9 p.m.

September is 'property theft month'

By JUNE GREIG
Police Reporter

September is "property theft month," and the number of larcenies on campus double and triple over any other month, according to the UMass Dept. of Public Safety.

While crime this past summer decreased slightly from the summer of 1975, police said alcohol crimes are steadily increasing, and vandalism and theft of state property continue to rise sharply.

Police said they plan to increase education about crime on campus to help prevent the high number of property thefts that occur in the beginning of every school year.

Today police will engrave and register bicycles for rapid identification between 9 a.m. and 2 p.m. in front of the police station.

Additional hours for registering bicycles will be arranged at a later date.

Bicycle locks and hardware will be on display to inform students about the safest ways of protecting their property.

Police suggest property in dorm rooms be engraved also, and will assist with identification stickers.

Hit and run

Yesterday, a hit-and-run accident causing $75 damage to a vehicle in lot 63 was reported.

Fight

Police intervened in a fight in a Central Area dormitory at 2:30 a.m. Thursday morning. No arrests were made, police said.

Index due October, cost increase seen

By BOB MELIA
Collegian Staff

Index, the UMass yearbook, will cost an additional dollar this year.

The increase is needed to cover a deficit from last year, according to Dan Smith, photo editor.

Smith said that to get a yearbook, students must have their Index computer card. The card is automatically given to all students who have paid student activity fees for two semesters.

The Index is funded mainly through student activity fees, he said.

The yearbook will be available in late October, and will be distributed in front of the Student Union on a first-come, first-served basis, Smith said. Only students with their computer cards will get yearbooks, and students must pay the extra dollar at this time, he said.

Smith said there are only 6,500 yearbooks available for non-seniors, but over 10,000 Index cards have been issued, so students desiring yearbooks are advised to get theirs soon after they become available.

The Student Senate approved the additional one dollar charge, Smith said.

They paddle on

Two interns living out of canoe

They left Springfield on May 26, and expect to reach Portland, Oregon in the summer of 1977. Old Town Canoe Company donated the use of a 17-foot ABS plastic canoe for the expedition.

Duke, a Collegian staff reporter, will be relating his adventures weekly in the Collegian as he canoes across the U.S.

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

How and why would two otherwise normal-appearing young men try to canoe across the country? My partner, Stan Sroka, originated the trip as an adventuresome and unique way to see the United States.

I got into it by chance. Stan advertised on the UMass Outing Club bulletin board last spring for partners in the expedition. I wanted to interview him because the journey appealed to my Walter Mitty dreams of high adventure.

The interview took a strange turn. As Sroka laid out his route (which took two years of research with various government agencies and canoe clubs across the country), he solved one of the major reasons why I couldn't go. He showed me one way to finance my end of the trip. The only other obstacle was — I couldn't take the time out of school.

I solved that by securing (with much hustling and paperwork) a UMass 200 internship to write news articles (Collegian and free lance) about the trip for credit. Financing them became even easier. Because I was technically "in school" I was eligible for a standard HELP loan to pay my "school expenses."

After a long and determined debate on the safety and reasons for the trip, I convinced my parents that I really WAS going. Gear — clothing for all seasons and camping equipment (tent, pots, etc.) was staged, and on May 26 we launched on the Connecticut River in West Springfield, bound upstream after two weeks of heavy rain.

It took four days of hard work (with a wind assist on the last) and a portage to reach the mouth of the Deerfield River. In the process, we sent 35 pounds of excess gear (fishing pole, extra clothes) home, and I gained some skill. Stan had two years of whitewater (canoeing) before the trip; I had only done some "Sunday paddling" to that point. I learned, and would continue to learn.

The Deerfield proved to be an interesting challenge. In spring, the dam-controlled stream is a nice class 3 (out of 5) whitewater run, going down. But we had to travel up!

In the lowest sections, where the water is only ankle-deep in the rapids, it was a game. As we approached the first dam, the water got deeper and swifter and the game got serious.

Lifejackets became the order of the day. The torrent tore our clothes tight against our skin. On me (five foot six), the water was chest deep in spots. Stan is five inches taller, so he fared better. The banks are too steep and overgrown to take out and begin a portage very far from the dam. Slowly, carefully, I'd step, get a firm footing, then Stan would move. One slip, by either of us, could have been fatal.

We portaged up a 50-degree, 100-yard loose dirt slope to a B&M track bed. With darkness coming, we set up camp 15 feet from the track. At 1 a.m., the earth shook, the air roared and we froze. Then a whistle told us it was the midnight freight train, 100 cars long, comin' through. When the ground shook at 3 a.m., we just mumbled " 'nother train" and rolled over.

We spent a total of four days in large and small rapids on the Deerfield. Then we came to our first real obstacle — 25 miles across the Mohawk Trail to the Hoosick River.

Carrying an 85-pound canoe and 200 pounds of packs didn't appeal to us. The walk was just too long. So we did the logical thing — we thumbed. Two grubby river hoboes, two overstuffed packs, and "Joie" (our canoe — French for "Joy") sat on the side of Route 2, next to the dry Cold River, with thumbs out and hopes high.

A businessman in a Buick stopped and declared "I can't take the canoe." The packs and I loaded into his car and Stan thumbed with the canoe. He caught a pickup coming over the mountain. These were our first "angels" — people who help us along, for no reason but to help two crazed people who think you can canoe from "Mass. to Oregon" (as the bow of Joie states).

The Hoosick runs from North Adams as a sewerage filled ditch. It cleans up in the SW corner of Vermont into a meandering stream with many small whirlpools. In Schaticoke, N.Y., the river ends for five miles in 150 feet of cliffs and rocks. The village supervisor trucked us to a Niagra Mohawk power station to skip the long portage. We went back for pictures of the cliffs and met the power station crew as we returned. They said that the station was closing and they were glad they found us — the river dries to a trickle if the generators shut down (because they close the dam gates). They left the station operating an hour and a half overtime to let us run to the Hudson River. Through a large whirlpool and some small rapids, and two hours we reached the big dirty Hudson.

I was starting to be awed by the trip. Now we were into areas that up to now had only been lines on a map.

We hit our first locks on the Hudson (the Champlain Canal System). Locks are oversized cement U's with a V-shaped bottom and steel double-door gates to carry traffic from a high to a low level of the river (or vice versa). Roughly a million gallons of water flow through for every 15 feet of lift, in New York State locks. We locked three times on the Hudson and saw a green and white highway type sing "Erie Canal" and "Champlain Canal". We had reached the "roadway" rivers and their "big rigs" — the barges and tow boats.

Changes in intern office encourage, help students

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

Emma Cappelluzzo, new director of the Office of Internships, yesterday told an audience of about 175 new student interns that "many changes have taken place over the summer to help students deal with the real life experience of an internship and to encourage more students to pursue the unique form of education that an internship provides."

The internship program is one by which undergraduate students can spend a semester working a full-time job off-campus for University credit. In the past, students have worked in hospitals, schools, businesses, newspapers, and congressional offices, and some have even stayed in a jail as part of the program.

The Office of Internships was developed last semester in order to combine University Year for Action (UYA) and Outreach under one heading. Under the new system, a policy board of faculty members will overlook the entire internship system in order to keep student interns in more direct touch with the academic requirements of the University. The policy board will be responsible for reviewing both the nature of the internships and the well-being of the student interns.

The policy board is made up of Cappelluzzo, who is on half-time leave from the School of Ed, Charles Moran of the English Department and Warren Schumacher of the Home Economics departments.

"We hope to help the individual in both personal and professional growth as they leave the University subculture and live and work in another culture," Cappelluzzo said.

After the meeting, Cappelluzzo told the Collegian that "though the UMass interns have earned themselves an excellent reputation over the years, there is still a good amount of work to be done under the new system."

Cappelluzzo said that the goals of the new office include:

—Developing a media resource center to provide students with immediate data in regard to the hundreds of agencies in the United States which offer student internships.

—to design programs for non-traditional older students to take part in the internship program.

—to make the program more of a catalyst for putting theory into practice while becoming more involved with individual student's academic priorities.

—and to recruit more Third World students into the program. According to national data, there aren't many Third World students involved in student internships programs, Cappelluzzo said.

One addition to the internship program this semester is a media evaluation by which 50 per cent of the students taking part in the program will have training and access to audio video equipment to facilitate evaluation of the individual projects.

The Office of Student Internships is located in the basement of Goodell, where staffers Joseph Sullivan and Ellen Wolf are there daily to answer students' inquiries about the program.

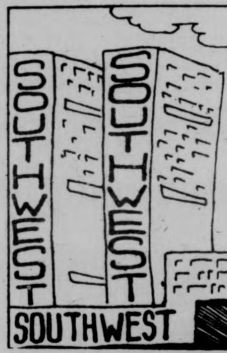
Blackout hits area

Most of the Southwest area of the UMass campus was without electrical power last night because the main line feeder "went down," according to a Physical Plant spokesperson.

At approximately 11 p.m. all power in most of the Southwest dormitories and Whitmore administration building went off due to the line failure.

By 11:30 generator power had been supplied to light the stairways and hallways in the buildings, but most dorm rooms were still without power.

The spokesperson said the Physical Plant suspected that a short circuit had caused the power outage, and that repairs would take a number of hours, but that it would be restored by early this morning.



SCER report advocates cable tv for campus

By ED LION
Special Correspondent

The University community should begin to seriously consider establishing a cable tv system for service to the campus, according to a report recently released by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER).

The student-financed center, which regularly issues recommendations on how to improve UMass educational programs, said in its study, "The Wired Campus" that "Cablevision will be an important communicative tool of the future... and the University of Massachusetts and other Massachusetts State Colleges are in a prime position to become the focus of cable services in the state."

The report, edited by Kathy Daly, a member of SCER, said that a cable tv network could be used to broadcast local events and governmental meetings that otherwise might never be available to students, and the system could be tied in to the educational mainstream of the University to bring classes right to students' homes.

The University of Illinois, the State University of New York, and the South Carolina state college system already have cable systems as part of the college educational process, the report says.

Lawrence J. Magid, SCER director, said the study was published to revive interest in a cable tv franchise at the University. As early as 1967, the University has been investigating the possibility of establishing such a system, but the report says that a combination of apathy, indecision, and "foot dragging" has blocked progress.

The report analyzes two possible methods of implementing a campus cable system.

The University could develop its own complete system at an estimated cost of $750,000, or it can integrate and link-up with the cable tv franchise currently operating in Amherst.

According to the report, Amherst currently has a franchise with the Pioneer Cablevision Company serving 3,500 residents for about $5 a month.

A separate autonomous university system would be entirely operated by the UMass community. A complete program schedule catering to students could be developed, the report says. But the estimated installation costs may make a separate system impractical, or may limit it to a small scale.

On the other hand, the costs of establishing a cable system in conjunction with the current franchise operating in Amherst would entirely be fielded by Pioneer, the report says. Subscription fees would run about $2 to $3 a month for dorm rooms, substantially lower than for Amherst residents because the apartment nature of the dorms makes for less wiring.

Eventually, after the viability of the cable program is proven, the University community could participate to a greater extent in local programmming, the report says, and take over management of the University system from Pioneer.

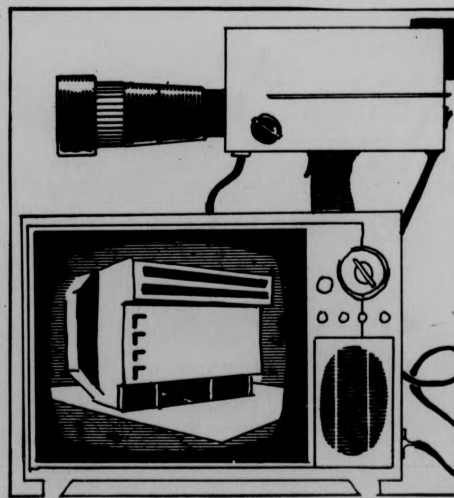
The report says that establishment of a cable system will also enable the University to economically lay down modern cable for its internal phone system and at the same time set-up fire detecting alarm systems.

But the report indicates that administrators might resist the plan for fear that they would have to police the system against vandalism and Amherst officials are hesitant that their rates in town will be jacked up as a result of installation of the system on campus.

Before a system can be established with the town of Amherst, the University would have to obtain the approval of the Board of Selectmen, the report adds.

But the major determining factor in whether UMass will have its own cable franchise rests with the students who ultimately must reach the final decision, said the report.

Copies of the study were forwarded to the Board of Trustees, and Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has instructed the State Dept. of Education to analyze its findings.



AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Doctors close to hepatitis cure

BOSTON [AP] — Doctors say they may be on the brink of a cure for a form of hepatitis that some people must carry through life because there is no successful treatment.

The researchers say they are using natural human protein called interferon to wipe out the disease in four patients.

If this method works for other people as well, authorities predict that the discovery will help in the search for a cure for a variety of diseases spread by viruses, such as the common cold.

However, the researchers caution that it is too soon to tell whether the new treatment can be put into general use as a remedy for hepatitis.

Report on the work, conducted by a team at Stanford University, was published in today's edition of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Most people recover from hapatitis naturally after a few weeks of rest, but about 10 per cent continue to carry the virus in their blood indefinitely. These people can infect others with the disease. While most of the carriers are otherwise healthy, about a third eventually suffer liver damage.

So far, the Stanford team has successfully used interferon to treat four patients with lingering cases of hepatitis.

"Whether it will have the same effect on others remains to be seen," Dr. William S. Robinson, one of the researchers, said in an interview. "It will take more patients and more time."

Interferon is one of the body's natural protections against infections. It is derived from human white blood cells.

Treatment on one of the patients, a woman, began last November. Now, virtually every trace of the hepatitis virus has been cleared from her blood, and her liver, which was damaged, is working normally again.

Harrington opposed on Lockhead bill

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., encountered stiff opposition yesterday on his bill to cancel congressionally approved loan guarantees for Lockheed Aircraft Corp.

Harrington asked a House banking subcommittee to investigate the propriety of continuing the loan program in light of Lockheed's bribery payments to top foreign government officials and others.

Rep. Richard Kelly, R-Fla., objected to such a move, saying: "I think we should put people responsible in jail, but we should not condemn an organization which is necessary to the defense of the United States.

"We are sitting here just bathing ourselves in glory and morality, what what we should be doing is demonstrating concern for the defense of the United States."

" ... What is suggested here is that an institution that is needed for the national defense should be allowed to collapse and fend for itself," Kelly said.

Harrington said he did not agree with this "circular" kind of reasoning, and that "I see a studied disinterest here toward opening the door even slightly to anything approaching controversy."

Kelly asked Harrington if he was "as avid in your pursuit of morality when it comes to New York City as you are Lockheed."

"You bet your life I am," Harrington replied. "I think that is as spurious an argument as you could make."

Youths disrupt Charlestown area

BOSTON [AP] — About 200 youths from the city's Charlestown section roamed streets near the Bunker Hill housing project yesterday in the second night of rock-and-bottle throwing, police said.

A window in a patrol car was smashed by a bottle thrown by youths, police said. A car was overturned, hydrants were opened, and a mattress was set on fire, according to police. No injuries were reported.

The city's Tactical Patrol Force — used to control major disturbances — was placed on standby in the area.

The predominantly white housing project is located at the base of historic Bunker Hill and was the scene of several confrontations between youths and police during the last school year. Charlestown High School — heavily boycotted by whites under court-ordered desegregation the past two years — is at the top of the hill.

Governor announced public safety panel

[UPI] — Faster police response to crime, civil disorder and natural disaster has been promised by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who created a new agency of state law enforcement officials.

Dukakis put his own public safety secretary, Charles V. Barry, in charge of the Public Safety Council, and termed Barry "superchief."

The panel will include leaders of 12 agencies, including eight with police powers. Dukakis created the council Wednesday with an executive order.

The governor also announced at a press conference that he disagrees with his Management Task Force's recommendation that Metropolitan District Commission police be abolished.

Instead, the governor said he wants the MDC force beefed up.

The public safety panel will include agencies of the state, MDC and Capitol police, and officers of the Registry of Motor Vehicles, fish and game agencies, Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, Department of Public Works, Division of Marine and Recreational Vehicles and the Massachusetts National Guard.

The council also includes officials of the state civil defense agency and the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council, although — like Barry's secretariat — those agencies lack police authority.

Barry said the council will have regular meetings at which officials will discuss sharing of their facilities and equipment.

Alien smuggling makes for booming business

[UPI] — The smuggling of illegal aliens into the United States has become an "extremely lucrative" business and large, organized rings are muscling into the racket, the General Accounting Office said yesterday.

The GAO said "Aliens' chances of successfully entering the United States illegally and reaching desired locations are greatly increased by professional smugglers ...

"The smuggling of aliens has become an extremely lucrative illegal venture and is one of the major problems confronting INS Immigration and Naturalization Service."

In a report to Congress, GAO said "There has been a significant increase in the number of large, organized smuggling rings identified by INS. The rings are particularly difficult to immobilize because the leaders often stay removed from the actual smuggling act."

The report said INS's anti-smuggling program has had some good results — including the immobilization of several large rings — but is hindered by several factors, including other burdens placed on border patrol agents.

In addition, the report said, "Less than half of all known smuggling violations are prosecuted. Even when prosecuted, smugglers are generally only punished by light fines and-or short sentences."

Aliens smuggled into the country have a better chance of making it because the professionals know the INS defenses and use special methods to evade them, the GAO said.

USDA ignores court nix against ground-bone meat

[UPI] — The Agriculture Department said yesterday it will allow processors to continue using meat containing ground-up bone in hot dogs and other foods despite a federal judge's ruling.

District Judge William Bryant earlier issued a temporary restraining order against enforcement of the April 27 Agriculture Department regulation which allows use of "mechanically deboned meat" — and meat melted out of fat scraps — in hot dogs, pizza, chili, lunch meats and a long list of other meat products.

A consumer coalition spokesman fighting the regulation on mechanically deboned meat which actually contains small portions of ground bone, announced he will try to arrange for separate legal action to force the products off the market until their future is settled by pending Agriculture Department proceedings including a public review process.

Assistant Agriculture Secretary Richard Feltner told UPI "we do intend to continue" allowing processors to use the deboned meat because "we have no basis not to."

Rodney E. Leonard, head of the Community Nutrition Institute which brought suit against the ground-bone regulation because it allegedly was issued illegally, said "if it takes another suit to stop it, that's what we'll have to do."

The department regulation on mechanically deboned meat was announced as a temporary measure to remain in effect only until permanent rules are issued.

Government attorneys said Bryant's order, which is to be effective pending the outcome of a hearing set for Sept. 9, did not legally require the government to take the controversial products off the market.

They contended the regulation the judge struck down spelled out limits on how the products could be used rather than providing basic authority for using them. The products can't be barred because they have never been officially ruled to be adulterated, attorneys said.

Consumer attorney Daniel Efroymson said "we say the stuff is adulterated and should be immediately taken off the market for human consumption."

Bryant ruled on a suit brought by six consumer organizations, Rep. Margaret Heckler, R-Mass., and Maryland attorney general Francis Burch.

Agriculture officials have said they hope to announce a decision by Oct. 15 on at least some phases of the pending permanent regulation covering mechanically deboned meat and meat rescued from fat scraps.

The meat products involved are made by crushing and then sieving bones with attached meat scraps to rescue food which would be lost in traditional hand de-boning methods. Agriculture officials have argued the process would help consumers by adding up to 1 billion pounds of healty meat, which now largely goes to waste, to the nation's food supply.

CIA director cites danger in open operations

[UPI] — Central Intelligence Agency Director George Bush said yesterday the United States would be subjected to the gravest danger if all its intelligence operations were opened to public scrutiny.

"I challenge those who claim that secrecy in intelligence work is inconsistent with freedom and democracy to give us realistic preview of what this nation's freedom and democracy would look like if we alone in this imperfect world decided to abandon this essential protection against our adversaries," he said.

Bush, speaking to the Kennebunk-Kennebunkport Chamber of Commerce, said secrecy is essential in some cases and the CIA now has a fully effective oversight mechanism and comprehensive accountability to Congress.

"What we do not have is a fully effective way of protecting the secrets that are — like oversight and accountability — an essential element of this nation's intelligence," he said.

The CIA director criticized "sensationalist public disclosures of intelligence officers and operations" in the wake of recent congressional investigations.

"I do not take issue with the need for investigating and correcting past errors, but will oppose forever those who seek to destroy us outright and those who in the name of informing and protecting the public hunt for yet another headline, even if it be at the expense of American lives and of our national security," Bush said.

He also took issue with romanticized versions of what intelligence work involves, saying it is often scholarly analysis of foreign economic or political trends.

"In my seven months as director of the CIA, I never met anyone remotely like James Bond," he said.

Lee Vachon Group

The Lee Vachon Group is breaking very big out of New England. As did their predecessors, The J. Geils Band and Aerosmith, The Lee Vachon Group generates the same type of excitement wherever they play.

Over the past ten years, Lee Vachon has emerged as one of the top rock guitarists on the East Coast. He received great reviews in VARIETY for a recent jam session with Jeff Beck. He has been searching for the "perfect band" for the past few years. Now he's found it.

Lee's group features Donnie Hillier, whose lead vocals and showmanship can only be described as devastating. Moreover, Bob Young on bass and drummer Ernie Abdelnour form a rhythm section that has to be heard to be believed. Together, The Lee Vachon Group is not just another band...they're a "classic rock attraction!"

POINTE-A-PITRE, Guadeloupe: White smoke pours from the crater of the La Soufriere volcano yesterday, then dark smoke billows from the crater just before the start of an eruption. Five scientists were slightly injured in the eruption when they were hit by a shower of ash and stones. (UPI)

Volcano condition calm yet eruption predicted

[UPI] — Clouds of steam billowed from Brimstone mountain, Point-A-Pitre, Guadeloupe, yesterday but earth tremors slackened enough to permit scientists to install equipment on its slopes to predict whether an eruption is imminent.

The summit of the 4,900-feet volcano was visible 22 miles away in Point-A-Pitre for the first time in weeks after a brisk wind blew away the dirty gray rainclouds that had long obscured the summit.

The steam, which blasted 6,000 feet into the windless sky on Tuesday, wafted horizontally yesterday in large pillows of greasy gray vapor.

French vulconologist Michel Feuillard said the volcano, shaken by hundreds of earth tremors in the past two days, was relatively calm. It registered 47 tremors between 8 p.m. Tuesday and 6 a.m. yesterday — one tenth the number of the previous day's time period.

But Feuillard, director of the research institute based on this French Caribbean island, said the period of relative calm does not signify anything and that the tremendous pressure beneath the crater was building all the while.

"The energy growth inside the volcano over the past two weeks has been spectacular," said John Tomblyn, a visiting vulcanologist from Trinidad. "What happens in a few hours has no meaning at all."

Haroun Tazieff, who heads the international team of some 20 scientists watching the volcano's behavior, said he was a bit surprised at the decrease in volcanic activity but did not change his prediction that a major eruption could occur in the next three or four days.

An American team of scientists led by geophysicist Grant Heiken, took advantage of the calm to install sensors on the mountain designed to measure signs of pressure within the mountain.

Inflation, or tilt, as it is known to vulcanologists, has in the past proved a useful tool in predicting when a volcano will erupt, but the earth tremors of Monday and Tuesday had rendered the instruments useless.

Two weeks ago 72,000 refugees were evacuated from the volcano's slopes and have moved in with family members and friends.

The refugees have been allowed to return to their homes to tend crops and livestock during daylight hours.

Vietnam presses for UN status

[UPI] — A Vietnamese envoy said yesterday his country again would bring an appeal for U.N. membership to the U.N. General Assembly if the United States vetos the Hanoi government's bid before the Security Council.

Dinh Ba Thi, ambassador of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, also repeated his government's willingness to negotiate with the United States for normalization of relations.

The Socialist Republic of Vietnam applied for full U.N. membership last month, and the Security Council is expected to take up the application next Wednesday.

The United States twice vetoed separate membership applications last summer by North and South Vietnam — before the Communist government declared Vietnam was one unified nation — because the U.N. refused to consider South Korea's bid to join the world body.

U.S. sources would not indicate yesterday whether another veto was planned to block the new application by Hanoi.

Thi said Vietnam would bring its application up for debate in the General Assembly if the U.S. casts another veto. A 123-0 vote in favor of Vietnamese membership by the General Assembly last year resulted in the second U.S. veto.

Speaking at a news conference, Thi said his Government had cooperated in the U.S. effort to find Americans missing in action since the Vietnamese war ended last year.

McCarthy says election coverage not balanced

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Eugene J. McCarthy said yesterday his independent presidential campaign has not gotten enought coverage from the national press and television.

McCarthy said in his speech to the National Press Club that more time and space has been given to the draining of Jimmy Carter's fish pond and his slow-pitch softball games — "the ultimate desecration of baseball" — than to McCarthy's discussion of serious issues.

Local coverage has been good, McCarthy said, but often what is said in one town is not known in the next.

"I've announced for the presidency twice in Columbus, Ohio," he said.

At the moment, McCarthy said, the television networks are asking Congress to relieve them of the responsibilities of the equaltime broadcast provisions for the debate between Jimmy Carter and President Ford.

If there are debates or television time to be given out, McCarthy said, Carter should get three hours "to explain his three positions on every issue."

France's rising costs linked to year's drought

PARIS [UPI] — France's new cabinet yesterday began drafting an austerity budget and calculating higher income taxes even as the rising cost from this year's catastrophic drought threatened to upset the governmenn's planning.

President Valery Giscard d'Estaing presided over the first session of his new cabinet but indications grew that emergency measures planned by the government would run into trouble from both wage earners and farmers.

Farmers demonstrated in many areas and the Permanent Assembly of the Chambers of Agriculture, a farming organization, warned that the national income of farmers will drop $1.9 billion this year.

In St. Etienne, angry farmers roughed up Prefect governor Bernard Couzier after forcing their way into his office. Elsewhere farmers blocked roads with marches or set up roadblocks.

Their spokesmen rejected as "mockery" the government's recent decision to raise more than $440 million in emergency aid for cattle raisers through an increase of taxes on upper-bracket wages.

Farm leaders warned they could not guarantee public peace unless farmers get much more aid quickly. The government does not plan to announce the aid package until Sept. 29.

Simultaneously, labor unions and professional organizations served a warning to the new Premier Raymond Barre — who is his own finance minister — that they will oppose any income tax increases.

The organizations said one category of Frenchmen — the wage earners — should not be penalized by paying for a national disaster. They demanded that the cost of the drought damage be covered by a national loan.

Barre worked overtime with his staff to devise measures that would not upset the budget and fan the flames of inflation, which alreay has cut the value of the franc some 10 per cent in relation to other leading currencies this year.

Officials admitted that although Barre is a financial wizard, he will have a hard time reconciling the need of keeping a tight rein on government spending without antagonizing the powerful farming community six months before nationwide municipal elections and 18 months before crucial parliamentary balloting.

Senate floor coverage may heighten 'awareness'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A special commission yesterday made public a staff study calling for an immediate end to the ban on broadcasting Senate sessions "as a means of sharpening public awareness of the co-equal role of Congress" in the federal government.

The study said Congress has been debating the broadcast issue for 30 years while "the White House was latching on enthusiastically to the vast potential of this new technology for selling ideas to the public."

To offset this, it said, the Senate should "explore all feasible means for giving the widest possible distribution...of Senate floor coverage via national and local broadcasters. The underlying aim would be to develop greater public understanding of and faith in the institution of the Senate."

Discounting fears that television cameras would turn the Senate into "a Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey" circus as members vied for the spotlight, the study noted favorable reaction to the televised Nixon empeachment hearings and previous investigative spectaculars.

"Obviously, the everyday activity of the Senate could hardly match the fascination of a Joe McCarthy, a Frank Costello, a Jimmy Hoffa, or a John Dean, or the drama of an up or down vote to launch the process of ousting a sitting president," the study said.

"Still, the cumulative effect of showing the public regularly how the Senate grappled with the basic issues affecting every American might invoke a sharper perception of the Senate as an institution."

The study was circulated by the Commission on the Operation of the Senate, established earlier this year to propose ways of modernizing the chambers legislative machinery.

The commission, headed by former Sen. Harold Hughes, D-Iowa, took no stand on the proposal, saying only that it was issuing the study "to obtain further comment." Copies went to Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield and Republican Leader Hugh Scott.

The author is Len Allen, one-time NBC News executive in Washington and New York and a former commission consultant now with the Radio-Television News Directors Association.

He said Senate sessions could be broadcast in any of several ways, including a network pool or public broadcasting, depending on which one would best "protect the essential character of the Senate while meeting legitimate news and public affairs needs of radio and television."

Allen said the system should include a closed circuit feed so members can watch floor debates "as a time saving tool" when they can't be present. It also should provide for an audio-visual library, he said, for use by Senate staffers schools, libraries and researchers.

Ford man predicts success in South

JACKSON, Miss. [UPI] — President Ford's newly appointed southern campaign coordinator said Wednesday Ford can win a "hunk of electoral votes" in Dixie because at heart he is more of a southerner than Jimmy Carter.

Haley R. Barbour, 28, who has served for the past three years as executive director of the Mississippi Republican party, told a news conference he has accepted a position in the Ford campaign as coordinator for seven Southern states. He said the appointment was effective immediately.

Barbour said his duties will be to coordinate campaign activities for the Ford-Dole ticket in Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas, Alabama, Louisiana, and South Carolina.

He said he would work out of the national campaign office in Washington, D.C., but probably will "spend about 50 per cent of my time in the South."

Barbour said he didn't believe his age would be a handicap in the job. He said many younger persons were filling key roles in the party.

A native of Yazoo City, Barbour is a 1973 graduate of the University of Mississippi Law School but has never engaged in private practice. He has served as executive director of the Mississippi GOP since February, 1973.

"Anyone who thinks the President is writing off the South is indulging in wishful thinking," Barbour told reporters. "We are not writing off the South."

He said Carter, a Georgian, "is a southerner by geography only." He said Ford was much closer to Dixie's voters in terms of principles and philosophy.

"In my personal opinion, a Republican candidate can't be elected without a significant number of electoral votes in the South," he said. "We must carry some of the southern states and I think we'll carry a hunk of electoral votes."

Conservative trend seen in present US electorate

Pacific News Service] — "The electorate is more conservative today," one overzealous television commentator said recently, "than at any time since pre-New Deal days." Though stretching it a bit, he was sounding a theme heard often of late.

The notion that public opinion is lunging sharply rightward — that there has been a massive outcry against "big government" — dominates popular interpretations of this campaign year. But a close look at primary results and public opinion polls indicates it's not so simple.

Hard-line conservative Ronald Reagan did, indeed, almost defeat an incumbent known himself as a conservative. But meanwhile Republican Party membership plummeted to 22 per cent of registered voters, and a June poll found 15 per cent of that merger total ready to desert the party for Jimmy Carter this fall.

Carter, a moderate, did beat his liberal (and conservative) opponents — but largely on style, not issues. His support came equally from liberals, moderates and conservatives.

And with 50 or 80 per cent of registered voters not even voting in state primaries — particularly the liberal-oriented young and poor — the primaries themselves were hardly a complete gauge of the public mood.

One Harris poll from last December did find 43 per cent of the public preferring that "the country move in a more conservative direction" — without defining what that meant. Yet Harris also found the number of people calling themselves conservatives had dropped from 37 to 27 per cent over the past seven years.

What, then, are the real currents sweeping the U.S? Where is the electorate heading as it enters America's third century?

Two distinct moods are obvious: a post-Watergate distrust of politicians and a revolt against rising taxes and hence government spending.

But except for members of the shrinking Republican Party, the American people are not demanding a simple rollback of active government — nor an abandonment of the traditional liberal goals of full employment, adequate housing, health care and the like.

While Harris concluded that much of the conservative sentiment he recorded was a reaction against taxes and big government, the real antagonism to excessive federal spending — as he defined it — was that it hadn't "solved the problems confronting the country."

People are disenchanted because the nation's problems persist, not because they think they should be ignored. While hit even harder by steeply rising taxes, America's low and middle income citizens have been promised much and delivered little.

The result, beyond a clear hardening of the right wing, has been confusion, deep skepticism and — with no clear solutions to the nation's problems in sight — a widespread retreat to neutral political ground.

What many commentators fail to note, however, is that despite disenchantment with programs that have failed, people still look to the government to solve their problems.

For more than a generation, whenever asked in surveys to state its policy priorities, the public's answer has been the same: economic security. They want protection for jobs and against inflation, and provision for housing, medical care, old-age benefits and education.

The answers were the same this January, when Gallup found that 47 per cent of those polled named "the high cost of living" as the "most important problem facing this country today." Unemployment was mentioned by 23 per cent. Far down the list, cited by only 3 per cent, was "excessive spending on social problems."

And the last time Gallup asked a national sample for its views on federal spending priorities, those areas mentioned most often — health (53 per cent), public education (48 per cent), law enforcement (41 per cent), welfare (32 per cent) and public housing (26 per cent) — were largely the traditional recipients of liberal spending.

Least often mentioned were defense (16 per cent), agricultural aid (15 per cent), highway improvement (13 per cent) and foreign aid (3 per cent).

Several polls have even turned up liberal spending priorities within the same sample groups that stress the seemingly contradictory desire for a smaller federal government.

The answer to this apparent contradiction could be a growing resentment against the country's inequitable distribution of wealth and income. By asking at once for lower taxes but more basic services, the middle- and working-class majority may implicitly be demanding a shift of the costs of big government toward those who can afford to pay.

National surveys in which the majority has declared that "The government should work to substantially reduce the income gap between rich and poor" support this view.

In recent years government has done just the opposite. In 1968 state and local property and sales taxes took 12.1 per cent of the incomes of those earning from $6,000 to $8,000. The figures dropped to 9.9 per cent for the national median income range of $10,000-$15,000, and to 6.7 per cent for those above $15,000.

Federal taxes, though not nearly so regressive, do not shift wealth back toward low- and middle-income people. And the federal Social Security bite is even more regressive than local taxes.

To make things worse, these regressive taxes have been skyrocketing in recent years, contributing significantly to the fall of America's average standard of living during the 1970's. It is hardly surprising, then, that many citizens have come to regard government spending — ineffectual in solving their pressing problems — as a direct attack on their living standards.

In their alienation from government officials, the people may not then be expressing a desire to be rid of government, but a resentment against a government that has misrepresented and neglected their desires — and charged them more and more money for doing so.

Far from wanting government to stop addressing the country's problems, there is evidence that people are thirsting for creative and progressive change in what the government does. Many leading pollsters, including Harris, Peter Hart and Carter pollster Pat Caddell, have argued this position.

Gurney to be tried

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — The federal government, in a surprise announcement, said yesterday it would prosecute former Sen. Edward J. Gurney on one of the charges left unresolved by his 1975 influence-peddling trial.

Justice Department prosecutor Vincent Alto said he received a final decision from his superiors at 5 p.m. Tuesday to dismiss a charge of conspiracy, but to proceed to trial on a charge of lying to a grand jury.

Alto had indicated earlier that Attorney General Edward Levi was considering dropping both charges.

Gurney, 62, who gained prominence on the Senate Watergate Committee defender of former President Nixon, was found innocent last year of five felony charges after a five and one-half month trial in Tampa. He had been accused of raising a political slush fund through an influence peddling scheme.

The jury was unable to reach a verdict on the two of the counts on which Gurney originally was tried.

Defense Attorney C. Harris Dittmar of Jacksonville protested the government decision Wednesday, saying "it makes no sense, in my humble opinion."

U.S. District Judge George C. Young immediately began hearing Dittmar's pending motions to dismiss the final charge against Gurney.

Promise to readmit cadets termed 'bogus' by defense

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A defense counsel for 100 West Point cadets accused of cheating said yesterday Army Secretary Martin R. Hoffman did not have the power to carry out his promise to readmit them to the academy after a one-year suspension.

Michael T. Rose, a civilian attorney retained by cadets of the class of 1977 who were accused of cheating on an engineering examination, said the only solution would be to mete out other punishments than suspension because eventually up to 800 cadets of the 1977 and other classes may be found out in honor code violations.

Rose testified along with two military defense lawyers before the House Armed Services subcommittee investigating the academy's honor code.

Hoffman told the subcommittee last week those cadets who confessed or were found guilty of cheating on the examination would be suspended for a year and then would probably be readmitted to the academy.

Rose said Hoffman's assurances were "illusory" since it was beyond his scope and power to fulfill them.

The attorney said only the President of the United States, not the Secretary of the Army, has power to appoint cadets and there is no assurance the next President would feel bound to reappoint any discharged cadet.

Moreover, he said, statutes specify admissions to the academy must be in "order of merit," and Hoffman does not have the discretion to give his nomination to whomever he wishes.

Rose suggested on behalf of defense counsels that no cadets should be separated from West Point but those guilty of cheating or violating the honor code should be given such stiff penalties as restriction to quarters for six months or "walking tours" and loss of rank.

Rains ease Midwest drought

[UPI] — Texas got yesterday what the drought-hit northern Midwest wanted — rain.

Thunderstorms born of the union of warm Gulf air and a Pacific cold front swept across the state, dumping more than nine inches of rain in some areas.

Flash flood warnings were up in dozens of counties from the Red River in north Texas to the Rio Grande border with Mexico.

The National Weather Service said nine inches of rain fell between midnight and 3 p.m. near Sonora, Tex., causing flooding that closed highways.

Fort McKavett, in south Texas, received 6.8 inches of rain in less than six hours. Dallas and Fort Worth, in the north, recorded four inches in a 24-hour period.

That was one-fourth their total rainfall this year. The rain fell on browned lawns and parched crops.

In the Midwest, the National Corn Growers Association, headquartered at Boone, Iowa, said the corn belt drought has reduced projections of the 1976 corn crop below the record 1975 harvest.

The association predicted corn harvested for grain would total 5.59 billion bushels, compared to a crop of 5.76 billion bushels in 1975. Walter Goeppinger, chairman of the association, said the reduction in the 1976 estimate was "shocking."

"The rains which occurred after July 20 came too late to save much of the corn in the Midwest," he said. "High temperatures and strong dry winds the last two weeks of August further hurt the crop, which had no moisture reserves to fall back on."

The Agriculture Department's weekly crop weather report released Tuesday said "hot, dry conditions in much of the nation's midsection placed unrelenting stress on corn and soybeans, particularly in the western north central states."

Arms sale approval sought

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Pentagon notified Congress late yesterday that it plans to sell $5.9 billion in arms to 10 countries, including about 2,500 missiles to Saudi Arabi and 160 advanced F16 jet fighters to Iran.

Reportedly on State Department orders, the Pentagon announcement made no specific mention of some of the key weapons, including controversial Sidewinder air combat missiles for Saudi Arabi and the F16s for Iran.

Administration sources indicated the totals of Sidewinder missiles and Maverick television-guided air-to-ground missiles for Saudi Arabi were trimmed in late-hour, behind-the-scenes State Department negotiations with pro-Isreal senators.

The arms sales package, the biggest in memory, went to Congress on the last day possible, if the Senate and House are to have the required 30 days to consider the deals before adjourning Oct. 2. The sales will go into effect unless Congress rejects them.

Russia termed unworthy by Chile as Olympic host

SANTIAGO, Chile [UPI] — A Chilean government minister yesterday charged the Soviet Union was unworthy of holding the 1980 Olympic games because of the Russians' refusal to play against Chile in the Davis Cup Tennis semifinals.

The Russian Tennis Federation yesterday said it would not play against Chile this month in protest against this country's military government.

Gen. Hernan Bejares, Government Secretary General, said, "the Soviet Union has openly shown that politics rules over all aspects of their lives and as a consequence she has made herself unworthy of being considered as the site for the 1980 Olympic games."

Presidential debate set

WASHINGTON [AP] — Jimmy Carter and President Ford agreed yesterday to three debates, starting with one Sept. 23 over economic and domestic issues, in the first face-to-face confrontations between White House contenders since 1960.

A basic accommodation on the format for the live television clashes was reached after a day-long bargaining session between top aides to Carter and Ford and officials of the League of Women Voters.

Their three-way announcement said foreign policy and defense would be the topic of a second debate, while the third and final session would be open to all issues.

A separate — and unprecedented — debate between the vice presidential nominees, Democrat Walter F. Mondale and Republican Bob Dole, will be sandwiched between the second and third Carter-Ford meetings, according to the announcement.

Ford, at the White House, immediately declared his enthusiasm for the contests, the details of which have yet to be worked out by the league. "I believe the American people will be the winners," he said.

Both the President and Carter embraced the idea of the debates in principle last month, but disputes rose over the topics and other elementary details.

The agreement reached Wednesday represented some concessions from both sides. Ford had wanted to open on the topic of defense, where he feels he can score against Democratic budget-cutting proposals. Carter wanted a more open-ended format that would enable him to hammer at the question of Ford's leadership competence.

Reagan joins Ford cause

HOLLYWOOD [UPI] — Ronald Reagan, emerging from a period of post-convention relaxation, said yesterday he would campaign for the election of President Ford but was vague on what personal stumping he might undertake except for an October telecast.

The former California governor said he had not been contacted by Ford's national organization, but added, "I'm sure they have been very busy and so have we."

"I pledged my support for the Republican ticket and I intend to carry out that pledge just as I always have on behalf of the party," Reagan told reporters at a Hollywood recording studio.

The occasion was Reagan's preparation for resumption of a five-day per week radio braodcast giving his political and philosophical views. The program had netted 343 clients before he was forced to abandon it when he became an avowed candidate for the GOP Presidential nomination.

Reagan had also been writing a syndicated column for 225 newspapers and he plans to resume that activity.

Informal in a short-sleeved sports shirt and nibbling at a jar of jelly beans, Reagan recorded a series of 12 three-minute radio broadcasts at the studios of Harry O'Connor Creative Enterprises with show business friends including Art Linkletter, Ralph Story and Jack Webb looking on.

The broadcasts, pre-recorded Wednesday for release starting Sept. 20, referred to the Republican and Democratic political platforms, welfare, school busing, agriculture, bureaucracy, women's marches against the terrorism in Ireland, taxes and U.S. policy with regard to China.

Reagan made no mention of Ford but he pointed out that he was precluded from doing so by the equal time provisions of the Federal Communications Commission.

Afterward, he talked briefly with reporters about his role in the campaign. Reagan said he would appear on an Oct. 7 fund-raising dinner for the Republican National Committee in Los Angeles which would be carried on closed circuit television and would also include Vice President Nelson Rockefeller.

Reagan was pressed about what other speeches and appearances he might make in the fall and whether that would be his only major address.

"Oh, no, I wouldn't say that," Reagan replied. "I get invitations from various party organizations in many states."

Reagan said he expected he would make a number of speeches not coordinated by Ford's national committee.

The governor was asked about the possibility he might head a third party should Ford fare badly against Democratic candidate Jimmy Carter.

"I don't think it would be so much a question of a third party as it would be rejuvenating a new second party," Reagan said.

Steelworkers ok new post

LAS VEGAS [UPI] — The United Steelworkers' convention voted yesterday to create a new vice presidency likely to go to a Black man and another office called by dissidents a "political plum."

The actions came during a rowdy session in which union dissidents claimed they were being branded as Communists and challenged the accusers to start naming names.

The expansion of officers, supported by retiring president I.W. Abel, was the only major change made in the union's constitution yesterday.

The convention rejected the dissidents' proposal to make it easier for members to run for union office and to lower the salaries of top officials.

It also rejected a proposal that would have strengthened the union's rule prohibiting officers from involvement in the Ku Klux Klan, the Communist party or any fascist, totalitarian or subversive organization.

In a bitter speech that was nearly drowned out by booing, dissident leader Ed Sadlowski suggested this was an anti-Democratic proposal aimed directly at him.

Sadlowski, who intends to run for Abel's position in the Feb. 8 union election, said he had been accused during the convention of being a Communist by persons trying to deprive him of his right to dissent.

"If these delegates are so convinced that this union is being infiltrated, let them stand up and start naming names," he said. "Who are these Communists? Who are these Ku Klux Klan?"

The convention approved a plan to add a second vice presidency and split the current job of secretary-treasurer into two positions.

Abel has earmarked the second vice presidency for a Black and sources said the secretary treasurer job was being split to allow Abel loyalist Lloyd McBride to expand his ticket in the upcoming contest with Sadlowski.

LAS VEGAS, Nevada — I.W. Abel (left), president of the United Steel Workers, told Democrat V.P. candidate Walter Mondale that the USW were endorsing the Carter-Mondale ticket. Mondale addressed some 8,000 delegates to the USW convention in the Las Vegas Convention center.

Judge won't hear press ban protest

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — A Superior Court judge yesterday refused to meet with newspaper lawyers protesting the judge's barring the public from his court during the trial of a man charged with six killings.

A lawyer for the Hartford Times, Harold B. Stevens 3rd, was told by a court clerk Judge Edward C. Hamill would not see him and was told to file his brief with the clerk's office.

Ralph G. Elliot, lawyer for the Hartford Courant, also was unable to meet with the judge.

Hamill issued the ban Tuesday at the start of trial hearings for Gary Schrager, 32, who with another man is charged with the 1974 slaying of six persons at Donna Lee Bakery in New Britain.

The press ban was issued after defense lawyer F. MacBuckley claimed pretrial publicity would make it impossible for his client to get a fair hearing.

Major Ohio busing plan starts today

DAYTON, Ohio [UPI] — The Dayton City School System begins Ohio's first court-ordered busing program today, mixing students in the first five elementary grades to achieve a 48 per cent black-52 per cent white racial balance.

About a third of the system's 41,000 students will eventually be involved in cross-town busing.

The schedule for the start of school calls for students in grades one through five and grades nine and ten to be bussed to new schools Thursday. All other grades will begin Friday. Some of those pupils will also be bussed.

The busing plan does not involve any students in grades 11 or 12.

After a federal court found city schools guilty of segregation earlier this year, the school system prepared to implement the court order by "pairing" racially identifiable schools, mixing their student bodies to achieve the desired racial balance.

The court ordered that each school must reflect the system-wide racial balance.

To do that, black students from the southwestern Ohio city's west side must be transported across the Miami River to chools on the east side, where most white residents live, and vice versa.

Students bused to a different school this school year will return to their "old" school for the 1977-78 school year, alternating each year thereafter.

Throughout the summer, school officials have met with community groups, parent and teacher organizations and civic clubs to defuse any fears citizens may have had.

A rumor control center has fielded 1,000 telephone calls a day.

Local officials do not expect a boycott or any trouble with the start of busing, but Wednesday, State School Supt. Martin Essex complained that the courts were eroding local authority over schools.

"The assignment of pupils, teachers and administrators has been under local community authority," said Essex. "Now, all such vital decisions could be placed with the State Board of Education."

Court decisions, said Essex, "ascribe constitutional power to the State Board which it never had," taking away powers once held by local school officials.

Mexico floats peso

MEXICO CITY [UPI] — President Luis Echeverria said yesterday the Mexican peso was floated to stop the flight of capital which would have hurt national development.

Echeverria's action allowing the peso to float in value against the U.S. dollar effectively was a sharp devaluation of the currency, which has had a fixed value since 1954 and was long considered the most stable in Latin America.

The float, to be regulated by the Central Bank to prevent wide fluctuations, was expected to cut the value of the peso by about 20 per cent. Until the decision to float the currency, the exchange rate was 12.5 pesos to $1.

Across the border in California, the Calexico Chamber of Commerce, advised its members Wednesday to adjust the exchange rate for Mexican pesos to 20 for $1- a 40 per cent devaluation - and it was reported some stores were converting pesos at a rate as high as 25 to $1.

Thousands of Americans who have invested in high-interest Mexcan savings certificates and bonds-estimates of U.S. capital in Mexico range up to $1 billion-will lose money at the same rate at the eventual devaluation.

But American tourists, Mexico's biggest source of foreign capital, will find everything cheaper south of the border, and U.S. busness will have lower labor costs in Mexico.

Echeverria told the nation in a televised, four-hour speech summing up his six-year administration that the old exchange rate was no longer adequate to restore Mexico's balance of payments, which ran at a $1.2 billion deficit for the first six months of this year.

"The knowledge of that situation encourages the flight of fear capital which reduces the volume of national savings needed to finance our development," he said. "This could not continue."

Mexico's inflation rate, running twice as high as the U.S. cost of living, has made Mexican exports increasingly expensive for buyers in the United States and other countries.

Banks were closed Wednesday in honor of Echeverria's final report to the nation, so there was no immediate indicator of the float's effect on the economy.

"There are a lot of good things under our roof"

The case of the missing summer

I arrived at the office a little later than usual this morning. It seems that there was a small group of robed fanatics carrying signs that said the world was going to end. They were also chanting over and over again, "Open the schools before Labor Day, open the schools before Labor Day." Although no one was stupid enough to listen to them, they did tie up traffic for a while and made it impossible for me to get to my office at my usual ten o'clock.

No sooner than I slipped my key into the awaiting lock did I hear bells going off inside. The telephone can be a real bitch sometimes. I managed to open the door and catch the receiver on the fourth ring.

"Anthony Loafaskelli, private eye."

"Mr. Loafaskelli, I have a problem." The voice was male, young, and very anxious.

"That's why I'm here."

"I woke up this morning and ... and ... "

"And?"

"And it was, September!"

"This is earth shattering?"

"You don't understand! It's September!"

"The September part I understand. What I don't understand is why it upsets you so much. September always follows August."

"That's the point! I don't remember living through August, or July or June. In fact, the last thing I remember was May 20th!"

"You mean to tell me ... "

"That's right! My summer is missing!"

"Find it!"

"Find your summer?"

"That's right."

"I'm having enough trouble finding my own. Where would you like me to look?"

"Any place! You could start at my parents house, then you could go to the Cape, to the beaches, then you could try this shoe store I worked at. If that doesn't work you can try Sandy."

"Sandy?"

"We met in June and had a really nice relationship over the summer."

"You think she'd know?"

"Definitely!"

"And you think your folks would know and your friends at the Cape would know."

"Sure they'd know."

"And your employer?"

"He'd know too."

"So everyone around you knows where your summer went but you don't."

"I know it was there but I don't know exactly where."

"What makes you think I can find it?"

"A friend of mine from school told me you worked on his intersession last February."

"One question, what would you do with your summer if I could find it for you?"

"Why, I'd live it."

"You'd live it?"

"Sure. I must have had a great time."

"Sorry, but I don't think I can take your case."

"Why not!? Oh, I know, you're going to tell me to find my own summer."

"No, I'm going to tell you to stop looking."

"Stop looking? Why?"

"Because I don't want you as a repeat customer."

"What do you mean?"

"If you keep looking for your missing summer, you'll be back in December wondering what happened to your missing semester."

With that, I hung up the phone and went back to the key I had still in the lock, but this time, I took the phone off the hook.

from our perspective

Support the co-ops!

The financial malaise of most UMass students appears to be more severe than ever as we begin this new semester. Tuition hikes, dorm rent hikes and the paucity of jobs for students are only a few of the many factors contributing to the restraining situation.

But fortunately, due to the concerted efforts of a growing number of students, some relief from these fiscal straits is coming into view. A planned program of economic development, where students work for students, is taking shape on the campus.

Providing the fuel to this movement is the recent establishment of student alternative economic institutions. Over the past several years, Peoples' Market, a non-profit food cooperative, a student run credit union, a stereo co-op, a motorcycle co-op, an automotive workshop and a non-profit vegetarian restaurant, Earthfoods, have been set up. The obvious advantage to these student-owned cooperatives is that monies that otherwise would become the profits for outside groups would remain in the University community.

Other benefits and opportunities derived from student controlled businesses include: receiving practical experience, usually absent in a classroom setting; working in an atmosphere conducive to new forms of cooperation, mutual support and shared decision making; and the considerable lessening of worker alienation, the feeling of irrelevancy induced by the absence of sensing any connection with the product of one's work.

To make these financial ventures fruitful, a certain degree of coordination is required. The recent appointment of an Economic Department coordinator was a step in this direction. John Fisher, formerly with the Student Organization Project, possesses the capabilities and the desire to see that the revenues generated by these student groups are properly managed. And in selecting a sensitive individual such as Fisher, who will facilitate collective organization, it is unlikely that coordination will impose on the autonomy of any of these student groups.

If students don't help each other, who will? As we see it, the need for students to actively support these student run cooperatives is more pressing today than ever.

South Korea's web of fear

SEOUL, South Korea — Though international tensions over the death of two American soldiers in Korea's demilitarized zone have subsided, South Korea's 33 million citizens may be just beginning to feel the repercussions of what happened at Panmunjom.

For it is the threat of North Korean invasion or infiltration that President Park Chung Hee has used to justify — to the U.S. as well as the people of South Korea — the web of fear he has spun over his nation. And the Panmunjom incident could provide him with a new change to strengthen his dictatorial rule.

Fear is the real ruler of South Korea: fear of being grilled, tortured or imprisoned under Emergency Measure No. 9, banning all criticism of the government; fear of unemployment and hunger; and fear induced by a daily barrage of government warnings of an "imminent communist invasion."

So far, Park has kept the balance of terror in his favor. The spectre of invasion from the north still weighs more heavily than the reality of the Park dictatorship.

But even as the Panmunjom incident hit the news, South Korea was awaiting the outcome of one of the greatest recent confrontations between Park and his opposition: the trial of a group of prominent South Koreans who in a 1,500-word "Declaration for Democratic National Salvation" last March called for Park's resignation and the return of parliamentary democracy.

The group included a former South Korean president; a presidential candidate who almost defeated Park in 1971 before Park declared himself president for life; a former minister of foreign affairs and a number of the country's Christian leaders.

Such a risky public show of opposition — almost certain to bring a guilty verdict on charges of subversion and seeking to overthrow the government — was motivated by a sharp rise in government repression and the near collapse of South Korea's economy.

The world recession hit South Korea, heavily dependent on foreign investment, extremely hard last year. As foreign debts brought the nation to the brink of bankruptcy, inflation ranging between 20 and 40 per cent forced real wages down for the third year in a row. Only 13 per cent of the workforce remained above the government's estimated minimum urban standard of living.

Perhaps fearing rising dissent over economic issues, the Park regime launched a sharp attack on its critics. In 1975 it took over the last vestige of a free press, the Donga Ilbo newspaper; decreed Emergency Measure No. 9; converted the nation's college campuses into military garrisons under the "Student Defense Corps;" and expelled or suspended several hundred students, many for distributing reports of Gulf Oil's huge secret contributions to Park's 1971 campaign.

In February of this year, Park's education minister fired more than 400 professors, largely for political reasons. And in June a dozen ministers and social workers were arrested and charged with communist agitation in their work with Seoul slum dwellers and laborers.

Today South Korea cannot speak to foreign journalists without risking later questioning by police, and buses traveling between South Korea's cities are regularly stopped for identity checks. Verbal reports of the torture of political prisoners — though dangerous under Emergency Measure No. 9 — circulate consistently.

The creation of such a police state has, by now, painted Park into a corner — an explosive one. Having justified his repressive apparatus as the necessary price of vigilance against the communist threat, his survival is now dependent on public believe in that threat.

Should it diminish, his government would quickly lose whatever legitimacy it now has — both in the eyes of the South Korean people and the U.S. Congress, where Park's violation of human rights has come under increasing criticism.

So incidents like that at Panmunjom are in some ways Park's lifeblood. Some observers in Seoul even fear that should resistance to his regime grow strong enough to threaten him, Park might launch a "preemptive" strike against the north as the ultimate means to rally his people.

But with 40,000 U.S. troops and tactical nuclear weapons in South Korea, and two of the best trained, best equipped armies in the world facing each other across the demilitarized zone, this dependence on north-south tension has become extremely dangerous — for the world as well as the people of South Korea.

Think and vote

By TYLA L. MICHELOVE

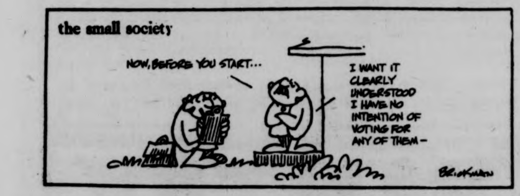
Here it is September again. This means it's time to do that go-back-to-school-jive, get an inspection sticker for that machine that barely gets you from here to there, shell out bucks for books you'll never read, see friends that you forgot to write to all summer (some that you just forgot) and simply settle back into that familiar fall groove.

While you are asking your new roommate where to put the refrigerator or what sign he-she might be, try asking him-her whether they are a Democrat, a Republican or an Independent. Then hit him-her with the biggy. Did they even bother to register?

September 14 is primary day and it is an important year for the state of Massachusetts. Our state is in financial and moral (though it is debatable either way) ruin. We can't balance our own budget and federal aid is not on its white charger (charge-it) way to rescue us.

The major issues have been ping-ponged through the legal system. Look at the abortion-contraceptive laws which have been amended back to their 1800's status (not that they are wholly constitutional). And as you are gazing in that direction, notice how little has changed in the racial balancing of the school systems (all over Massachusetts, not only Boston and Springfield).

It is obvious that the people who are in power are not effective, however it is not all their fault. The people of Massachusetts have allowed this to happen. Most often we complain about the failures of government and politicians and ignore our own responsibilities. If we don't start caring about ourselves, why should we expect others to do so for us. In September and again in November the power is placed directly in our hands. Each and every vote counts, each and every one of us is affected by the outcome of the elections.



the small society
NOW, BEFORE YOU START...
I WANT IT CLEARLY UNDERSTOOD I HAVE NO INTENTION OF VOTING FOR ANY OF THEM — BRICKMAN

The first step in changing the waste of money and talent now in control is to be aware. Find out the merits and flaws of each candidate. It is as easy as reading the paper or listening to the radio. Think about what you believe the state needs and then vote.

Don't let your involvement stop there. Even politicians cannot operate in a vacuum, they only let the system flow, backward. If you think something needs change, write a letter and get people who agree with you to write as well. Remember, it only took a handful of concerned people to get Russell Daniels out of prison. (Russell Daniels is a retarded man who was convicted on a murder charge by evidence that appears to be illegally obtained. He is now in Belchertown State School.)

There is a lot that needs to be done before the state's political system will be effective as a source of power and a source of change, but absolutely nothing can happen if no one expresses a need for this change to the people who will do something into power. It is already too late to register for the primary or even to get an absentee ballot, but the opportunity is still yours for November. Before settling back into the comfort and stability of another September, exercise your right as a human being, to become aware, to become involved in the course of your own life. Think and vote.

'Earthfoods' clarified

To The Editor:

In regards to "A Guide to Vegetarian Restaurants", which appeared in the "Back to Campus" issue, certain statements were made by the authors which are misleading. The errors are not surprising as no members of our organization were contacted prior to printing. The information offered therein seems to be drawn from two articles by Paul Logue jr., written this summer, which are also erroneous in part.

To clarify the situation: 1] Earthfoods is now based in the Student Union Ballroom Buffet Kitchen [S.U. 303-307]; 2] We will be operating this semester a similar, but somewhat expanded vegetarian lunch program, located in the Student Union Commonwealth Room; 3] We are currently accepting applications for paid positions, with a Sept. 7 deadline, applications and info in the RSO office; and 4] Earthfoods, despite reports to the contrary, has had excellent relations with SAGA at UMASS. Although it seems obvious to all outside the issue that Earthfoods and SAGA should be at one another's throats, the fact is that we are not.

We hope to continue our international vegetarian cuisine, and to continue our community relations on a clearer basis.

Please address all inquiries pertaining to Earthfoods to the kitchen, or if immediate to myself, 549-0945.

This whole show

Well, I'm happy as a clam (which I always thought was a ridiculous analogy) to be back here. I'm kind of sick of answering how my summer was, probably you also, so let's skip that jazz.

Last night I had a revelation that everything that I'm going to burn the midnight oil here to learn, somebody already knows, not that it really matters. Socrates, and probably lots of other people, said that we should only appy ourselves to the knowledge of such things as are best for us. With that for my justification I just tore up my Core Requirement sheet, deeming Chemistry superfluous baggage for my grey matter. There are so many delicious non-academia oriented classes that my head spins whenever the time comes to choose between what the "Core" says I need and what I think I need. I don't know about you, but I'll take Socrates over the Board of Higher Education and learn what I need; then it comes back to whatever I'm going to learn someone else already knows.... so how was your summer?

My sister and I shared a cottage this summer. We had a guest for a few weeks in the form of a cricket. He wasn't your ordinary "drive you nuts when you can't get to sleep" variety; he was very special. We left the door open a lot and one day he just moved in. He lived behind the shower for a while but then decided to move to the closet — I think because it was closer to the radio. You see, he liked to sing like any other cricket, but he either was unable to make up his own tunes, or only wanted to attract a mate of similar tastes. The only time he ever made a sound was when the radio was on and playing something he liked. He didn't particularly like WRKO except for the Carpenters and slow songs. It was quite amazing how he could anticipate tempo, etc., to play right to the music. He liked most classical, oh yes, and he would sometimes sing along with television commercials. We'd try to trick him sometimes by changing the radio station in the middle of a song but without fail he'd stop immediately unless he happened to like the new one in which case he'd change his tune, as they say.

He was either very patient about attracting a mate by his music or too old to know the difference, but after a few weeks I decided that he'd better go back out into the wilds of Cape Cod maybe to make some baby crickets just like him; so when he came out of the closet (as he often did) one night I put him in my cup and carried him outside. Once in a while I imagined I heard a particularly melodic cricket tune, well it might have been him -- I tend to deal with creatures in anthropomorphic terms; I wonder if they deal with us in entopomorphic terms?

As far as this Fall goes, I'm pretty excited about my courses; it doesn't really matter though, I learn stuff from crickets as equally as I do from professors. So what am I doing here, you ask — probably because like Piet Hein:

commentary

In praise of hard workers

By JON HITE

The chances are pretty good that if you read the Collegian this year you'll read a lot about Chancellor Bromery, Dr. Wood, the legislature and the SOP. One of the main flaws of news journalism is that it only reports the big events, the hirings and firings, the elections and the coups, the law breakers and the news makers. Newspapers rarely report on the people who do the menial gut work, the work that leads to a bed being in your room and that new chair in the lounge.

So while you read a lot this year about the Bromery's and Wood's, this will probably be the only time that you will read about the E. Roger Smith's, the Herb Potter's and the Earl Youngs. While Bob Wood and Bill Bromery get the headlines and accolades, E. Roger Smith gets the backaches and the grade eight paycheck. And while Bob Wood and E. Roger Smith are about the same age, E. Roger is too smart to take the President's job and Bob Wood is probably too weak to carry butcher block furniture.

To understand what E. (for efficiency) Roger Smith is like you must first picture him. A gruffy deep voice with an ever-present Newport, slowly burning down to the grey moustache, topped with a red "Mac Tools" cap. Roger Smith also likes keys. About fifty of them, slung on one of his three belts. And if you catch him during the working hours, he has one other distinguishing feature: sweat.

It was Roger Smith and Herb Potter and Earl Young who entered the dorms on May 22 and emerged yesterday. They carried furniture, set up rooms, moved offices, changed mattresses etc. ad infinitem. They returned concrete walls to 'livable spaces'. And the work study students ... God Bless work study.

There are a lot of people who make this place click. They come to work at the crack of dawn and just do their jobs. They are the locksmiths, painters, groundskeepers and carpenters. They don't wear suits and ties but they are just as important as the people who do. But for some reason they never get any credit for what they do.

I have yet to see a building on this campus named after its workforce. I have never heard of the trustees giving a scholarship in honor of a physical plant employee. And I have never seen the Student Senate honor anyone, or criticize anyone who doesn't work at Whitmore. We go and listen to presidential candidates and professors but have you ever watched the craftspersonship of a mason?

Butterfield dorm was renovated this summer, and the people who did the work did an excellent job of getting the dorm ready for the opening of school. The people who did this and all the other jobs that were done this summer probably will never see their names in lights or have an office of their own. They will, however, have the feeling of accomplishment that goes with doing something special. Twenty years from now, when Butterfield is renovated again, a retired tradesperson will drive by the dorm and smile. It will be like graduating high school all over again.

So, to all those people, the E. Roger Smiths and the others, who will never get their deserved rewards, THANKS.

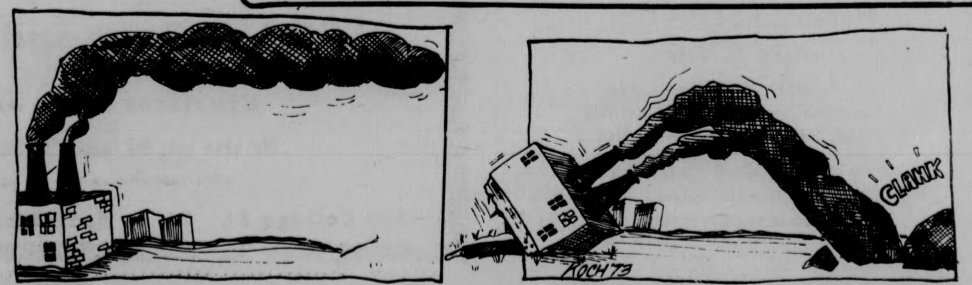
Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.



WHAT'S HAPPENING

Credits now available for fall campaign work

As partisan political battles begin heating up in this Presidential election year, undergraduate UMass politicos will again be able to earn academic credit while garnering votes for the candidate of their choice, via Project Ten's course in Practical Politics.

Kenneth Mosakowski, instructor of the political practicum since its inception in 1973, said in addition to the Presidential race between Ford and Carter and Senator Kennedy's re-election bid, local contests are shaping up for U.S. Representative in the First Congressional District, state senator in the Franklin - Hampden - Hampshire senatorial district, Hampshire County commissioner, and Hampshire County register of deeds.

Students interested in signing up for the practicum should inquire immediately at the Project Ten Academic Office in Pierpont House.

The first meeting of the practicum will be tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Classroom I of Pierpont House.

Bike repair collective offering free classes

The Bicycle Repair Collective in Amherst says they will provide students with parts, accessories, and quality repair work at fair prices. If a bicycle needs a major or minor repairs, the collective will do it or will teach students how.

The collective is now offering free, one session classes every Wednesday at 4:30 p.m. The monthly schedule is as follows:

First Wednesday: Basic Maintenance and Repair; Second Wednesday: Ten-Speed Riding Techniques; Third Wednesday: Basic Maintenance and Repair (Repeated); Fourth Wednesday: How to Buy a Bike.

The Bicycle Repair Collective is located at 51 South Prospect Street in Amherst. The hours are Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and the phone number is 256-6852.

General library tours scheduled for Sept. 10

General library tours will be given three times daily, at 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m., and 2:30 p.m. through Sept. 10th. Thereafter, they will be offered each Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 p.m.

For further information call 5-0150.

Role of dreams in life subject of film series

"Dreams and Your Life" is the title of a film series that will explore some of the ways that people have defined dreams and the role that they play in our lives. The first film of this series is "Gestalt Dream Analysis", with Dr. Fritz Perls.

The film will be shown at the Amherst Center Thursday, Sept. 9 at 8:30 p.m. and Friday, Sept. 10 at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.

Perls is the founder of Gestalt Therapy, and the film shows Perls demonstrating his method for discovering and expressing the meaning of dreams of college students.

The next film in the series, shown the last weekend in September, will focus on the dream theory of Carl Jung, who defines a dream as a prophecy of the future.

For more information about the films, contact the Amherst Center at 253-2500. The center is located in downtown Amherst behind Faces of Earth. Discount tickets and group rates are available.

'1776' auditions set for chapel next week

Auditions for parts in the forthcoming UMass Fine Arts Center production of "1776" will take place Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, September 7, 8, 9, from 7 to 10 p.m. in the band room of the Old Chapel, UMass-Amherst Campus.

The hit broadway musical "1776" will feature broadway actor Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge.

The remaining 23 parts will be filled with actors-singers from the Pioneer Valley area. The parts to be filled include two women, Abagail Adams and Martha Jefferson, sopranos, and 21 men, mainly character parts who play members of the Continental Congress.

Musical director for the production will be Fredrick Tillis.

All area actors-singers are invited to try out. Please be prepared to sing, and bring music. An accompanist will be provided.

For further information, call (413) 545-0202.

Transit service begins full weekday schedule

The Student Senate Transit Service is now running buses on the full service weekday schedule. Passenger schedules are available at the Campus Center Information Desk and on all buses.

Weekend service will begin Saturday, Sept. 11. The transit service says the schedule will be available soon.

'What the Butler Saw' auditions begin today

Open auditions for Joe Orton's "What the Butler Saw" will be held in Rm 201 Fine Arts Center today and tomorrow at 7 p.m.

"What the Butler Saw" will be the first production of the season for the Univ. Ensemble Theater, UMass Theater Department, and will be directed by William Pullman.

Adams family papers featured in library

The Microforms Room on the main level of the Univ. Library is currently featuring an exhibit on the Adams family papers. A 608-reel microfilm set, this collection contains public and private papers of Presidents John and John Quincy Adams, Charles Francis Adams, and their wives and children. Included are journals letters, state papers, scrapbooks, etc.

Inspection time runs to middle of October

Registrar of Motor Vehicles Robert A. Panora reminds owners and operators of all motor vehicles and trailers registered in Massachusetts that the compulsory Fall Inspection began yesterday and ends Oct. 15.

Official inspection stations located throughout the state (4,082 of them) have been checked by Registry officers and are now ready to perform the required inspection. The fee for a motor vehicle is $2. The fee for a trailer inspection is 50 cents.

Supervisor of Vehicle Inspection Ernest E. Sabatino says that motorists must have a registration certificate, and the vehicle identification number on it must match the one on the vehicle itself. If it does not, go to the insurance company for a correction. The registration number on the certificate must match the number on the plates. If they do not match, go to a Registry office for correction.

Items to be checked include: brakes, stop lights, lights, horn, exhaust system, steering gear, windshield, windshield cleaners, number plates, rear windows, tires, fenders, bumpers, external sheet metal, reflectors, splash guards and chock blocks and pollution control systems or devices.

Vehicles passing inspection are marked with an official blue sticker printed in black; those not passing are marked with a rejection sticker.

Registrar Panora advises drivers of rejected vehicles to go immediately to a garage of their choice and have the necessary repairs made and then return to the inspection station which issued the rejection sticker where the vehicle will be re-inspected at no additional charge.

Supervisor Sabatino says that persons driving with a rejection sticker can be stopped by an enforcement officer for a further check on the safety of the car. Owners and-or operators can be prosecuted for operating with inadequate or defective equipment as well as for operating without a valid inspection sticker and the registration can be suspended.

Sabatino advises early inspections so that necessary parts may be obtained to make repairs before the close of the inspection period.

"We get many calls saying that the parts for cars won't be available by the last day of inspection," Sabatino said. "All we can tell them is that as of midnight on the last day, the vehicle becomes an outlaw on the highway and is subject to being stopped and issued a citation."

Pipeline security questioned

[Pacific News Service] — The trouble-plagued trans-Alaska oil pipeline has run into new problems involving its leak-detection and control system that could allow sizeable oil spills to go unnoticed in the remote Alaskan wilderness.

Already bedeviled by cost overruns and faulty welding problems, the line from Alaska's article slope to Valdez is now 75 percent complete. Its owners, a consortium of eight oil companies known collectively as Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., hope to have oil flowing by the end of next year.

To insure against undected leaks along the 800-mile line, Alyeska has designed a sophisticated set of devices, including a back-up system, to warn operators at the Valdez southern terminus of pipeline breaks.

Even though some components of the leak detection system are already in place, state and federal documents indicate that the ultrasonic flowmeters — a key device in the back-up system — may not be able to detect leaks smaller than 71,000 gallons per day when the line is operating at maximum capacity.

Smaller leaks would be regarded as normal metering discrepancies within the one-tenth of one percent accuracy range promised by Westinghouse, manufacturer of the devices.

The 71,000 gallon per day figure is more than twice the size of the smallest leak Alyeska said it would be able to detect when the firm secured state and federal approval to build the controversial line. According to the 1972 Environmental Impact Statement for the project, "Alyeska expects to be able to detect a leak smaller than 31 barrels an hour (31,248 gallons per day) by the line-volume balance method."

The line-volume balance system — the original leak detection system — is more accurate but operationally less reliable than ultrasonic flowmeters, according to a 1974 report prepared for the Interior Department's Alaska Pipeline Office (APO) by Mechanics Research Inc., a California-based engineering firm.

The report warned that the line-volume balance system, which relies on more then 70 interrelated components for proper operation, could be immobilized by equipment failure. It recommended that Alyeska install the ultrasonic flowmeters — as yet unproven in large pipeline service — as a back-up system at each of the line's 12 pump stations.

The flowmeters operate by bouncing ultrasonic waves across the pipeline and measuring the return time. By comparing measurements at two successive pump stations, losses due to breakage along the line can be detected and signaled to operators at Valdez.

But given the one-tenth of one percent error margin, the line could leak up to about 1,200 barrels per day (or 71,000 gallons) when operating at capacity without triggering the warning signal.

Bob Carter, project manager for the Harris Corp. of Melbourne, Fla., which designed the pipeline supervisory control system, says he doesn't know how much of the time the line-volume balance method will be in operation. Nor does he know how accurate the back-up ultrasonic flowmeter system will be.

A spokesman for the Anaheim, Cal. - based Flour Corp., Alyeska's major contractor for pump stations and the Valdez terminal, says "standing orders" prevent him from commenting on any aspect of the project without clearance from Alyeska.

Alyeska's News Media Supervisor, John Ratterman, has not answered recent inquiries concerning the reliability or accuracy of either of the two leak detection systems.

In addition to the computer monitoring systems, Alyeska plans aerial and ground inspection of the 800-mile line. However, rough flying conditions, coupled with the remoteness of the line, will hamper these patrols, especially during the long Alaskan winters.

Underground leaks, meanwhile, could go undetected for months. A recent leak in a small underground fuel line at an Alyeska construction camp went unnoticed for five months before the fuel began seeping to the surface. By that time more than 100,000 gallons had been lost.

Approximately 350 miles of the pipeline — carrying 475,000 gallons of oil in every mile when operating at capacity — will be buried.

Fall Continuing Ed courses being offered here, Holyoke

Registration for fall courses offered by the Division of Continuing Education at UMass will continue through Sept. 11.

Continuing Education offers evening courses on the Amherst campus and a selection of day and evening courses at Holyoke Community College in cooperation with HCC. The division's academic program and specialized counseling are designed for the part time, evening, and non-traditional students. In addition to flexible alternatives to full time, conventional education, Continuing Education offers its own degree, the Bachelor of General Studies.

Space is still available in many of the more than 100 courses which cover a full range of subjects. A sampling of courses includes Hotel Travel and Restaurant Administration, an introductory course taught by the head of the department; Introduction to Rocks and Minerals; Visual Arts of Asia, an historical survey course emphasizing the development of Buddist art in India; and Geology and Man.

Others include Man and the Horse, a study of the role horses have played from past to present society; Plant Pathology, a course about plants and their diseases, taught by the head of the department; Introduction to the Polish People; and European History with Film, an unusual history course that provides an introduction to the period from 1500-1875 through the use of films.

Enrollment in Continuing Education courses is open to anyone with a high school degree or equivalent. Part-time students are eligible for veteran's benefits, and students carrying six or more credits may apply for financial aid.

Late registration will be accepted, for an additional fee, today through Sept. 11 at the Hills House Lobby. The hours of registration are Monday-Thursday from 9 a.m. - 7 p.m., Friday from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. Late registration at Holyoke Community College will be held in Building B, Room 201 today, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday from 6-7:30 p.m.

Further registration information may be obtained from the Division's office, or by phoning 545-3653.

Beirut money flees to Paris

By ED GIRARDET
Pacific News Service

PARIS, France — They are booked in the best hotels, they buy the most expensive flats and they deal in anything. They are the Lebanese business community in Paris, transplants from a civil war that has rendered Beirut — the former banking capital of the Middle East — an economic wasteland.

With no end in sight in sight after 16 months of fighting, these well-to-do expatriates are quietly adopting France as their second base of operations and doing business almost as if the war did not exist.

Before the war, Beirut's virtually unregulated, gold-backed economy and excellent communications and commercial facilities had earned it the title "Switzerland of the Middle East." When business began fleeing late last year, Arab cities like Kuwait and Amman and European capitals like Athens and London vied to replace it.

But Paris won, firmly establishing itself as the Middle Eastern financial capital-in-exile.

The peculiar attraction of Paris for the Lebanese, especially the Christian middle class, stems from Lebanon's former status as a French protectorate. French language and customs have long been held in high esteem by the Lebanese "haute societe," and many wealthy Lebanese already had children studying in France or friends or business contacts there.

"We all speak French at home and my children went to one of the French-speaking high schools in Beirut," one Christian businessman explained.

"Apart from that, most of my clients are Europeans and Americans who prefer to make preliminary arrangements on Middle East business deals in Europe before actually taking the step of heading out there."

While the number of officially registered Lebanese in Paris is now 15,000, unofficially there are between 30,000 and 50,000 — including dual nationals not obliged to register and others who simply choose not to.

About 80 per cent are middle-class Christians, but not all are businessmen. There has also been a large influx of professionals — lawyers, doctors, architects and artists — plus a number of students.

The French immigration authorities have even set up a special bureau in Paris for Lebanese refugees, be they moneyless students or free-spending families with flats in Paris' chic 16th arrondissement (district).

CURIOUS DEALINGS

Besides the more permanent transplants, the French capital has become the haunt of transient Lebanese intermediaries, staying perhaps two or three days in town to make contacts or prepare deals before winging off to other rendezvous in London, Brussels or Riyadh.

"The Lebanese businessman in Paris deals with anything. You name it, he deals in it," said one lawyer. The product could be petroleum, medical instruments, roof fittings, drugs or arms.

"There may be representatives of between two or three hundred Lebanese companies or entrepreneurs at any one time in Paris," said one Paris-based Lebanese lawyer. "If you want to see someone, you usually know that they will pass through town sooner or later."

But try looking up one of these contacts by conventional means and you will come to a full stop.

Few business groups are actually mentioned in the telephone or business directories. Business relations tend to be developed by contacts.

Lebanese intermediaries also camouflage their presence or activities behind partnerships with French nationals or use established companies as fronts. Only about 30 firms, mostly trading groups or banks, are actually registered with the Franco-Lebanese Chamber of Commerce in Marseille.

There are at least three reasons for this intense craving to remain incognito.

For some, conducting questionable business activities, a no-fixed-abode presence in Paris can help them steer clear of the authorities. "They do not want to attract attention, so they prefer to use residential quarters for their business activities," said one French property dealer of his Lebanese clients. "In this manner, they can remain undeclared to the authorities."

Other Lebanese prefer to remain "unofficial" until the future of their own country is settled. While heavily investing in property — whether officeblocks in Paris or villas on the Riviera — they are unwilling to commit themselves to long-term obligations, such as formal company registration.

Although many want to return home," said one banker, "Beirut will never be the same and you can bet your money that they will still keep a foothold in Paris ... just in case."

Still others are unwilling to make their presence felt here because they fear reprisals from home.

Some Christian businessmen, for example, have not been paying their dues or "protection" money to the Phalangists (right-wing Christians in Lebanon). Others have been paying, but with too much enthusiasm — and their names have become known to rival organizations.

"Even when that mess is finished out there," said one Lebanese lawyer living in Paris, "some guys will remain marked men and there will be a lot of settling of accounts."

FRENCH APPROVAL

The French government, meanwhile, is glad to see such a prolific Lebanese presence here.

With their polyglot occidental-oriental background, the Lebanese seem most able to act as intermediaries between Westerners and Arabs. "The Middle East is a very important economic area for France," said one Finance Ministry official. "A Lebanese presence brings us the right contacts we need right on our doorstep."

Lebanese also have traditionally acted as intermediaries in all former French African colonies except North Africa, and with their network of contacts business is bound to be thrown toward Paris.

To facilitate their presence here, the government makes provisional work permits readily available to them. Lebanese students quickly receive scholarships and loans, though now — with the vast influx of students — many are being forced to scrounge for a living.

Quake fears fake?

BERKELEY, Ca. — Fears that the planet may be coming apart in a thundering storm of tremors — with the U.S. West Coast an imminent next victim — are groundless, according to one quake expert here.

What appears to be a quake epidemic, says William Cloud, earthquake researcher at the University of California's Berkeley Seismographic Station, is actually nothing more than increased news attention given normal quakes that happened to cause unusually heavy loss of life.

The recent Chinese and Philippine earthquakes, said Cloud, occurred in two densely populated areas known to shake frequently and violently. Most Asian quakes, he said, occur in sparsely populated areas and are little noticed.

The August quakes struck both regions with massive force and in places where urban centers made vulnerable targets for crushing devastation.

More than 25,000 persons have died in earthquakes this year, according to U.S. Geological Survey data — not including heavy fatalities suffered in huge Soviet and Chinese quakes where figures were not available.

Nonetheless, Cloud says, the frequency and strength of this year's quake totals are not unusual.

Measured for damage, however, 1976 quakes are the most costly since 1970. That year 67,000 lost their lives when a normal number of quakes hit viciously at heavily settled regions in Peru and Turkey.

PLATE THEORY

A leading but recent theory of earthquakes — called the plate tectonic theory — holds that the earth's land masses sit atop a set of huge plates that move around ever so slowly. That, according to the theory, can give rise to tremendous pressure points that occasionally break free with potentially city-wrecking violence.

But earthquake frequency along the North American plate, Cloud says, is entirely unconnected with that along the Asian plate.

UMass awarded grant for pollution research

Grants totaling $353,700 from the Massachusetts Division of Water Pollution Control (MDWPC) have been awarded to UMass for waste treatment and water pollution research by the Environmental Engineering Program.

The state grants, made by MDWPC Director Thomas McMahon, will provide for the operation of a large-scale experimental waste treatment plant, research in treatment and disposal of septage tank pumpings, and evaluation of pollution caused by storm water and sanitary landfill seepage.

The grants will also provide for a study of water quality improvements that result from construction of new treatment plants in the state and will support construction of a modern toxicity bioassay laboratory to determine the effect of specific chemicals on aquatic life.

Principal investigators for the projects are Drs. Donald D. Adrian, Francis A. DiGiano, Tsuan H. Feng and Enrique J. LaMotta of the Environmental Engineering Program. John Elwood of the MDWPC is the project officer for the grants.

Research funded by existing state grants has been underway for three years at UMass, centering around the experimental wastewater pilot plant at the west end of campus near the Amherst town treatment plant.

Detailing the research to be done under the new grants, DiGiano explained that an important segment will be treatment methods for removal of nitrogen and non-biodegradable organic pollutants. The former can cause excessive algae growth and deplete the dissolved oxygen content, serious water quality problems in both rivers and lakes.

Non-biodegradable organic pollutants, particularly those synthetically produced, build up in the food chain and can affect drinking water supply.

"Research at UMass will focus on carbon absorption for removal of organics; combined with chlorination, this process can also remove nitrogen," DiGiano explained.

Also planned is a study of irrigation of crops using treated sewage from the UMass pilot plant. This process, known as land disposal, eliminates wastewater discharge into waters and directly replenishes ground water. Although not yet used in this state, it is being considered by one town on Cape Cod and may be further used. Among areas to be studied will be the effects of sewage pretreatment and how crop type and soil type affect the efficiency of the process.

The stormwater pollution research will continue earlier work by UMass environmental engineers under federal grants. Results of the research will be used to plan for data collection and analysis at several field study sites in the state.

In another ongoing research project that will be continued, seepage from a demonstration sanitary landfill site in Barre is being collected, analyzed and treated.

"We hope the results will help towns cope with problems of surface and groundwater pollution caused by improper siting and operation of sanitary landfills," he said.

The research on water quality improvement will cover streams and lakes. Studies of stream water quality will be closely coordinated with the state to provide input for models used to predict improvements that result when new treatment plants are constructed. In a similar approach the quality of lakes in which pollution has been reduced will be monitored.

Along with the research, which will cover a period just short of three years, will go research reports which will be made available throughout the state by the MDWPC, plus a series of seminars.

The UMass Environmental Engineering Program, part of the Civil Engineering Department, has received approximately $1 million in research support from the MDWPC since 1970.

Indians defy law for tradition

(Pacific News Service) – They danced four days without food or water, blowing shrill eaglebone whistles to a drumbeat pounding like the heart of the earth.

Circling around a cottonwood tree strung with colored cloth, the exhausted sundancers prepared for the climax of their religious duties. Tethered to the three by the long cord fastened to eaglebone pierced through their chests, one by one the men thrust back until the bone tore through flesh and they were free.

From every direction these sundancers gathered: Eskimos from Alaska, Sioux from South Dakota, Yaquis from Mexico – bringing this ancient religious ceremony to California's Sacramento Valley, where for the first time they were joined by Chicanos.

The women in dresses, the men bare-chested and wearing red skirts and crowns of sage with eaglefeathers, they could have been dancing a century ago when members of the Great Plains tribes – the Sioux, Arapaho, Blackfoot, Cheyenne – danced the same dance and underwent the same deprivation and pain.

Then, as now, the ordeal – culminating in the painful piercing and tearing of flesh – represented a sacrificial offering to future existence, like labor pains and wounds of war.

In the last century, when the Plains tribes faced genocide, the sundance helped maintain a collective will and pride that enabled them to endure.

At least partly because the religion played such a central role in the culture of the Plains tribes, the sundance was banned on Pine Ridge in 1884 and outlawed by federal statute in 1890 – the same year the Army, alarmed by ghost dancing among the Sioux, had Sitting Bull killed and massacred Big Foot's band at Wounded Knee.

The First Amendment notwithstanding, the government ban remained in effect until 1934, although a modified form of sundancing, without chest piercing, developed among the Utes and Shoshones during the early decades of this century.

Now, ironically, the law is in part responsible for the spread of the sundance to the West Coast. American Indian Movement (AIM) leader Dennis Banks, a sundancer since 1971, was unable to return to South Dakota for the summer observance because of state charges against him stemming from a courthouse riot in the town of Custer.

Rather than return and risk arrest, Banks obtained approval from Sioux spiritual leader Leonard Crow Dog to hold the first sundance on the West Coast.

"You go and find the land where this is going to be and we will do it," said Crow Dog, who has since been imprisoned in South Dakota on assault charges.

Banks selected the campus of DQU, a five-year-old Indian-Chicano university near Davis, Ca., named after Deganawidah, who established the Great Law of Peace on which the Iroquois League of Nations was founded, and Quetzacoatl, featured serpent god of ancient Mexico.

Banks said he considered the site especially appropriate since the sundance "is going to be a tremendous factor in unifying Indians and Chicano people." Chicanos, he notes, represent the fastest growing ethnic minority in the West and are increasingly aware of their Indian heritage and common cause with groups like AIM.

For weeks before the dance in mid-August, Chicanos and Indians arrived at DQU to prepare for the ceremony. They erected an arbor shaded with palm fronds encircling the dance grounds, performed sweat lodge purification ceremonies and took spiritual instruction from Oglala medicine men Severt White Bear and Charlie Kills Enemy.

At a sacred fire ceremony, Hopi spokesman Thomas Banyacya gathered the participants around a conical stack of burning branches and told them, "If we can create spiritual unity we will enter a phase in which all mankind will recognize each other as one people."

Then the Hopi prophet prayed for rain to cleanse the earth. And it rained – in the midst of an extensive drought.

It rained two nights. Vast banks of clouds darkened the days and a chilly wind blew through the arbor, yet the celebrants – 34 in all – danced continuously around the cottonwood tree, refusing food or drink. In the center of the undulating circle, Banks, holding an eagle feather, faced the dancers and guided their movements.

On the third morning, two cords were hung from the tree. Beneath it, Lee Polanco, a Chicano, and Quiltman, a Warm Springs, lay outstretched on a buffalo skin as Banks pierced their flesh with thin, sharp pieces of eaglebone on both sides of the chest. He then attached the cords, ending in two loops, over the bone.

The other dancers gave a cheer as they rose. All watched silently, apprehensively, as the two danced four times to the tree of life, then moved back until the cords were taut.

Lee polanco freed himself easily. His arms outstretched, Polanco ran backwards until the bone tore free and the cord whipped against the tree. But the Warm Springs, a large, good-natured man, pulled back many times, his chest flesh stretched by the bloody cord, before skin yielded and he could dance again.

Both men, their flesh wounds bleeding, passed through the lines of sundancers, sharing a soulshake or a hug with those within the sacred circle.

On the fourth day, after all but one of the men had pierced, it was Banks' turn. After dancing four times toward the tree, he ran outward and, turning, leapt gracefully, like a panther. The cord flew up; he was free.

Meanwhile, the sun appeared through a clearing in the clouds and an eagle flew over the arbor. These were signs, onlookers said, that the sundance was a success. When Banks asked people to pledge to dance next year, 44 men and women entered the arbor.

Fund gets $9000

The Class of 1911 Scholarship Endowment Fund at UMass has been increased by nearly $9000 through a gift from the man who established the fund.

Edgar M. Brown of Simsbury, Conn., one of five surviving members of the Class of 1911 of UMass, began the fund in 1974 for scholarships for worthy students.

Income for the fund is used to assist students who work to earn a matching amount. The fund is administered by the UMass Foundation, a non-profit corporation set up to provide UMass financial support in areas where the State cannot.

Brown, a long-time supporter of UMass, has had a career in landscape construction and general nursery work. As a student in the Massachusetts Agricultural College, he worked for 12½ cents an hour for the Horticulture Department. Brown says he feels the matching amount of money given from the fund to students working part-time provides "additional inspiration and incentive to strive."

He has also bought and restored Colonial estates and has built new homes with Colonial-style interiors. His public service activities include a 48-year membership in the Hartford Kiwanis Club, of which he is a past president, and membership in the Hartford area advisory group of the Salvation Army.

Brown is also a past president of the Connecticut Nurserymen's Association, and former member of several town committees in Simsbury, Conn.

Nuclear power mounting concern in South America

Brasilia, Brazil, (PNS) – With nuclear power slated to play a major role in South American development, concern is mounting that the region could become the scene of a nuclear arms race. Already Argentina and Brazil – traditional rivals – have joined the nuclear club. Brazil, whose atomic energy plants are being built by West Germany, will soon have an atomic fuel reprocessing facility capable of producing atomic bombs. Shortly after Brazil and West Germany concluded their nuclear agreement, the influential Jornal do Brasil predicted that Brazil would build a bomb once it had the capacity to do so. Unlike Argentina, Brazil has not signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Pact.

Brazil's first nuclear plant will go into operation next year, while Argentina already generates 11 percent of its electricity by nuclear power. But the greater sophistication of the Brazilian nuclear system has led to calls in Argentina for more nuclear power since the early 1950's – Brazil to complement its inadequate oil and coal resources, and Argentina as a hedge against depletion of its plentiful oil deposits.

Colombo, Sri Lanka, (PNS) – Latin American nations, many of which joined the non-aligned Third World movement three years ago, were either absent or strangely silent during the recently concluded Conference of Non-Aligned Nations in Colombo, Sri Lanka. The low-level participation was seen as a sign of the continuing rightward shift among Latin American governments. Chile, for example, an enthusiastic supporter of non-alignment at the 1973 conference, was conspicuous by its absence. And Peru, which has hosted similar conferences in the past, was virtually silent.

Of the seven Latin American nations that are full members of the non-aligned movement – as well as the 10 observer countries – only Panama sent a top-level delegation, headed by Gen. Omar Torrijos, who was appointed a vice president of the conference. Among the full members, Jamaica was the only other Latin American country to come out in strong support of the socialist economic policies adopted by the conference.

BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA, (PNS) – Just a month after the deaths of two top guerrilla leaders seemed to signal success for the Argentine military junta in its "war against subversion," the junta is facing rising resistance in civilian sectors.

Industrial workers, angered by wage freezes in the face of continued inflation and government drives to increase productivity, have staged slowdowns, strikes and even acts of sabotage. At a Mercedes Benz plant, workers pounded factory walls with hammers and shouted for pay raises during a series of 15-minute strikes. At an Ika-Renault plant, workers painted newly finished car bodies with slogans like "down with the military" and lists of exorbitant prices of basic goods. High voltage cables feeding iron ore ovens have been cut; prime beef has been hacked by meat-cutters to prevent export. Incidents continue to mount despite laws against strikes and despite arrests of key union leaders and assaults on labor activists by para-police death squads.

While political activity is strictly prohibited at universities as well – and secret police help maintain order and discipline – small acts of rebellion have sprouted up on campuses. In one philosophy section, almost an entire class lit up cigarets when a student was reprimanded for violating the strict ban on smoking. And wall slogans strongly penalized – have begun to appear, some calling for the overthrow of the junta or the freeing of political prisoners.

A key question now for the junta is whether the protests are spontaneous – or being organized in part by clandestine political groups with ties to leftist guerrillas.

La Paz, Bolivia, (PNS-LP) – In crushing the recent Bolivian miners' strike, Gen. Hugo Banzer again has demonstrated the combination of sophistication and force that has helped him stay in power for five years – a modern record for Bolivian rulers.

Avoiding the kind of bloody clash between troops and workers necessary to crush past strikes, Banzer arrested hundreds of union leaders, temporarily cut off food to mining areas, fired more than 400 miners and put strike areas off limits to the press. He then invited 100 carefully screened miners to La Paz, where they were wined and dined by government officials while wage negotiations were resumed. The selected miners agreed to a 30 percent wage boost, the same offer union leaders – who had demanded 100 percent to keep up with inflation – had rejected before the strike.

Similar tactics have been used against students who shut down seven of the nation's nine universities and many high schools in support of the minors and in protest against compulsory military service.

Lima, Peru, (PNS) – Just as the Peruvian junta has stopped calling itself "socialist," reports have begun to circulate that Peru has concluded a deal with the Soviet Union to buy 40 Russian fighter-bombers. Several newspapers and magazines in Latin America and Europe, including the respected London-based Flight International, have carried the reports. If they are true and the purchase is carried out – which some observers doubt because of Peru's recent turn to the right – the planes would change the military balance on Latin America's Pacific coast, now in Chile's advantage after the recent purchase of 18 U.S. planes.

The Robinson saga:

Problems hamper aging Brooks as a former star tries to stay lit

NEW YORK [UPI] — Brooks Robinson has the best pair of hands in baseball. They're so good, they've earned him 16 straight "Gold Glove" awards and nearly $2 million, yet they've also fumbled away all his finances.

Practically all, anyway.

"Ha, ha, your father is going to the poor house!" a neighborhood kid teased his eight-year-old daughter, Diana, the other day.

She ran home to her father.

"Daddy, they aren't going to take our house away, are they?" she asked, fighting to hold back tears.

"Of course not," he reassured her.

Three weeks ago, a circuit court judge ordered Brooks Robinson's home in Lutherville, Md., auctioned off following a mortgage foreclosure suit brought by a York, Pa., bank. The bank charged the Baltimore Orioles' popular third baseman hadn't paid back a $249,585 loan.

Brooks Robinson had obtained the loan for a sporting goods business he operates with two other partners in Timonium, Md. The loan was to have been paid back by April 13, but it wasn't. Robinson challenged the bank's figure. The bank subsequently said he owed only $196,256, but the judge's order to auction his home still stood. Also due to be auctioned was the home of one of his business partners.

Brooks Robinson has a wife and four kids. He's 39 and hasn't been playing much lately for the Orioles. With a .200 batting average and only 10 RBI's, he hardly needed another problem.

But he wasn't going to stand by and do nothing, so one day this week, he went to the bank, withdrew his life savings and repaid practically the entire loan.

In so doing, Brooks Robinson made sure he wouldn't lose his home. Neither will his partner now. The loan to Brooks Robinson's sporting goods business was made out in Robinson's name and, by repaying it, he saved two homes.

"Poor Brooks," says his wife, Connie. "Now we all know why he hasn't been able to play ball the past two years. I told him he worked 22 years playing ball, saving his money, and now he has to start all over again. If he lives 500 years, he'll never get back all that he put into his business."

Some ballplayers run around, some drink, some like to live big. Brooks never did any of these things. When news of his financial distress came to light, everybody's reaction was 'How could it possibly happen to somebody like upstanding, clean-living Brooks Robinson, baseball's all-American boy?'

"You just don't know how something like that happens," his wife says. "Brooks couldn't be at his sporting goods business all the time because he had to play ball. You have to put your trust and confidence in someone else in a case like that, and suddenly you're told all the money is gone. Brooks isn't down or depressed at all though. He must keep everything inside him. He's unreal. He looks at me every five minutes and says 'Are you all right?' I tell him, yes, until I start thinking about what happened."

Babe Ruth, Lefty Grove and John McGraw all played in Baltimore, but none was more popular than Brooks Robinson. As soon as people in Baltimore learned of his plight, his telephone never stopped ringing.

"They were absolutely incredible," says Connie. "They called up and offered him as much as $5,000 and $10,000 to help him out. They didn't want to lend him the money, they wanted to give it to him. They hated to see Brooks in a mess. But you know Brooks. He wouldn't take a penny. He's such a proud person. This whole thing is a shame. He didn't do anything dishonest or illegal, he only made a bad investment.

"Brooks Robinson has a wife and four kids. He's 39 and hasn't been playing much lately for the Orioles. With a .200 batting average and only 10 RBI's, he hardly needed another problem."

NFL ups roster size by three

NEW YORK [UPI] — Putting an end to weeks of waiting and bated breath for nearly 400 players, the National Football League Wednesday again amended its constitution to set a 43-player limit for the regular season, although the owners saw fit to give the league's two first-year teams a break.

The 26 established teams must get down to the 43 player limit by 6 p.m. EDT Sept. 6, while the two incoming franchises, Seattle and Tampa Bay, will be allowed to carry 49 players for the first two games of the season. Only 43 of those would be able to dress on game day.

The Seahawks and Buccaneers must cut their rosters to 45 players during the third week, again with just 43 of them dressing for the games.

Also, the league extended the interconference trading deadline from Sept. 6 to 4 p.m. EDT Sept. 8.

The current roster size is 49, plus college all-stars — except 60 on the expansionist Seattle Seahawks and Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Without the amendment to the league constitution, each of the 28 NFL clubs would have been forced to cut down to 36 — a total paring of 386 players — by the Sept. 12 league openers. The constitution has been amended on a yearly basis for the past dozen years.

The league owners, holding their annual summer meeting here to iron out final details for the season, were hoping the question of roster size would be settled as part of a new basic agreement with the NFL Players Association.

The players have not had a contract since January 1974 and played without a contract for the last two seasons. There was a brief strike during training camp preceding the 1974 season and a wildcat strike of five clubs, led by the New England Patriots, during the 1975 preseason.

Martin sinks Solomon

Obscure Billy Martin (no, not the Yankee Manager) displays a victory jump after upsetting 10th seeded Harold Solomon in the 1976 U.S. Open Tennis championships. Solomon still bothered from his loss to Bjorn Bjorg in the finals at Longwood, lost in straight sets, 5-7, 4-6.

Promoter files suit against Ali

BOSTON [UPI] — Fight promoter Helyn C. Hall filed a $3 million federal suit against Heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali and his manager Wednesday, accusing them of breach of contract.

Hall alleged Herbert Muhammad contracted in February to stage the Ali-Ken Norton title fight in Boston at an undetermined date. The fight has since been announced for New York's Madison Square Garden.

Hall said she "undertook the responsibilities of promoter expending much time and effort and money in the pursuit and did in fact secure proper and sufficient funding for the promotion according to the terms of the contract and in all ways met all of her obligations under said contract."

She said she expected to make about $3 million on the proposed fight, based on projections offered by Muhammad.

The U.S. District Court suit sought an injunction against the Ali-Norton bout in New York, an order the fight be held in Boston, or, if neither the injunction or order is granted, an award of $3 million in damages.

Transsexual doctor threatens USTA

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — In a cross-country exchange of telegrams Wednesday on the first day of the U.S. Open, transsexual Dr. Renee Richards threatened to sue the United States Tennis Association, and Stan Malless, president of the USTA, responded by saying, in effect, "just try it!"

"I have received your reply to my application that my participation (in the Open) is conditioned upon a determination of the results of a chromosome test," the 42-year ophthalmologist and former Richard Raskind said from Beverly Hills, Calif. "This is to give you the opportunity to waive your archaic concept of what constitutes a woman and admit me as an alternate in the tournament.

"My right to be recognized as a woman, as well as the infringement of my civil rights, are patently involved. If I am not permitted to participate, this will serve as notice to you of my intention to sue the tournament committee and all others involved for appropriate redress and damages."

Malless' reply was quick and stinging, as if he had been waiting for the threat from Richards. He said she is out of the tournament because she failed to show up at a qualifying site on Monday.

"In reply to your request for a waiver of the chromosome test requirement," Malles said, "we are not able to grant such a waiver because it would be unfair to other participants in the tournament who are taking the test.

"In any event, we note that your failure to appear on August 30th at any qualifying site foreclosed your opportunity to become an alternate. You were notified earlier of the need to appear on that date. This failure renders academic your request for a waiver."

Soviet officials downplay prestige of Canada Cup

MOSCOW [UPI] – Soviet sports officials are playing down the importance of the Canada Cup ice hockey tournament.

The view circulated here is the six-nation competition – as far as the Soviets are concerned – is merely a warmup for bigger and better things.

"We regard this tournament as an important stage in preparation for the world championship," senior Soviet Coach Viktor Tikhonov told the Tass News Agency.

Arkady Chernyshov, chairman of the chief council of coaches of the Soviet Ice Hockey Federation, added:

"An attempt is obviously being made to raise the prestige of this tournament above the world championship. We do not agree with it. In any kind of sport, the world championship and olympic tournament are the main and most important competition."

What makes the Soviet attitude interesting is the fact the Canada Cup will involve both professional and amateur players, so the six clubs should constitute the best ice hockey teams anywhere.

The quality of the competition, therefore, ought to exceed that at the world or olympic championships, where amateurs alone are supposed to compete.

In the past, newspapers here have spared no enthusiasm in their reports of meetings between national hockey league professionals and the Soviet national team.

Each Soviet victory is billed dutifully as another example of how the local club of "amateurs" has "shattered the myth of invincibility" of the NHL. This was especially true following the successful North American tour earlier this year by two of the best Soviet clubs: Central Army and Wings of the Soviets.

Emphasis usually is placed on how Soviet players, who compete as non-paid amateurs, although they do nothing but play hockey and are paid by the state for doing so, have overcome the professionals.

Officials have not indicated why they are playing down the Canada Cup.

But some observers have suggested the attitude may lie in a large scale ice hockey rebuilding program here after what – by Moscow standards – was a disastrous year in 1976.

Czechoslovakia beat the Soviet club in the world championship this spring and the stunned Russians then proceeded to come in third in the European championships.

"Not quite a good showing," was how the newspaper Pravda described those two performances in a statement showing considerable restraint.

Soviet coaches came under fire following those results, especially for their failure to introduce new blood into the national team.

The result has been not only new players, but also new coaches such as Tikhonov, Boris Mayorov and Robert Cherenkov.

On the ice, familiar names such as Valery Kharlamov, Alexander Yakushev, Vladimir Shadrin, Boris Petrov, Boris Mikhailov and Yuri Lyapkin will not be heard in Montreal.

Some, like the highly talented Kharlamov, are out because of injury. He broke both legs in a car accident last spring. But others have simply had to make way for younger men.

In warmup games, the new-look Soviet team, which was dubbed "experimental" in some press reports here last month, fared well against Sweden and the United States as well as against several local clubs.

But Tikhonov is prepared in case his club should not do as well in the Canada Cup.

"In inviting players for the national team we thought not only of the nearest (world) championship, but looked as far ahead as the 1980 olympics," he said.

So much for the Canada Cup.

Sports in brief...

Vitas Gerualitis from Kings Point, New York easily ousted Bruce Manson of Los Angeles 6-4, 6-1 at Forest Hills. Among the other first-round winners are Authur Ashe and Roscoe Tanner.

Willie McCovey will be in the starting line-up when the Oakland A's end their three-game series with the New York Yankees tonight. McCovey, who has hit 465 home runs in an 18-year major league career, was obtained from the San Diego Padres and will be used by the A's as a designated hitter.

Left fielder Greg Luzinski of the Philadelphia Phillies has a slightly inflamed right knee and will miss several more games. Luzinski, who had surgery on the knee two years ago, has missed the last four games.

The NFL's Management Council says negotiations between the NFL owners and players are back to proposals of two months ago. The Council made the statement today after the players rejected a compromise proposal last night.

The wealthier World Series of golf gets underway tomorrow at Akron, Ohio with such top pro names as Jack Nicklaus, Johnny Miller and Lee Trevino competing. Nicklaus said the thing that got him interested in the tournament was the unlikely 100-thousand-dollar first prize.

A strong field has entered the Southern 500 Stock Car Race, with qualifying to begin tomorrow ad the main event to start on Labor Day. Among the field are Richard Petty, David Pearson, Cale Yarborough and 1975 winner Bobby Allison.

Team Canada jammed with bevy of NHL stars

OTTAWA [UPI] – Head coach Scotty Bowman brought the star-studded team Canada down to the 25-man limit Wednesday night with the cut of six players, including Atlanta Flames goalie Dan Bouchard and Rene Robert of the Buffalo Sabres "French Connection" line.

Other players cut for the final roster were 50-goal scorer Jean Pronovost of the Pittsburgh Penguins and teammate Dave Burrows, Dan Maloney of the Detroit Red Wings and Paul Shmyr of the WHA Crusaders.

The only surprise among those dropped from the team was Robert. Bowman had said earlier this week that he would have liked to keep his regular lines intact.

Team Canada features a high-scoring Philadelphia Flyers' line of Bobby Clarke-Reggie Leach – Bill Barber and the Montreal Canadiens' Peter Mahovlich-Guy LaFleur-Steve Shutt line. A make-up line for pre-tournament exhibition games had Marcel Dionne alongside Phil Esposito and Bobby Hull.

The Robert-Rick Martin-Gil Perreault line had been unimpressive during training camp and three exhibition games. The Sabres' Danny Gare probably will take over Robert's spot on the line for the six-nation hockey tournament beginning Thursday in Ottawa.

The goaltenders retained by Bowman for the tournament are Rogie Vachon of the Los Angeles Kings, the Boston Bruins' Gerry Cheevers and Glenn Resch of the New York Islanders.

On defense he has the Chicago Black Hawks' Bobby Orr, Montreal's Serge Savard, Guy LaPointe and Larry Robinson, Jimmy Watson of the Flyers, Carol Vadnais of the New York Rangers and Denis Potvin of the Islanders.

Up front are Clarke-Barber-Leach, Mahovlich-LaFleur-Shutt, Hull-Esposito-Dionne, Perreault-Martin-Gare, Montreal's Bob Gainey and Darryl Sittler and Lanny MacDonald of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Where are they now?

Richard Nixon. The man long ago resigned under the cloud of infamous scandal, yet he was recently the subject of a TIME magazine article. He is still in the public eye.

Darrell Johnson. The man was recently fired from the position of manager of the Boston Red Sox, yet he has been totally forgotten; an enigma. Johnson's plight, however, has not escaped the keen journalistic intuition of this humble reporter. He was discovered in a greasy bar in Tacoma performing a stand-up comedy routine.

"Great crowd, great crowd! My name is Darrell Johnson, and last year at this time I was about to be named the American League Manager of the Year." (Ed. note – after this line, the audience laughed uncontrollably for a minute and a half.)

"Y'know, I used to manage the Boston Red Sox until things started getting rough this season. As a matter of fact, things got so rough that Dick O'Connell tried to give Charlie Finley a million dollars and me. But Bowie Kuhn nullified the deal for the good of baseball. He said Finley was getting cheated.

"It's the little things; the small hints, that lead you to believe you're not wanted anymore. For example, during our ten-game losing streak at the beginning of the year there was a sign in the centerfield bleachers that read, 'It takes two Johnson's just to make baby powder'. And during that losing streak after the All-Star break, someone in the clubhouse kept stealing my chewing tobacco and leaving plastic explosives in its place.

"My players were all having terrible years, too. Take my second baseman... please. Really, though. My second baseman was a guy named of Doyle. Denny Doyle. Never in the history of baseball has there been a man that can be so good, yet so bad in the same game. I remember one play in the bottom of the ninth inning with two out, a man on first, and the score tied, 3-3.

Doyle gets up and smashes the ball off the leftfield scoreboard. Just as the runner on first rounds third and heads for the plate with the winning run, the baseball bounces wildly off the 'board and comes all the way back to hit Doyle's foot as he tries for second. Immediately afterwards the runner rounding third crosses the plate. The umpire rules that Doyle was hit by a batted ball and the run doesn't count. In the top of the tenth with a runner on first Doyle makes a great stop of a sure single, throws the ball into centerfield, the man on first scores, and we lose the game, 4-3. I guess Denny was born ignorant, and he's been losing ground ever since.

"Let me tell you, if I wasn't fired, I think I woulda quit. I wasn't getting no respect. I mean, one night in bed my wife told me not to hit-and-run. Whenever I asked for Caesar's salad at a restaurant, the waiter would bring me a plate of rusty switchblades. My starting pitchers signalled relief from the bullpen before I even came out to the mound."

Johnson then turned to the bar, took a violin off it and proceeded to play four stanzas of 'Love in Bloom'.

Then he continued, "I will admit, though, that being fired from the Red Sox has thrust me upon hard times. I've had to sell my house because I couldn't afford the mortgage payments. My wife and I are living in a small shack now. In fact, it's so small that the mice are hunchback. I dropped Howard Cosell's toupee on the floor and we had wall-to-wall carpeting. Put the key in the front door and broke the back window. You even have to go outside to change your mind...."

N.J. 'game' successful

DOVER, Del. [UPI] – Delaware has kicked off its football wagering game, and lottery director Peter M. Simmons is predicting gross sales receipts may reach $500,000 during the lottery's first week.

"Everything seems to be going exceptionally well," said Simmons Wednesday, the first day of ticket sales. "We expect $200,000 in gross receipt sales – maybe even $500,000.

"Our agents have been giving out tickets and validating some," he said. Under the rules of the game, tickets are distributed free and do not become valid unless a bet is made.

Tickets for the opening day of the National Football League's regular season, Sept. 12, must be validated by Sept. 11.

"I expect that most people will watch the pre-season games this weekend to give them a better idea of the teams," Simmons said.

Bettors have two options. In the "touchdown" game, selections are made on up to five games, with the better choosing teams and approximately how many points they will win by. Playoffs are on a pari-mutuel basis.

"Football Bonus" runs on a straight won-loss basis with bettors choosing the winners of seven games. Bets between $1 and $10 can be waged on each game.

Norman Green, co-manager of the Smoke Shop, a Wilmington news store, said the response to the games was "enthusiastic." He said he distributed about 800 tickets to both men and women.

"Oh, yeah, they's all football fans now," Green said. He expected most of those who picked up tickets would be returning them toward the end of the week for validation.

Simmons said two million tickets were distributed for the first lottery would do "irreparable harm" to professional football by associating it with gambling interests.

A federal court hearing on the league's objections has been scheduled in November.

It's that time again!

As summer draws nigh

Yes, my friend, the summer is over. Gone are the catching of rays, the sweating in a factory, the shouting of kids, and the celebrating at dusk; whatever your lot may be.

But for the UMass athlete, the catching, sweating, shouting, and celebrating have just begun. With the coming of the fall semester begins the catching of footballs, the sweating amidst cross-country run, the shouting of excitedness, and the hopeful celebration of victory or a well-played game.

For the fan, a delightful sports variety exists. Whether one wishes to spend a Saturday at a football game, an afternoon at a field hockey contest, or a week night at a volleyball match, UMass can fill the desire. September captures the agony of cross-country, the perfection of tennis, the concentration of golf, and the steadiness of soccer. It's a renewal of crew and rugby, the club sports at UMass.

And with any semester, when the spectator grows weary of spectating, or the viewer tired of viewing, or whatever be the case, (of casing) a UMie can become an instant athlete a la intramurals.

Anyway, it promises to be an interesting and exciting season. Let's get to it!

'New spirit'

'Cooperation high,' say co-presidents

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Although the problems facing students this semester are familiary, Student Government Association (SGA) co-Presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus said yesterday that there now appears to be a new spirit of cooperation on the part of the University administration.

"Since the beginning of summer there seems to be a more cooperative atmosphere," according to Martus. Both he and Cronin spent the summer on campus during which they met four times with University administrators including Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Budget Director Warren Gulko.

Martus described the meetings as informative and marked by "a really good exchange of information". He said the meetings will continue during the fall on a regular basis.

Chancellor Bromery said last night that he too felt there was "a real feeling of cooperation" initiated over the summer, and that there now seems to be "a much more cooperative relationship" than in the past.

"It doesn't mean we're not going to differ," Bromery said, "but now we'll be able to talk rationally."

He said he would "be happy" to attend meetings planned for this fall between the SGA co-presidents and Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

In addition to their meetings with the administration Martus said one of the first things that need to be done this semester by the presidents' office is the appointment of over 165 people to positions on a variety of campus committees over the next three weeks. He said they would be "running sort of a publicity campaign" through the campus media as well as soliciting participation from the area governments.

A series of luncheons at the New Africa House and meetings with the Everywomans Center are also planned.

Also underway is the search for a permanent vice-chancellor for Student Affairs. A search committee composed primarily of students, as well as University faculty and staff, will make recommendations for a new vice-chancellor to the Chancellor, who will then make the final decision early next year, Martus said.

The former vice-chancellor for student affairs Robert W. Gage resigned over the summer.

Martus said that his primary concern for this semester is the University budget. A big problem in the past has been the lack of budgetary information made available to the student body, he said.

In an effort to not only keep on top of the budget throughout the year, but also to initiate reforms in the rent and fees area, the Student Senate will this year be paying for copy costs to receive the budget reports published monthly by the University Accounting Office, the co-presidents said.

Martus said he will be working with the Rents and Fees Committee on the Student Senate in an effort to decipher the monthly reports.

By studying the budget, Martus and Cronin said that "fiscal surprises" at future trustee meetings could be avoided.

Concerning financial aid, the co-presidents said there is more money available this year than last year, with about $1.2 million in state funds and $6.8 million available from the federal government for the Amherst campus.

About 8,000 students have some sort of financial aid here, they said.

However, they said in order for there to be an adequate financial aid package in accordance with the tuition increase approved by the University trustees last spring, a "refined, seviceable" survey must be taken of financial aid applicants to determine what the needs for financial aid on this campus are.

Although a survey was conducted last fall semester, the co-presidents said they felt it was not impressed on the people how important the forms were. They said they would be cooperating with UMass President Robert C. Woods office and financial aid to deliver a survey that would provide meaningful data.

By utilizing the area governments, and canvassing themselves door-to-door, the co-presidents hope to get an adequate response

AAUP requests plan to up staff pay

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The UMass-Amherst Chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) has called upon Acting Vice-Chancellor Robert L. Woodbury and Provost Dean Alfange to establish a panel composed of representatives from AAUP, the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the faculty senate, and the Professional Association of UMass-Amherst (PAUMA), to work with him and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery on a plan to immediately improve faculty and staff compensation.

AAUP President Joseph S. Larson, in a letter sent to Alfange this week, suggested the panel in order to establish faculty and staff input in the formulation of a new salary policy. AAUP has asked the other groups to agree to the proposal and to participate in the process. None of the groups involved have yet reached a final decision on Larson's proposal.

According to Joseph Beatty, associate director of the Office on Budgeting and Institutional Studies, faculty and staff members have not received any salary increase in three years and no one knows about fiscal 1977.

Beatty said a freeze on faculty and staff cost of living salary increases were made in fiscal 1975 and 1976, making the last round of raises effective fiscal 1974. Legislation prohibiting merit salary increases for faculty and staff were instituted fiscal '75 and '76, Beatty said, making the last round for merit raises effective Feb. 1974.

In July, the AAUP sent a letter to Alfange requesting that he, Bromery, UMass President Robert C. Wood, and members of the Board of Trustees review the University budget and financial resources to find the money necessary to increase salaries.

Alfange said he agreed that there is a need for "some relief from the intolerably long freeze on faculty and professional salaries" adding that he and Bromery are "working toward the development of a valid salary policy which we hope to formulate and announce in the near future."

According to Alfange, Bromery reserved $650,000 from the University budget for salary increases. Alfange said he and the Chancellor are running into two difficulties; first, they must establish policy to provide for salary increases without violating present legislative prohibition of merit and cost of living salary increases.

Secondly, they must avoid offending state Labor Relations laws which place certain restrictions on such salary increases because of the impending vote in October on a faculty collective bargaining unit.

Alfange said they will have to consult legal advice. He added that he and Bromery had already discussed the matter to some extent with the vice-chancellors of the UMass-Boston and Worcester campuses.

Alfange said he cannot correspond substantively with AAUP on the matter, since AAUP is one of the two agents seeking to represent the faculty in collective bargaining.

Concerning Larsen's recommendation for a panel consisting of representatives from AAUP, MSP,

Deadline extended

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The date by which students must hand in their request to either add or drop a course has been extended by one day, making the new deadline Thursday, Sept. 16, it was learned yesterday.

Student Government Association co-Presidents Jay A. Martus and Paul M. Cronin said yesterday that they had met earlier this week with Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury and Budget Director Warren Gulko at which time the extension was discussed and approved.

One reason for the extension is the long Labor Day weekend, during which no adds or drops may be submitted, but nevertheless are included in the 15 calendar days allotted for this year's add-drop period, said the co-presidents.

Further complicating the situation this semester is the trouble the financial aid office has had in processing financial aid awards to students.

Between 1500 and 3000 students have not been able to pay their bills and subsequently are losing not only their room assignments but their courses as well, according to the co-presidents.

They said although workers in the financial aid office work very hard, they are "grossly understaffed".

The financial aid office has lost its director and two assistants during the summer.

HEW wants funds returned

By KEVIN CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

UMass officials are attemtping to justify more than $360,000 in School of Education grants expenditures questioned by federal auditors earlier this year.

Auditors from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) have recommended that $364,872 be disallowed and that the money be returned to the federal government.

The challenges have been broken down into six categories and are being responded to individually by the UMass Office of Grants and Contract Administration, according to Pat W. Camerino, director.

Camerino said reports attempting to justify expenditures of $302,515 were submitted to the U.S. Office of Education on Aug. 15. The reports on the remaining $62,357 are scheduled to be submitted by Sept. 30.

"This is a system of challenge by the (HEW) auditors that demands us to justify and explain some of our previous expenditures," said Camerino.

"The period in question is from July 1, 1969 to Feb. 28, 1975, and the amount in question represents less than 6 per cent of the total budget for the five years," said Camerino.

If the expenditures are disallowed by the HEW, both parties will have to work out an equitable method of compensation. Among these are a reduction in federal monies allocated to UMass by the federal government.

The Amherst campus would be forced to re-allocate funds within some programs to the satisfaction of the HEW.

Camerino said he expects formal response from the HEW within 60 days of the final justification.

He added that this decision would not be final, and that there were "other avenues of appeal within HEW".

The categories in question are: General Consultants; $186,122, Personal Services; $94,691, Miscellaneous Charges; $21,702, Specific Consultants; $13,973, Telephone Expenditures; $39,357, and Travel Expenses; $9,027.

Reports on the first three categories have already been submitted, the Specific Consultants' report is due to be sent to the HEW on Uept. 15 and the telephone and travel expenses rationale will be submitted on Sept. 30.

Copies of these justifications can be obtained through the HEW in Washington under the terms of the Freedom of Information Act.

Grads to attend state schools

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

The number of high school graduates in Massachusetts choosing to attend state colleges, universities and state community colleges nearer their homes has surged in recent years, according to a recent story in The Boston Globe.

In past times, the typical high school student planning to continue studq considered a wide selection of public and private institutions.

However, that is no longer the case, largely because of the rising cost of higher education. The pursuit is narrower now; today less expensive institutions in the state educational system are being sought as alternatives to high-priced private institutions.

College administrators and suburban guidance counselors say the typical high school graduate today is "serious, practical, career-oriented, and above all, desperately concerned about the cost of a college education," the Globe reported.

The rate of full-time college-going has fallen dramatically in the last seven years — a time of inflation and increased student charges — among low and middle income families, statistics of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities indicate.

The "median" American family has only a few hundred dollars a year left over from the average annual income of $13,000 after living costs have been met, a Bureau of Labor Statistics study shows.

While a student at a residential state school such as UMass can get by on $3000 a year, the cost of an East Coast private residential college may top $7000. A student who commutes to a state institution can get a college education for less than $1000 annually.

There was about a 20 percent national drop in the number of 18 to 24 year old dependents from families with incomes of $15,000 or less going to college full-time between 1969 and 1973, according to the association.

The percentage of students from families earning more than $15,000 in the same period dropped 8 per cent.

Thousands of Massachusetts students have been prompted to pursue education in the state system as a result of badly deficient student-aid programs. Financial aid has fallen below the amounts needed to help poor students, much less the greater number of students from the middle class.

There has been a ballooning interest in the armed forces in spite of the Vietnam-era student protests against the military. While this surge is surprising to many, it is not historically unprecedented in times of inflation and economic depression; it can be explained by the free job training and financial security that is a benefit of military service, the Globe reported.

But the explosion of interest in military service has not contained itself to low or middle-income communities only, as witnessed by the trend in sucm college-oriented, wealthy communities as Needham, where three years ago only one student signed up after graduation while the class of 1976 saw 15 of its members join the military.

"There was a time back in the 1960's when we didn't dare invite a recruiter to school lest we have a riot. But there's been a tremendous burst of interest lately," Muriel Leach, head counselor at Braintree High, told the Globe.

"I really don't see it related to patriotism. I see it related to the economy and career interests."

Many students have found a way to save money by attending a nearby state community college for two years and then transferring to a larger state university in the junior year.

Wilbur Halliday, a guidance counselor for 20 years in the town of Wakefield, sums up the shift: "I can tmink of many kids whose older brothers or sisters have gone on to private institutions who are now heading to state schools. How many middle class families today can afford to slice $5000 for college off the top of earned takehome pay?"

In 1972, communities like Mansfield, Walpole, Lynn, Melrose, Ipswich, and Braintree were sending most of their college-bound graduates to private schools for four years of residential college life, but by 1974 the same communities were sending a majority to public institutions of higher education.

Four years ago, the number of students from Andover going into private colleges doubled those going to state schools, while an equal proportion of both was reported by Beverly. Today, the number of Andover students enrolling in private and public schools is nearly balanced, and Beverly is sending twice as many graduates to state colleges compared to the number heading toward colleges in the private sector.

Pedestrian mall, shrubbery proposed by SCER report

By ED LION
Special Correspondent

A pedestrian-like mall, complete with bicycle paths and landscaped shrubbery, should be constructed in the area adjoining the entrance to the Student Union, according to a report just released by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER).

The study, conducted by a team of five UMass graduate students commissioned by SCER, recommendds that the area be developed into a park-like mall with limited vehicular access because it is the "conceptual center of campus."

SCER is a student-financed agency which develops studies on how to improve life at UMass.

The study recommends that the 250 by 175 foot area, bounded by the Student Union, the library, the parking garage, and Machmer Hall be landscaped into a "unifying area" to accommodate the pedestrian and bicycle movement that flows through the area. Facilities should be provided to encourage people to spend time in the area and to "create an environment that the users will find enjoyable," the report says.

The entrance area is presently 60 per cent paved, has sidewalks "in serious disrepair", and makes for an "unorganized and uninviting" place, read the report.

The report does not give a specific design nor a cost estimate for the area's development.

According to Jessie Plager, one of the authors, the study was meant as a recommendation to the Campus Planning Office on how to develop the area.

The Campus Planning Office is helping to sponsor a Campus Landscape Development Project to beautify parts of the UMass campus. Project Director Edward Simpson said the Student Union entrance project is the number one priority on a long list of beautification plans to enhance the area.

Other areas scheduled to be developed include the land bounding North Pleasant Street, the pond area, and Alumni Hall.

Preliminary designs for the union project should be drawn up by the spring, Simpson said, but construction will not begin until enough state appropriations come in.

The study's recommendations were drawn from a survey and time-lapse photography taken to determine current usage of the area.

The Student Union area is the most heavily trafficked-spot on campus, but a large percentage of students surveyed felt the area was "uninviting, chaotic, and ugly," according to the study.

According to the report, the rapid growth experienced by the University has led to the unsightly nature of the Student Union entrance and has had a devastating effect on the "rare charm" of the campus.

Changes in parking regulations which one only allow seniors to park on campus has also contributed to the crowding problem, the report says.

Lawrence J. Magid, SCER director, said the report was commissioned to help improve the student union area into "what it should be."

The report will be distributed to the Board of Trustees, the Campus Planning Office, and the Campus Center Administration, he said.

The study was one of three graduate student reports commissioned last year by SCER with an $1800 grant from the Graduate Student Center. Studies on the UMass Hispanic Community and Collective Bargaining for UMass graduate students are expected to be released soon, Magid said.

Fisher to advise student business

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

Student-run businesses on campus now have an advisor, or if they need one, a manager, to help keep their businesses running smoothly and successfully.

H. John Fisher, 35, formerly the coordinator of the Student Organizing Project (SOP), (which hopes to create a student union on campus), has been appointed by the Undergraduate Student Senate to fill the position of Economic Development coordinator for six months.

At the end of that time, an evaluation will be conducted to determine whether the position is necessary.

Fisher will oversee 17 Recognized Student Organizations, groups that have been officially recognized by the senate. Some of them are funded from Student Activities Tax Fund monies.

Fisher, in an interview yesterday, said in some cases he will act only as an advisor to student businesses if they are operating successfully.

Groups such as the Credit Union need little in the way of advice, he said, while other groups may need help in recruiting students to work for them or help in learning better bookkeeping techniques.

In some cases, Fisher said, he will be the manager of the service. He said the student senate print shop, which prints lecture notes, is one such business.

The 17 businesses have a total income of $434,436.25.

As created by the student senate Coordinating Committee, the salary for the position is $10,000 for 11 months. Fisher will be working only six months, at which time the decision will be made to continue the position.

Fisher said the salary is in line with other salaried positions in student government.

For now, Fisher says his work will entail acting as a resource person for student run businesses, helping them with financial difficulties and coordinating their efforts.

He said reactions from those running the businesses have been mixed, largely because some people feel they will be subject to some type of central authority.

Fisher said he can only stop in if the senate asks him to do so. The senate's main concern is that the businesses do not run the senate into debt, they do not violate affirmative action policies and they do not violate the Student Government Association constitution.

His longer range plans include developing other student services on campus, and also trying to acquire grants and loans to improve and expand student services already established.

Fisher has worked for the SOP for over 2 years, last year serving as coordinator for the organization, and before that serving as its economic director.

Prior to working with the SOP, Fisher worked in the Division of Continuing Education devising a publishing program.

He has also worked in the publishing industry, as a journalist, editor, and also in a managerial position. He has attended both the University of Connecticut and Columbia, and holds a B.A. in Chemistry.

Collegian awarded top honor

A national press association has awarded The Massachusetts Daily Collegian top honors in a college press contest between hundreds of the nation's campus publications.

The Collegian was awarded 'Medalist' honors by the Columbia Scholastic Press Association. based in New York City. Out of a possible 1,000 points in the association's scoring system. The Collegian attained 934 points.

First place rankings are given to publications who score 850 or better and the 'Medalist' ranking is granted out of the top 10 per cent of these first place rankings.

According to the association, this "honor, the association's highest ranking, is based on those intangible qualities which become evident to the association's judges which could be characterized as the 'personality' of the entry."

In content-coverage, out of a maximum score of 250, the Collegian scored 245. In writing and editing, 384 points out of 400 were attained. In design-display, from 350 points, the Collegian scored 305.

The judges said they found "very little bad to say about your paper. It is obviously a high-level, professionally-edited publication that's as good or better than any other paper judged."

The Collegian scored perfectly for its in-depth articles, that is, investigative pieces. The sports section was also awarded a perfect score. Feature stores were termed "excellent."

The news pages received 38 out of 40 possible points. Editorial-opinion pages scored 44 out of 50 points.

Other awards offered by the association which follow 'Medalist,' include All-Columbian Honors and First through Fourth places.

The Collegian has received a gold-stamped certificate. Along with the certificate, judges' suggestions for improvement were forwarded.

Collegian Editor-in-Chief William A. Mills said last night that "the paper's success at Columbia is an indication of the dedication of its staff."

Global Survival: Fresh alternative

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

Dealing with problems as diverse as war, environmental deterioration and cross-cultural communication, the Global Survival Freshman Year Program (GSFYP) is offered at UMass as an alternative to large classes and teacher-student alienation.

The program was initiated four years ago after Dr. Stephen E. Guild, the director of GSFYP, met with faculty to discuss some of the same problems in a colloquium setting. Pleased with the results, Guild said he decided to include students.

SGFYP has grown since then to include six core faculty representing fields such as engineering, anthropology, botany, physics, communications and education.

In addition to the core faculty there are 12 adjunct faculty members and an average of 60 students per semester, Guild said.

Individual classes have 15 students and sometimes more than one instructor.

Students in the program are allowed to take two other courses of their choice along with the Survival program.

Donna Hotchkiss, a sophomore who was in the program last year, said, "It was the only place I got to know the teachers. In every other class I took, the teacher was just someone at the other end of the classroom — you needed binoculars to see him. Here, they were my friends."

The program has recently moved from the Central residence area to Cance house in Southwest. Susan Taylor, one of the six core faculty, said the move will enable them to reach a lot more students.

"We hope to become a part of the Southwest community," she said.

The learning experience is divided into six "modules" in which the various topics of Global Survival can be dealt with in an interdisciplinary manner.

Taylor hopes to teach a modula on the subject of urban growth and the quality of life.

"We will be able to set up a live-in lab in what is essentially an urban area," Taylor said. A pre-requisite for Taylor's class will be six weeks residence in Southwest.

"I like the things they're talking about," said Steve Hilyard, a freshman Plant and Soils Science major entering the program this semester.

"I don't think it will teach me to grow crops any better, but it will give me more purpose for why I'm doing it," he said.

The Global Sugvival program was one of the first of its kind offered at any university, although similar programs now exist at the College of the Atlantic, Evergreen State College, the University of Wisconsin at Green Bay and Colgate University.

Canoe duo battles elements but paddles on

[Editor's note] Duke Simoneau, 22, is a UMass junior [Journalism-Natural Resources major] on internship for a year. He and Stan Sroka, a 23-year-old Chicopee Falls man, are canoeing across the United States; Duke, for an internship, and stan, for the heck of it.

They left Springfield on May 26, and expect to reach Portland, Oregon in the summer of 1977. Old Town Canoe Company donated the use of a 17-foot ABS plastic canoe for the expedition.

Duke, a Collegian staff reporter, will be relating his adventures weekly in the Collegian as he canoes across the U.S.

The Ohio takes us as far south as our river traveling will go. Passing through West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, we saw a patchwork mix of cultures, attitudes and people.

The proverbial "southern hospitality" welcomed us all along the river. Tow boats, pushing many thousands of tons in barges up to 1200 feet in length, would slow their engines so as not to swamp "Joie" (our canoe). We got to recognize many vessels as they passed us up and down, so they became familiar "faces" as we waved back and forth.

Once you get below the oil and coal-stained upper section of the river, fishermen and pleasure boaters thrive on river life. We'd often stop and talk with river and shore people. Sundays became notorious as a "good off" day for several reasons. One — the wakes of waterskiers and unthinking houseboaters had to be taken at a 90-degree angle to avoid swamping. Also, the number of curious people asking if our "Mass. To Oregon" sign on the canoe was serious caused many conversations, much head-shaking and well-wishes.

The third reason is that the conversations often resulted in invitations — for a coke (we turned down beer in mid-day because in the summer heat, it destroyed all paddling efforts), or for part of a picnic. After weeks of eating out of cans, hot dogs and hamburgers are considered gourmet fare.

Many small town officials and city workers would bend rules, allowing us to camp in "No Camping" parks. This kep us in cleared areas and out of the poison ivy that infests the Ohio River banks. Stan is violently allergic to the weed, and can easily be hospitalized for exposure to it.

Many of these parks were old locks. The Ohio is undergoing a facelift to allow bigger barges to utilize it. New and bigger locks are replacing the system built in the steamboat days. Each new lock replaces three of the 46 old locks, saving locking time for the tows. If a town does the maintenance, the federal government always lets them use the lock space for recreation.

At one of these old locks we met another "angel". A retired executive in Proctorville, Ohio, out for his morning constitutional, stumbled into our camp and invited us to be his guests for the night. Since we weren't planning to go very far, we accepted. That day had been set aside already as making only eight miles to the city of Huntington, W. Virginia (down and across the river) and catching up on writing.

After a shower at the local YMCA (to wash the river out of us) and a newspaper interview (plus writing) we caught a ride with our host into his home for the night. All the food set before us was raised on his farm. The beef, vegetables, even the feed for the cattle, came from his 100-acre farm that he managed for years while working in the offices of a large corporation in Huntington.

After a good night in a soft bed, we pushed down river with another address in our growing list of new friends.

Kentucky opened its heart to us with classic "hill country" form. Ducking a rainstorm in Vanceburg, we ran into a church group from Pennsylvania who worked in the summer for the hill farmers in Vanceburg who need help and are too proud to accept state charity. "Young People Who Care" live in the same rough conditions and do the same dirty, grubby work as the backwoods tobacco farmers, trying only to help. This was the last night for this group of YPWC (they stay one, two or three weeks) and they invited us to go with them to the Fly Branch Jamboree.

Colonel Gorden (a real Kentucky Colonel), Windy, Snuffy Smith and the boys put out a night of down home, hill-country music. At intermission, they come into the audience to talk with people from all over. In their four years in the hills, YPWC and the Colonel have become good friends. The Pennsylvanians introduced Transcontinental Canoe Lines to the Colonel, and he turned around and introduced us to the audience. An onstage interview, followed by a night full of good company and good music, left us sleepless but happy at daybreak.

We dozed and paddled all next day to Maysville, Ky. At the boat ramp, a local man gave us a beer and talked with us about an hour. Then he said not to open a can for dinner, he was going to bring a steak down to the ramp for us! We were amazed. An hour later, he came over the bank, apologetic as the faculty senate, and PAUMA, Alfange said he thinks it unlikely he will be ppepared to formally discuss the matter with AAUP and MSP since they are vying to represent faculty in collective bargaining. Alfange added that he has not officially responded to either AAUP or MSP.

"We (he and Bromery) do plan however, to meet with PAUMA and the faculty senate to present our policy on valid salary increases for discussion and ratification since they are governance units representing the parties involved" said Alfange.

Evelyn Duston, administrative officer of PAUMA said she is not sure of the rational behind such a panel.

"It seems strange to mis two governance units and two bargaining agents in such a discussion," said Duston.

"I can see, however, a meeting with PAUMA and the faculty senate, since we are the governance units representing the faculty and staff," Duston continued.

"Moreover, members of AAUP and MSP are represented by the Faculty Senate," she added.

Alfange said it was obvious that AAUP's recommendation was part of strategy for faculty vote on collective bargaining.

"Exactly what end they wish to achieve, one cannot say," said Alfange.

Larry Roberts, president of MSP, the other group vying for representing faculty in collective bargaining, said he agreed that AAUP's recommendation was a campaign tactic. However, he said he felt they "certainly were running good to involve the two parties in such a discussion."

Four years ago, MSP and AAUP staged a joint campaign for forming a collective bargaining unit for faculty, losing by a short margin in campus elections. For the past two years, MSP and AAUP have continued their efforts, separately vying for the chance to represent the faculty.

MSP is under the affiliation of the National Education Association (NEA), the largest representive of educators in the country. According to reports, AAUP is quickly losing its membership throughout the country. However, earlier this year, AAUP gained a victory at the University of Connecticut at Storrs where its faculty elected AAUP to represent them in collective bargaining, while the City University of New York ousted the NEA as their representative in collective bargaining after this spring's turmoil over faculty salaries and tuition for students.

SCER looking to fill holes

By ED LION
Special Correspondent

Students interested in improving the curriculum and lifestyle at UMass are invited to join the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER), said Lawrence J. Magid, SCER director.

The agency still has openings for volunteers, work-study employes, and students interested in an SCER internship, Magid said.

The SCER is a student-financed research agency committed to the improvement of life at UMass. Its two professional staffers and about 20 student assistants compile studies and conduct investigations on ways and means to improve University life.

In addition, SCER has a resource library to aid students, offers consulting services to student groups, and runs a research seminar.

SCER was established in 1973 by the Student Board of Directors, and in its four years of operation it has won national acclaim, Magid said.

It has won the attention of consumer advocate Ralph Nader and received national publicity for a study released last spring on the most efficient method of restructuring of the Athletic Department. SCER led the way for rent control in Amherst.

This year Magid said SCER plans to analyze the cost-efficiency of the UMass budget breakdown, review the University's faithfulness to the land-grand philosophy, and conduct studies into food co-ops and the academic governance set-up.

"We invite students interested in all areas of University life to join the staff," said Magid.

SCER operates on an appropriation dispersed by the Student Board of Directors from the student activities tax. Its offices are located in 406 Student Union Building.

from the students in time for the next evaluation of the incremental tuition increase which will take place in January, they said.

Academically, Cronin said that he would like to see a reorganization of the rhetoric program.

"More than any oteer core requirement, rhetoric bothers people," Cronin said. He suggested developing something for the first or second semester of freshman year that "teaches people how to read and write."

Calling the present program "a farce", Cronin also said that it is up to students to do something to change the program, and that The Faculty Senate has been unwilling to deal with the "rhetoric problem."

Concerning the drive for student unionization on campus, Cronin said there has been a "continuity" problem. He said he wants to see a system developed where "we don't end up at ground zero every semester."

Martus said the structure for unionization is there, and that it is time to get the students "plugged into it." He said it is time to "teach people organizing skills and to then let them generate on their own."

Scranton sees rosier U.S.—U.N. relations

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. [AP] — William W. Seranton, chief U.S. delegate to the United Nationa, foresees an easier time for the United States in the U.N. General assembly after several years of tough confrontation.

Scranton declines to confirm a predecessor's judgment that there is a Third World "tyranny of the majority" in the world organization.

"No," he said in an interview. "I think that if that was true, it is at last changing for the better and that there is the beginning of a realization that to be effective on these major world problems, we have to have consensus."

The 59-year-old ex-governor of Pennsylvania stared out the window of the 11th-floor office he has occupied for nearly six months.

"My best guess is...that the coming General assembly starting Sept. 21 will have some strong confrontations, but perhaps not so much as we could usually expect in the immediate past," he said.

"I think the place to watch and see what happens is in the economic field, because in some instances at least our political confrontations result from economic frustration."

In 1974, when the General assembly under Third World control suspended South Africa and limited Israel's chances to answer critics, John A. Scalia complained of a tyranny of the majority.

In 1976, the assembly equated Zionism with racism and described a U.S. Coast Guard cutter as a U.S. military presence in the Caribbean. Daniel Patrick Moynihan called the resolution on Zionism "obscene" and said the U.N. had become "the theater of the absurd."

More relaxed than either predecessor, Scranton commented:

"It doesn't surprise me that this is a confrontational period that has been going on the last few years and at least to some degree I would expect it to continue for some time. After all, there have been tremendous changes, political and otherwise, in the world with the establishment of so many new nations.

Cincinnati gave us TV and newspaper coverage and something we didn't need — poison ivy. We had spent the day doing interviews and poking through the town, writing and restoking supplies, but camped the night on the river bank. We avoided the cleared park area because of trouble with local youths. Two days later, Stan woke up looking like he'd been the loser in a prize fight. His left eye was swollen shut, his arm and head all blistered. I got scared he may have a case bad enough to wash him out for weeks, he said it was only a mild case.

The lockworkers from Markland Lock (where we had camped) gave us a lift to the Carrol County Hospital. Stand got a shot and some oral medication that sent his mind into another world for about 36 hours. We thumbed to Madison, Indiana (12 miles down and across the river) where the Salvation Army put us up for the night. In the morning, we thumbed back to the lock, where Stan slept out the day in the shade.

The heat and humidity in this region were getting to us. Temperatures of 103 with a 90 per cent humidity aren't conducive to hard work. We paddled at night to Madison (30 miles by river) where we took time to tour.

Rhode Island governor urges investigation

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Gov. Philip W. Noel yesterday urged the Commission on Judicial Fitness and Tenure to investigate and publish a report on alleged improprieties by Supreme Court Chief Justice Joseph A. Bevilacqua.

"I think the allegations that involve the chief justice are matters that should be properly before the Commission on Judicial Fitness and Tenure," Noel told a news conference.

"If they recommend action I would assume that at that point it would be public," he said. "And since it involves the chief justice, even if they felt that there were no impropriety, I would assume that they would say so that the people of the state would know that they have discharged their responsibility."

Noel referred to a laudatory Nov. 28, 1973, letter written by Bevilacqua, then speaker of the House, to the state Parole Board concerning reputed New England organized crime boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca. The governor also mentioned Bevilacqua's officiating July 3 at a wedding of Joseph A. Badway reportedly a Patriarca associate.

Superior Court Judge Anthony A. Giannini, commission chairman, pointed out Monday the law required all commission proceedings to be confidential "except at the request of the judge involved."

"Should the Commission decide that the questions or issues which you submit require its action, all of its proceedings will be in obedience to the law," Giannini said in a letter to Cranston Mayor James L. Taft, the Republican candidate for governor.

Framingham gets aid

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Board of Education yesterday "reluctantly approved a $246,000 contract for the voluntary METCO school desegregation program in Framingham.

The program was approved despite the refusal of the Framingham School Committee to use an additional $8,272 in state aid released this week to compensate for a 40 per cent cut in METCO staffing.

The Framingham School Committee Wednesday voted to use the extra state aid as a tuition receipt, in effect placing it in a general fund, rather than using the money to improve educational services.

The additional funding was part of $150,000 released by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis through a transfer from an emergency account for all 43 communities in the METCO program in which black students from Boston are bused to suburban schools.

Education Commissioner Gregory Anrig said "the board reluctantly approved the 1976-1977 METCO contract for Framingham because the opening of school is next week and Framingham's 144 METCO students need to know they can attend school there as they had been planning."

At the same time, Anrig said the board voted to notify Framingham officials the board intends to terminate the METCO program there next year "unless adequate educational services are assured by June 30, 1977."

Racial chaos hits Cape Town

[Compiled from wires] — Residents of segregated mixed-race suburb near Cape Town demonstrated yesterday against racial segregation and more disturbances broke out in the black township of Soweto, near Johannesburg. One person was killed in Cape Town and another in Soweto, police said.

In Cape Town bystanders ran screaming and choking from tear gas in the first major racial violence in a white area of the city.

Shops closed down and traffic in the area came to a halt. The violence, involving some 3,000 demonstrators, grew out of a protest march against South Africa's policy of strict racial segregation.

In Hanover, the mixed-race suburb near Cape Town, police opened fire with shotguns after mobs stoned cars, set municipal rent offices on fire and shattered windows. In addition to the man killed, another was injured, police said.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa: Thousands of demonstrating Blacks march through downtown Cape Town yesterday. Police fired tear gas into the crowds of demonstrators as rioting spread to the exclusively white downtown area for the first time. (UPI)

Police also fired tear gas to disperse a crowd of black students at the railway station in the black township of Lang.

Johannesburg police reported a black man was killed near the township of Soweto when his car was stoned. The death brought to 294 the number of persons killed since racial rioting first erupted June 16 in Soweto, home to more than a million blacks outside Johannesburg.

In the eastern coastal city of Durban, 500 black bus drivers returned to work after being told their strike, which had crippled the city, was illegal. The 500 drivers were demanding higher pay.

By late afternoon quiet was restored, but some homebound workers held handkerchiefs to their eyes to counteract lingering traces of gas. Police stood guard at road junctions in the city center, and asked people not to linger in the central area after leaving work.

In a rapid reaction, Police and Justice Minister James Kruger reintroduced a ban on outdoor gatherings until Oc. 31. Previous restrictions expired Tuesday.

The violence came on the eve of Prime Minister John Vorster's departure for Zurich, Switzerland, for meeting on the mounting racial crisis in southern Africa with U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Kissinger has promised to press Vorster to introduce "equality of opportunity and basic human rights" in South Africa. But the South African leader had made it clear external pressure will not alter South Africa's policies.

Kissinger's efforts were welcomed by the press in Zaire and Kenya. The official Zaire news agency said the United States was the power with sufficient political, economic, and military weight to convince South Africa to end apartheid.

In Nairobi the Nation newspaper called the U.S. initiative "an attempt to save the whites in southern Africa from themselves."

Meanwhile, in London, Black South African student leader Tsietse Mashinini said in an interview broadcast Thursday that blacks in his country will no longer be satisfied with equal rights — they want to dominate the whites.

"The black people are no longer interested in having equal rights with the white people in South Africa," Mashinini said. "They want the tables to be turned so that the white man can get a taste of his own medicine, and feel what it is like to be oppressed."

The 19-year-old Mashinini, president of the Student Representative Council in the segregated township of Soweto outside Johannesburg, led a June 16 demonstration in Soweto against the use of Afrikaans as a teaching language in black schools. Police fired on the protesters and the ensuring riot market the start of the worst racial violence in South African history.

Mashinini said he knew "for a fact" that more than 300 persons died in the June riots, as against official figures of 176.

He said he had seen bodies at the government mortuary "packed like potato sacks."

The student leader, appearing on the Thames Television program "This Week," was interviewed at a "secret location" in South Africa and the film was smuggled out of South Africa, Thames-TV said.

Mashinini, who said police had offered $435 for his capture, has since left South Africa, the company said.

The student said in the interview that he was aware that blacks' demands could result in a "lot of people being killed."

Panel charges British torture

LONDON [AP] — British troops and police tortured and mistreated suspected Irish Republican Army members in Northern Ireland during the last five months of 1971, the European Commission of Human Rights said Thursday. The British government did not deny the charges, but said its forces no longer uses such tactics.

The commission's report cleared Britain of charges of otherwise violating human rights with tough antiterrorist legislation and noted that those who had been mistreated were paid substantial compensation.

The mission, based in Strasbourg, France, also ruled that British forces did not discriminate between feuding Protestants and Roman Catholics in its policy of holding suspects without trial.

The report is the result of a five-year investigation launched after the Irish government charged in December 1971 that Britain had tortured prisoners and violated human rights in Northern Ireland. It was released simultaneously in London, Dublin and Strasbourg.

"We do not challenge the report," a British government official said. "We do not deny that unpleasant things happened. But it's a thing of the past. We no longer use the interrogation techniques described in the report."

The commission's findings and the Irish government's determination to press its charges have strained relations between Dublin and London at a time both are fighting terrorism.

Black judge

BOSTON [AP] — Frederick L. Brown became the highest ranking black judge in the state Thursday when he was sworn in as an associate justice of the Massachusetts Court of Appeals.

The ceremony took place at Northeastern University, where Brown had been a law professor.

Gov. Michael Dukakis said Brown "is strongly committed to judicialnfairness and effective law enforcement.

"Fred Brown's devotion to the law and his 'roll up his shirt sleeves' approach to the job will be a great help in relieving the case backlog in our state appeals court."

Brown succeeds Judge David A. Rose, who retired in March.

Bar membership

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Bar Association has adopted an open enrollment policy — anyone can now join the presitgious organization, lawyer or not, and the top fee is $20.

The MB's non-lawyers would be associate members without voting privileges but with all other benefits, it was announced Thursday. Fringes include group insurance and charter travel advantages, the organization reported.

The associates would also get monthly newsletters and quarterly legal publications and would have access to the MB library and offices at One Center Plaza, at Boston's government center.

Cynthia Strousse, MB spokesman, said many secretaries who work for lawyers have been anxious to join the MB. She said some are particularly interested in travel tour rates.

Miss Strousse said no screening criteria has yet been established. The MB membership includes about 10,000 of the state's 17,500 attorneys, she said.

Miss Strousse emphasized the new policy is aimed particularly at attracting law school students to the MB. Their dues would be $10, half the rate of other associate members.

She said other state bar associations have recently broadened enrollment, but she said she does not know which ones.

Miss Strousse said so far as she knows anyone who wants to join the MB as an associate member and is willing to pay $20 is eligible.

Job lottery

BOSTON [UPI] — A proposal to distribute state summer jobs by a lottery system will not necessarily eliminate patronage, the head of a community action agency said yesterday.

Robert Coard of Action for Boston Community Development said the lottery plan forwarded by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is "simplistic" and will not assure patronage is ended.

"A lottery is no substitute for proper planning and good management," Coard said.

The ABCC director said the jobs should be distributed on the basis of need. "Young people in the greatest need of summer jobs should not have to depend on the simplistic remedy of the luck of a numbers game," he said.

Dukakis proposed the lottery system Tuesday following revelations friends and relatives of legislators got many of the 2,000 jobs given out by the state Department of Public Works and the Metropolitan District Commission.

The governor instructed members of his cabinet to begin work on the lottery system so it could be used next year.

"The use of a lottery will not assure that patronage will not control the names that go into the barrel and, therefore, those which will come out," said Coard.

Medical fraud

BOSTON [AP] — The administrative director of a clinic in Cambridge has been indicted by a federal grand jury on 12 counts of mail fraud.

U.S. Atty. James N. Gabriel said Richard E. Melson, 30, was indicted Wednesday on charges of mailing 18 false claims totaling $14,850 to Massachusetts Blue Cross-Blue Shield for medical services that were never performed.

The indictment contended Melson advertised in newspapers offering free acupuncture therapy to people suffering various ailments. He allegedly told patients the International Institute of Health Foundations was non-profit and they could pay what they could afford, but each was asked to sign Blue Cross-Blue Shield extended benefits form so the institute could be reimbursed for the amount the patient could not pay.

Gabriel said Melson moved to a new location last March, changed the name to Cambridge Medical Services and hired Dr. Irving L. Kushner to work as a physician on a part-time basis. The U.S. attorney contended Melson put Kushner's name on claims as the doctor who had performed services indicated on the 18 forms although Kushner had not provided the services which had never been performed.

Kennedy hit

BOSTON [AP] — A small group of abortion opponents Thursday confronted U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, accusing him of backing "abortion on demand."

Kennedy defended his vote for measure to permit the use of government money for abortions, although he said he personally opposed abortions.

"Are you going to say that if a poor person gets raped we can't have that an abortion?" Kennedy asked the crowd. "I would have extreme difficulty as a representative of all the people to vote to deny that."

The incident occurred at coffee hour in an Arlington church hall, the second campaign stop of the day for the senator.

"You are trying to please the women libbers," one woman yelled. "It's not for rape, it's not for incest, it's for abortion on demand."

Kennedy countered that votes against abortion would not get rid of the issue. "You would move it from the clinics to the back alleys, he said.

Kennedy said he respected their opinions, but it was a complex issue.

"I am morally opposed," he said. "But there are factors which are troublesome. But I wish I saw with the degree of clarity that some people see these issues."

Computer lost

BOSTON [AP] — The possibility of losing $10 million in annual tax revenue forced the Dukakis administration Thursday to dismantle a new computec and return it to the Tax Department.

The aborted decision which required switching the Univac 1100-10 computer from the McCormack Office Building to the nearby Saltonstall Office Building cost taxpayers an estimated $20,500. However, some of this expense could be recovered in later developments, officials reported.

An attempt to use the computer as a multi-agency facility was thwarted by a warning from the Federal Internal Revenue Service that IRS tapes would no longer be available for comparison purposes.

Legislation pending in Congress and IRS policy information to computers and personnel controlled exclusively by tax departments, it was explained.

Adminiistration Secretary John R. Buckley had the unit, ordered by the Tax Department, diverted to his secretariat's computer center.

John Banville, director of the central facility, acknowledged the decision was reversed because of the IRS attitude.

Lee Vachon
Group

The Lee Vachon Group is breaking very big out of New England. As did their predecessors, The J. Geils Band and Aerosmith, The Lee Vachon Group generates the same type of excitement wherever they play.

Over the past ten years, Lee Vachon has emerged as one of the top rock guitarists on the East Coast. He received great reviews in VARIETY for a recent jam session with Jeff Beck. He has been searching for the "perfect band" for the past few years. Now he's found it.

Lee's group features Donnie Hillier, whose lead vocals and showmanship can only be described as devastating. Moreover, Bob Young on bass and drummer Ernie Abdelnour form a rhythm section that has to be heard to be believed. Together, The Lee Vachon Group is not just another band...they're a "classic rock attraction!"

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

NEW YORK: Whitey, the three-year-old pony, is brought before the desk sergeant after he was found trotting alone through an intersection in Brooklyn yesterday. Two patrolmen made like cowboys as they lassoed the steed and brought her to their stationhouse. After calling the ASPCA, the cops tied Whitey to the rail at the front desk in the station and then gave her some water and prayed that the owner would call before nature did. Finally the owner, Frank Mardi, appeared and claimed the wandering nag. UPI

Oilers 'ready' to face questions

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — An oil industry spokesman said Thursday the industry is ready and willing to cooperate with New Hampshire legislators in their investigation of alleged surplus gasoline in the state.

Stacey Cole, executive director of the New Hampshire Petroleum Council, testified before a legislative subcommittee which is looking into a bill which would require distributors to make surplus gasoline available to franchise as well as independent retailers.

Cole said the industry generally opposes the bill on two points. He claimed the thrust of the legislation is already covered by federal regulation and the bill may be unconstitutional because it attempts to regulate interstate commerce.

Rep. Paul Ryan, R-Danbury and other subcommittee members have been critical of the oil industry, claiming it is failing to answer questions posed to them.

Cole said he was ready to answer any questions in behalf of the industry and pledged to help Ryan send written questions to individual oil companies and arrange for appearances by oil company representatives.

The subcommittee also heard from Michael Souz, a representative of Shell Oil Co., who said Shell is "eager to comply" with any requests for information by the legislators.

Souza, who handles gasoline distribution through various middlemen in parts of New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine, also attempted to clarify earlier misunderstandings by committee members as to the source of gasoline to a Claremont retailer.

Ryan and other committee members had said that Shell appeared in past testimony to have misled the subcommittee. But Souza and Ryan agreed Thursday the matter had been misunderstood.

Souza said Shell has no surplus gasoline in Northern New England, but he testified that a pool of gasoline does exist from which franchise dealers may get a limited amount if they run out of their original supply. Souza said some of that gas eventually could end up with independent dealers, but that he was not aware of specific instances in which it does.

Ryan repeated his claim that he has been frustrated for more than 10 months in efforts to get adequate information from the oil companies such as Exxon, Texaco, Gulf, Shell and Mobile. Ryan's committee last fall held a series of hearings on the surplus gas legislation, but he claims much of the testimony was contradictory and some of it later proved to be false.

Duke may reject offer for cabinet

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said it would take "an unusually compelling reason" for him to leave the state to take a job with a possible Carter administration.

The governor has been rumored as a possibility for one of three cabinet posts should Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter win the November election.

"My primary interest is in the governorship of Massachusetts," he said Thursday. "I've been through too many tough times in the past. It would have to be an awfully compelling reason for me to leave now."

The governor discussed his political future at a State House news conference and earlier in the day at a meeting of the Massachusetts Newspaper Publishers Association.

As to reports he would take a cabinet job, if polls showed his popularity at low ebb, Dukakis said, "There are polls being taken almost every day by someone. We are privy to them. I've been up in polls and down in polls and right now I'm up."

He added he would be campaigning for Carter in Massachusetts and would go outside the state to campaign "only on limited occasions."

In a wide ranging question and answer session with the publishers the governor predicted more "peaceful, safer, more successful" school opening in Boston this year, under the third year of a federal court ordered desegregation plan.

He said state law enforcement officials would continue to work closely with city officials to insure the smooth opening of schools Wednesday.

Irish Parliament creates new terrorist legislation

DUBLIN, Ireland, [UPI] — The Irish Government today won the first major parliamentary test of its new antiterrorists legislative package by a comfortable majority.

Parliament passed by 71 votes to 64 the second reading of the Emergency Powers Bill which would enable police to hold suspects without charge for seven days instead of 48 hours.

Parliament then adjourned until Wednesday when it will debate the next stage of the Bill which Premier Liam Cosgrave described as "essential" in the fight against subversion.

The vote meant that Parliament accepted the "principle" of the bill. Further stages will deal with various amendments to its provisions introduced the Fianna Fail opposition party.

The new powers were part of the antiterrorist package demanded by Prime Minister Liam Cosgrave to crush the "armed conspiracy" the government said was posed by the IRA.

New laws were passed to "crush armed conspiracy."

Another bill will increase the penalty for belonging to the IRA from two to seven years and provide a maximum of 10 years imprisonment for anyone inciting others to join the IRA.

"The crimes of these people include murder, attempted murder, bombings, shootings and armed robberies," Cooney said. "They are member of secret, ruthless, unlawful groups prepared by intimidation of witnesses and by collusion to obstruct and hamper police investigation.

"The ordinary legal process is inadequate and the police need to carry out their investigation free from such obstruction," Cooney said.

The Fianna Fail opposition party, while supporting much of the antisubversive measures, rejected Cooney's plea for longer detention of suspects.

Fianna Fail spokesman Gerald Collins said there was a "grave fear in the country" that the powers sought were too far-reaching.

"This bill is an over-reaction by the government," Collins said. "I am not convinced the powers sought are necessary and I feel the government's motives are unworthy ones."

In a surprisingly mild reaction statement, the IRA's political wing, the Sinn Fein party, said the legislation confused the symptoms of the Northern Ireland conflict with the root cause.

"British interference created our political problems and Cosgrave need only examine the total amount of the staggering national debt to see that the British cancerous presence is malignant," Sinn Fein said.

Kosygin stroke possible

MOSCOW [UPI] — Premier Alexei N. Kosygin failed to appear at a Politburo meeting Thursday and a new first deputy was appointed to assist him, lending credence to reports that the Soviet official has suffered a stroke.

Western diplomats said both developments reinforced a report published in the West Monday that the 72-year-old Kosygin suffered a stroke last month while swimming in the Moscow River. Soviet officials, who never talk about the private lives of their leaders, refused comment.

The new first deputy is Nikolai A. Tikhonov, 70, a metallurgist who was a boyhood friend of Communist party General Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev. He has served since 1965 as a deputy, one of 11 men currently holding the title.

A two-paragraph announcement by the official Tass news agency made no mention of the current first deputy, Kirill T. Mazurov, 62, a Politburo member considered among Kosygin's possible successors.

Western diplomats said Tikhonov may have been appointed to serve alongside — rather than replace Mazurov — to handle industrial matters and relieve Kosygin of still more duties.

They suggested that Mazurov might sooner or later succeed Kosygin with Tikhinov continuing as first deputy. Tikhonovs age — he is two years younger than Kosygin and a year older than Brezhnev — tended to preclude his elevation to premier.

British workers face unemployment horrors

LONDON [UPI] — The grim specter of mass unemployment has returned to haunt Britain as it has not done for more than three-and-a-half decades. For the first time since the dark days of the "hungry thirties," unemployment has topped the 1.5 million mark. That represents 6.4 per cent of the nation's work force and has pushed Britain into the unenviable league of high unemployment nations.

British officials say the peak may have been reached or, at least, be in sight and that the jobless total then may level off. But, even so, 1.5 million jobless are bad news for Britian and, in particular, for a Labor party government pledged to a full employment policy and to wipe out inflation.

It is likely to lead to a revolt by some of Britain's biggest labor unions at the annual convention of the 10 million member Trades Union Congress at Brighton later this month.

"These figures are grim indeed," said Len Murray, TUC general secretary. "Unless there is a very early change from this trend, there will be a rapid growth in support for a radical change in government economic policies."

David Basnett, general secretary of the General and Municipal Workers' Union, one of Britain's more moderate trade unions, said "the remorseless rise in unemployment make social and economic nonsense."

He, too, predicted trouble for the government at the TUC conference.

The threat to Prime Minister James Callaghan's Labor government is that the unions, on which it depends for much of its support, may withdraw their backing from the so-called "Social Contract Mark II" on which they agreed with the government earlier this summer.

Supporting the government's fight to cut back inflation, still running at more than 13 per cent a year, the unions accepted a 4½ per cent ceiling on pay hikes for the next year.

They also accepted $1.8 billion in public spending cuts in 1976-77. But they did so only reluctantly and on condition the government would do everything in its power to slash the jobless total. If the government is unable to deliver on its side of the bargain, there are certain to be mounting union demands for an end to the "Social Contract."

Some left wing union leaders and the left wing of the Labor party never did accept the "Social Contract." Now they are demanding cancellation of the public spending cuts, imposition of controls on some imports and, if necessary, clamping of a "siege economy" on Britian.

Maddox campaign begins

FLEMINGTON, N.J. [UPI] — American Independent Party candidate Lester Maddox Thursday began his first presidential campaign swing with a call for equal debate time on television and a denunciation of the Republican and Democratic party candidates.

"There's a rumor out there somebody else is running for president. Don't you believe it," Maddox told people on the midway at the Flemington Fair.

The former Georgia governor gave the town a taste of the flamboyant campaign style which took him from his barbecue chicken business to the State House.

Maddox, who was nominated two weeks ago in Chicago by the American Independent Party, dashed into crowds to shake hands in his arm-swinging manner, try on various hats offered by persons at the concessions and pat children on the head.

Security was heavy at the fairgrounds because of a threat telephoned to the local state police barracks Wednesday night.

But Maddox, who said he was denied Secret Service protection, at times broke loose from the crowd of reporters, Flemington police and state troopers to shake hands.

"How are you honey chile?" he asked a little girl.

"Hey, how are you. I'm Lester Maddox and with your help I'm going to be the next President," he told a woman selling apple fritters. She gave him a fritter, Maddox walked away and suddenly went running back to her. "Wait a minute, here's 30 cents," he said.

A peanut vendor gave Maddox a bagful, but he refused to take any money. The candidate muttered that he wished Jimmy Carter, the former Georgia governor, would go back to growing peanuts fulltime.

At a news conference later Maddox described the Democratic candidate as "the most totally dishonest person."

"The difference between the candidates seeking nomination today is they have a platform to run by and one to live by," he said.

He said both Carter and President Ford were elected by their party's "political system" and the voters have no say in who should be the candidate.

They are unable to act independently," Maddox said of Ford and Carter.

"I'm campaigning on what ought to be done outside the political system," Maddox said. "Under the Maddox Administration we would have the most open and efficient government. We would clean 'em up."

Maddox said his campaign organizers have asked the three major television networks and the Federal Communications Commission for equal time along with the Ford-Carter debates.

Louisville busing calm

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The second year of court-ordered desegregation in Louisville has opened peacefully, with larger-than-expected school attendance. Leaders of upcoming antibusing demonstrations say they want to keep it that way.

Jack Shore, head of Union Labor against Busing, said leaders of the antibusing movements re-asking their members not to participate in unruly protests. "You're going to have a certain minority that won't listen," he said.

But he added that the antibusing forces "don't want anything like last year" when there were violent demonstrations on Sept. 5.

Deputy County Police Chief Robert Grant said antibusing marches are planned Friday and Sunday nights near Valley High School in an area where resistance to court-ordered busing is strongest.

Scheweiker without regrets

HARRISBURG, Pa. [UPI] — Sen. Richard Schweiker, R-Pa., who may have put his career on the line to be Ronald Reagan's running mate in a liberal-conservative alliance that failed, said Thursday he had no regrets and would do it all again.

"I looked back on what I did and why I did it," Schweiker said in a telephone interview from Washington. "I'd make the same decision again today. The only way we're going to survive is to bridge the gap in our party."

Schweiker, whose decision to run with Reagan shocked liberals and conservatives alike, said he met with President Ford Thursday and promised his full support for the November campaign.

"I repeated my earlier pledge of support for the President and discussed campaign strategy and debates with the President," Schweiker said. "I am going to work for the Ford-Dole ticket, as I said I would."

Ford transfers Russian envoy

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford announced Thursday he intends to shift Ambassador Walter Stoessel from Moscow to Bonn this year after a duty tour in which the Soviets allegedly beamed radiation right at his embassy desk.

Ford said he would nominate Stoessel to succeed Ambassador Martin Hillenbrand after West Germany's Oct. 3 national elections. Hillenbrand is leaving diplomatic service. Stoessel's appointment requires Senate approval.

Stoessel, 56, a career diplomat specialized in Soviet bloc affairs, will have served nearly three years — a normal tour — in Moscow, helping negotiate the still incomplete Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty and arranging visits by Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford.

But his tour, which coincided with a period of bitter U.S.-Soviet policy clashes, was also marked by the strange episode of microwave bombardments that sparked a radiation sickness scare involving Stoessel himself.

Diplomats in Washington and with Moscow experience reported last year that radiation levels had risen dangerously in the embassy and that the hottest spot of all was Stoessel's office, where the ambassador's desk sits before a window facing apartment buildings across a boulevard.

The U.S. and Soviet government squabbled over the cause of the radiation rise — the Americans ascribing it to intensified Soviet microwave bombardments presumably designed to jam the listening devices in the embassy attic just above Stoessel's office, and the Soviets blaming it on radioactive spillover from the embassy's own equipment.

There were unconfirmed reports the radiation aggravated a chronic anemic condition from which Stoessel suffers and caused him eye trouble. The State Department has refused to comment on these reports. But it sent doctors and radiation experts to check the embassy, and maintains the radiation levels posed no health hazard to anyone.

North Carolina governor predicts GOP nod

SALISBURY, N.C. [UPI] — Republican vice presidential nominee Robert Dole met today with North Carolina Gov. James F. Holshouser Jr., who predicted the Tar Heel State would be in the GOP column on election day.

Dole, Holshouser and Thomas Ellis, the state campaign manager for former California Gov. Ronald Reagan's defunct presidential bid, joined about 25 local part leaders to discuss campaign strategy.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., one of Reagan's most ardent supporters was noticeably absent from the meeting.

"Absolutely not," said Holshouser when asked if Helms was snubbing Dole.

The governor said he is confident the ticket of President Ford and Dole will do well even though Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter has a slight advantage as a native southerner.

"I don't think there's any question that, come Nov. 2, you will see North Carolina in the Ford-Dole column," Holshouser said.

Ellis said he plans to work for the Republiian ticket in the state.

"I am prepared to do what I can within the limits of trying to make a living for a change," said Ellis, a Raleigh lawyer.

Wednesday, Dole visited Atlanta and Charlotte, N.C., before coming to Salisbury. His two-day southern visit has three purposes: to challenge Jimmy Carter on his home ground, to unify backers of Ford and to show off what is perhaps Dole's best southern asset, his wife "Liddy".

Today was Elizabeth Dole day in Salisbury, her hometown of about 25,000 in the state's Piedmont region. The former Mary Elizabeth Hanford, 40, is a Harvard law graduate, a member of the Federal Trade Commission, a former Democrat and an articulate campaigner.

Viking 2 ready to land on Mars

PADADENA, Calif. [AP] — The Viking 2 Mars probe was given a thorough checkup Thursday for its venturesome expedition to a planet that is hostile and puzzling, but no longer a stranger.

The unmanned landing craft was examined in preparation for its release from the orbiting Viking 2 mother ship on Friday, and the tricky descent to the surface.

Its landing, set for about 7 p.m. EDT, marks the second stage of an exploration already so lucrative that scientists may spend years in their laboratories refining the scientific gold.

With Viking 2 set to begin its work, the Viking 1 lander entered a period of reduced activity.

In the six weeks since its July 20 landing, plus the previous month spent in orbit, Viking has done much to strip Mars of its mystery. Yet some major issues, particularly the question of Martian life, remain clouded.

"There is no question about the success of Viking," said the chief project scientist, Dr. Gerald Soffen. "It has landed safely on Mars and gathered some remarkable data."

Because of Viking, he said, "We really do know something about the atmosphere" and its makeup in the early history of the planet. "We have begun to understand the geology of the surface.

"But the chemistry of the surface is still very confusing.

Earthquake rumbles through Puget Sound; many awaken

SEATTLE [UPI] — A minor earthquake rumbled through northern Puget Sound early Thursday, shaking many residents to an early awakening.

Seismologists at the University of Washington said the quake, which struck at 6:36 a.m., measured 4.0 on the Richter scale and was centered about 20 miles northwest of Port Angeles in the eastern end of the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

"There shouldn't be any damages or injuries," a spokesman said and law enforcement agencies around the region reported none.

A spokesman at the Canadian Search and Rescue Coordination Center in Victoria, B.C., said the temblor was felt strongly in that city and also so in Vancouver.

"It struck about 6:36 and lasted for three seconds," said Capt. Frank Gavin of the center. "It was probably the best one we've had here in quite some time. It kind of jarred things in my house."

A woman on Lopez Island called the San Juan County Sheriff's Office to report a five-gallon bucket of tar was tumbled off the roof of her home by the quake. Sheriff Don Brown called into his own office to sayhis entire house was rattled.

Clallam County residents on the Olympic Peninsula also reported feeling the quake sharply. Pictures were tumbled off television sets and bounced against walls and dishes were rattled.

Murderers will get lifetime sentences

OKLAHOMA CITY [UPI] — The state Court of Criminal Appeals today ruled persons convicted of murder under Oklahoma's old mandatory death penalty law are subject to life imprisonment.

The state court said an "apparent void" existed in interpreting the old law because the U.S. Supreme Court had struck it down in a July 6 opinion. The state court said the old law was unconstitutional only insofar as the death penalty applied.

The legislature, meeing in special session called by Gov. David Boren, enacted a new death penalty law that took effect July 24, replacing a 1973 law. The court said anyone convicted of a murder that occurred prior to July 24 is subject to a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

The ruling applies to 36 persons now on death row and anyone convicted in the past or future for first degree murder committed prior to July 24.

The opinion specifically applied to Jackie R. Riggs, who was charged July 12 with first degree murder of Harold Williams, by setting fire to his farm home near Wynnewood July 4.

Riggs' attorney, Sen. Phil Lambert, D-Oklahoma City, said he sought the ruling both in behalf of his client and to seek clarification.

The selling process unveiled at a glance

By JERRY ROGERS

The sale. It's an American institution. Not a sale, but the sale. But not the sale as in the sale of the century. Rather, the sale as in the process engaged in by buyers and sellers.

Or should it be sellers and buyers? For, of course, every market is a seller's market. Even when goods are in a surplus.

The sale is a complex end result of a formula containing many variables. I say a result and not the result because there are, obviously, other results derived from the formula.

The various major elements in the formula include (but are not limited to): the action of selling, the seller, the buyer, the sale and the item or object of the sale (and also the attention of the buyer and the seller, not to mention frequent attention from both interested and disinterested buystanders).

Each of these major elements has its own minor elements (though they tend to overlap). Each also has its own tangible and intangible weighty influences. One such weighty influence would be the salability (also, saleability) of the item or object of the sale. I differentiate between item and object because the object of a sale is not always the item of the sale.

That is to say that the process by which something is sold contains as many extrinsic rewards as intrinsic. To be sure the extrinsic rewards of a sale for either (or both) the buyer and the seller are more important on the gut level. And there is certainly a large portion of selling done at the gut level. Of course, as we all know, the reason much selling is done at a gut level is that selling is in a large way dealing and offering and considering offers. Since a great deal of dealing is done on speculation and a large number (some might say all) of offers are made on assumptions (as are a majority of considerations of offers), the fallible human pretension to logic is often discarded and buyers and sellers act on instinct or impulse (but it must be kept in mind that impulse is usually a last resort resorted to only after instinct has sufficiently worn out its ability to lead).

We must also address any discussion of the subject to such relatives of the sale as bartering and exchanging. Those subjects can be dealt with at a later time, however.

The revised fourth edition of Black's Law Dictionary states: "Three circumstances concur to the perfection of the contract (for our purposes, the execution of the sale), to-wit, the thing sold, the price, and the consent."

Black's also goes on to say the sale includes the implication of "the passing of the general and absolute title (of the sale item)". This points to the fact (though some might say this is stretching the intent of the definition) that the reason humans engage in selling is to increase magnitude of owned goods. Of course, the notion of ownership comes into play with this thought, but that, too, must be dealt with at a later time. But one notion it does point to that must be dealt with is that of the sale as a means to an end rather than an end in itself. In other words the completion of a sale is seen as valuable because of the possibilities it unveils for the future rather than because of the completed transfer.

Because the sale is therefore then a part of a process, a snowballing process at that, it yields the impression that anyone may successfully engage in a career of sales (however, here I am not refering to the occupation of salesperson or any position even remotely resembling such).

There are too many intangible influences (as previously mentioned) that affect the buyer, seller and the sale itself to allow the inexperienced buystander to partake in the fostering of the illusion of universal sales ability.

Could the phrase "The meek shall inherit the earth" have been a reference to future justice for all those who are now excluded from the sales behavior?

Nuts to Carter

Ah yes I remember it well. There were so many presidential candidates running in and out of the campus that we didn't have enough reporters to keep track of them.

"Someone want to go cover a candidate" came to call.

"Who is he?"

"Jimmy Carter the former Governor of Georgia?"

"Who is he?"

"He has been running for president for a year now. According to this," (the news editor pulls another press release from the trash) "He claims he is going to save the country after he wins in New Hampshire."

"Who is he?"

Jimmy Cart-

"No what does he stand for?"

"Mother apple pie and the Baptist Church"

"JESUS CHRIST"

"Yea, him too."

So off we went to Thompsen to an auditorium. It was hard to decide whether to go to the Marx Brothers movie there that night or the Jimmy Carter show. I went to the Carter show against my better sense

I don't know what the hell Hunter Thompson was talking about when he wrote in Rolling Stone of his personal Carter conversion because of an early Carter speech. Carter's presentation was far from the finest piece of political oratory that Thompson described. In fact it was pure trash. Garbage. Neo religious southern babbling in which he drooled all over the actual issues of nuclear power, abortion, defense spending and public welfare with gooey talk about farming peanuts and the number of blacks in his gubernatorial administration. He told us about his friend Gregg Allman. He told us about how a nuclear submarine works. He told us about making "our country like our church."

On that note we left just in time to see Harpo next door pull his famous 'customs line' routine in which he, after being frustrated by the bureaucratic mess, tosses paper all over the place and goes slap happy with the rubber stamp. I loved it. I was going to go get Jimmy because Jimmy talked a lot about the bureaucracy.

I figured that we had seen the last of Jimmy Carter. Maybe if Jackson got the nomination he might choose Carter as a running mate or something. But Lo and behold! Jimmy didn't disappear. Suddenly his teeth were everywhere. We couldn't get away from them. I went to New Mexico — he was on TV. I looked in the magazines he was showing up everywhere. I didn't understand. What happened to the American people? Is this really deeper than we had thought? He Carter discovered some brain controlling chemical and injected it into the entire peanut crop?

What it actually reminded me of was the presidential candidate in Robert Altman's Nashville, Hal Walker, whom you never see but his words get broadcast from a truck. At one point in the movie Howard K. Smith was seen giving a television commentary saying, "No one knows who this Hal Walker is but a lot of people are wishing that he'd just go away."

But it's too late for that now. The demagogue is with us and it appears that he will be with us for a while now. Carter is new, the media likes him and they are treating him well. But nonetheless Carter is a man obsessed with power and success. His ego is tremendous. That much is obvious. For that simple reason he bears careful watching — very careful watching.

Death in Soweto

By JOE LATORRE

SOWETO, Aug. 9 — The tens of thousands of black Africans rioting in Johannesburg's teeming black suburb of Soweto see themselves caught between an intolerable present and an unacceptable future.

The present is one million blacks segretated into an urban enclave where they earn bare subsistence by providing services to the wealthy white sectors of Johannesburg. The future is the government's plan to transplant the enclave to rural "homelands" — far from the white cities — where black Africans expect to face even grimmer economic and social conditions.

For 100 years, the South African government has viewed Soweto, like all its black urban townships, as a cancer threatening the economic pulse of the country. To cut it away for good, the government is now creating "independent" or semi-autonomous Bantustans (homelands), far from the large white urban centers, for each of the major African ethnic groups — the Zulu, Xhosa, Sotho and so on.

Under this policy, the vast majority of Africans — who make up 70 per cent of South Africa's population — will be resettled on 13 per cent of the land, while the remainder will be allowed to live in or near white urban areas, as foreign workers or sojourners, for as long as they are employed there.

Surrounded on three sides by military camps, Soweto today is really a conglomeration of 26 separate townships — sprawling bedroom communities for a million Africans who work in Johannesburg and nearby industrial areas, commuting often three hours a day at a cost of 10 per cent of their pay.

Living conditions there range from the relatively expensive homes of South Africa's tiny African elite — doctors, lawyers and entertainers — to thousands of mass built, identical houses of two or three rooms, the still less attractive shanties that line mud-filled streets and the dormitories or hostels for unmarried men and women.

Electricity and piped water are available only to a fraction of Soweto residents, and piped gas is unheard of. A leading cause of death is carbon monoxide poisoning from the charcoal fires used for cooking and heating in most homes.

But economic conditions in the black homelands are more desperate. A 1974 government survey revealed that the per capita income in the homelands is $8 per month — a fraction of the $150 per capita income of South African whites. Of the households surveyed, 25 per cent were reported as having no cash income at all. The creation of industrial employment opportunities in and near the homelands has fallen "far behind" even the modest target for 1975 — despite the government's efforts to encourage industry to open plants there.

In the four-year period preceding the survey, the Bantu Investment Corp., a semi-official agency, created 13,000 new jobs in borderland and homeland industries. But during the same period, 80,000 new teenage workers entered the labor force. The survey predicted that, at the present rate of industrialization, only one-sixth of the new entrants to the labor market can expect to find employment in or near the homelands.

The result is that migration to Soweto and other urban areas continues, in spite of the official homeland policy. At last count, 13.9 million South Africans were designated "citizens" of the African homelands, but only 6.9 million of these actually resided in the homelands.

The others live where they can find work, mainly in the urban areas. The most extreme case of labor migration is the homeland of Basotho Qwaqwa, where only 24,000 of the 1.3 million "citizens" actually live in the homeland.

Despite these drastic shortcomings, the South African government is pressing ahead with its program of giving "independence" to the homelands. It will be a limited form of independence, however — only partly because such elements of sovereignty as control over foreign relations will remain in the hands of the South African government.

More important is the complete economic dependence of the homelands. A large part of the working adult population will still be forced to commute to work outside of their own "country," or to settle temporarily as sojourners in hostels near the white urban areas separated from their spouses and families.

Even the modest steps towards self-sufficiency taken so far are now being undermined by the government's lack of funds to consolidate the proposed homelands by purchasing the pockets of white-owned lands within their boundaries. Yet massive infusions of capital are needed for homeland industries to be created.

Meanwhile the government continues to weed out and isolate all but essential black workers in urban areas.

In Alexandra township, for instance, another suburb of Johannesburg, which was extensively redeveloped in 1974 — new rules were established for living in the rebuilt housing blocks which excluded widows, divorcees, unmarried mothers, Africans from other countries, and persons who either were not born in Alexandra or had not worked continuously for a single employer for the past 10 years. In Soweto itself, the various townships are being segregated according to ethnic group, so that the Zulu will live in one section, the Xhosa in another, and so on. These stringent regulations are expected to become the prototype for all African urban areas in the years to come.

In the past, African resistance to apartheid has been punctuated by such incidents as the shootings at Sharpeville in 1960, where 69 Africans were killed by police while peacefully demonstrating against the laws requiring them to carry passes at all times.

Such brutal measures, however, have not silenced the opposition. Condemnation of the government's homelands policy has come from such diverse sources as the Organization of African Unity, the nationalist Black People's Convention, the South African Students Organization, the Chairman of the Soweto urban council, the Anglican dean of Johannesburg, and even the leaders of some of the homelands themselves. For these leaders, as for large numbers of black South Africans, the homelands policy is a step backward rather than forward. They see their identity as Africans — rather than as Zulu, Xhosa, and so on — as more relevant for today and the future.

In 1966, 83 per cent of Soweto's residents opposed the policy of ethnically segregated townships, and in a 1974 survey 75 per cent said they regarded Soweto as their home. These Africans are not likely to quietly accept the reduction of their status to that of sojourners.

As the homelands policy continues, further protests and violence in South Africa seem likely to accompany it.

The rat race comes home

Radical feminism hasn't really caught on up at the non-woven machine on the fourth floor of the mill. The two machine operators working there have plastered at least a dozen porn centerfolds on their wall, with apparently little concern that they might offend a passerby. These two don't work very hard, so they have plenty of time to peruse a plethora of obscenity on cheap newsprint.

I worked in the water lab on the same floor. Six AM car pool with three or four executives of the little company, and I was at work to analyze polluted water. Each morning I heard talk of Republicanism and government overspending, of profits and Lowell Weicker (one of my Senators).

If the business rat-race is the steady diet of these organization men, then free enterprise is surely their religion. They are friendly, respectable men, educated and concerned, and pretty damn wealthy — believers in a system that's worked quite well for them (and so why not for anyone else who wants to work his way up?).

On the job I met workers at work, doing the terribly tedious kinds of jobs that have to be done by someone. Short conversations confirmed my suspicion that the "average" person has a fairly sharp mind despite the stifling nature of the work.

What one soon discovers is that this "real life" situation is rather far removed from all those models one tries so diligently to understand in Econ 103, be they traditional or radical. People have a marvelous way of dishevelling well-ordered theories of their behavior.

The "socially responsible" corporation that capitalists are constantly telling us about is about as close to truth as their model of our supposedly competititve market is — not very close at all. The encounters I had with the reporting of water pollution to the "proper authorities" indicated to me that a company will clean up only what it must to prevent its being shut down by the government, and no more. Making money is still the paramount consideration.

Any theory stating that laborers are physically overworked — at least at this factory — is simply incorrect; most have much time on the job with which they have nothing to do. But nor are workers paid nearly as much as executives, and one must suspect, considering how these people talk about their children's futures, that the dream of upward social mobility is most often just that — a dream.

Perhaps the most disturbing revelation this summer was that of the universal appeal of money. Everyone in the mill seemed to share the goal of getting more, especially those who had less. The root of all evil appears firmly planted.

I was haunted all summer by the image of some Southerner with an immense grin (but no sense of humor) and empty eyes, and of whom I knew nothing. Yet everyone keeps telling me that Jimmy Carter will be the most powerful man in the world within a half year.

I reckon that if everyone believes the president is so powerful, then he must at least wield a considerable influence on people's perception of government. Hence, unlike so many of my radical acquaintances, I will cast my vote this November, in the hopes that by some fluke the person elected will expose some of the real issues, rather than obscure them behind a giant pool of peanut butter or WIN buttons.

The end of August found me on the coast of Maine, admiring some rugged scenery and the marvelous mansions of the American upper class. And it is here that all the economic and social theories of modern America are finally placed up for judgement. For there exists one overwhelmingly obvious fact about our country. There are people here as wealthy as any who have ever inhabited the earth — American noblemen with sailing yachts, mammoth homes for each season, and bevies of maids for each home. And at the same time there are people crowded into city tenements, malnourished and undereducated.

No matter how long we insist on defending our present way of doing things, this inequity hangs with us. Our economic system is failing us, despite our attempts to repair it, and it will simply have to make incredible reforms or be replaced. As Doris over in the research development lab once aptly said, "you can't make chicken soup from chicken shit." How true.

Student participation

By ADAM AUSTER

Chancellor Bromery seems on the verge of admitting something students have been saying for years: student government doesn't work. As the Chancellor put it in Wednesday's Collegian, "If you ever got 18-and-a-half-thousand undergraduate students who all want to play a role in governance, it would be chaos." In other words, it is just not possible for students to make basic decisions about courses and personal life-styles, because the current system would not be able to function if we did.

Yet almost anyone would agree that this University would benefit if, somehow, we could all become active participants in, rather than passive recipients of, our own education and our daily lives. For one thing, students as a whole would become more of a community if we were all working together on things relevant to our future plans and present living situation, and there is no doubt that living here would be far more exciting if every day were not pre-programmed by someone else. Student designed classes, as we know from limited experience, tend to be much more interesting and relevant to the students who designed them ... and many professors appreciate the added energy and commitment students usually put into them.

The obvious question is, how can we change the "current system" to allow participation for everyone who wants it — without "chaos"? Chancellor Bromery, surprisingly enough, didn't even bring this question up in his interview. Perhaps he doesn't really care about participation.

But then why should the Chancellor publicly go on record as saying that "student participation" — which is the sacred motto of student government and, until recently, of the UMass Administration — is not possible? It's true that the Administration and the Student Government Association haven't been agreeing too much lately. In fact, last spring UMass President Robert Wood threatened that the Student Senate would be disbanded by the Trustees if it didn't stop what he called "inappropriate activities," such as holding demonstrations and taking the Trustees to court.

Last summer, too, the Chancellor attacked the Campus Center Board of Governors — an elected, student board — as unrepresentative of students because it favored a student controlled credit union over a commercial bank in the Campus Center.

If the Chancellor is sincerely interested in the problem of how to change the current system to something that will allow greater student participation and control, he will come up with some real solutions instead of just casually noting that the problem exists. In the meantime, we should be busy deciding how this University community could be a better place ... whether Chancellor Bromery approves or not.

Last birds again

By LISA MELILLI

What do they sing, the last birds coasting down the twilight, banking across woods filled with darkness, their frayed wings curved on the world like a lover's arms which form, night after night, in sleep, an irremediable absence. .
(Last Songs by Galway Kinnell)

Sometimes the world just seems too large to understand, never mind to conquer with idealistic dreams built on the ease and beauty of childhood. And university life doesn't help the situation any. After three months of living in the real world, one returns here knowing the comforts of ignorance... for here reality is replaced by sterile academia and plastic intelligence.... and one can dream the time away far from a disturbed parent's glance.

So we all become like last birds, just flying through night anywhere, not seeing clearly the ground we know we must someday land on. Even though we come here with such fine intentions and planned out goals... somehow we are distracted and join in the prally of the last birds.

Coming back this year I couldn't help but remember my first impressions of university life. Plastic people, or no, perhaps computers acting and talking just as they should act and talk according to pre-programmed ideas on what college-persons do. And they never sat back and looked at themselves to see if they really are that way. And somehow I lost touch with the world for somehow everything seemed too nice and free and my conservative ideas began breaking down accepting the unrealities of college life.

And all around everyone seemed so different from my all girls' Catholic High friends all set in different molds — and my mind expanded.

Yet all around everyone seemed lost — caught between the prankery of high school and the seriousness of the nine to five working day. The college experience didn't seem like a preparation for that serious world, but rather an escape at least for another four years.

The very old and the very young seemed to have disappeared off the face of the earth. Where did they all go?

And so I became a last bird reading all the posters on oppression in the Student Union and somehow finding myself entranced by Student Government, Student Unionization, and something called socialism (funny for the daughter of a corporate executive). Suddenly I really began to notice the ill-treatment of minorities on campus and elsewhere. And then how could I forget feminism — I suddenly became a woman when I still felt like a girl. I began to notice so readily this thing in men called sexism. And all things were the only touches of anything close to the real world — and so they became a real world.

And when I went home I couldn't wait to escape the dream world set aside for me here....

... only when I went home I realized no one was ready for any social revolution. Women my age still went out with the "girls" every Friday night and loved the superior role given to men. And I found people who actually believed all the prejudiced generalities concerning Blacks, Jews, Hispanics, you name it!

And so my wings became frayed holding the world clinging to it, attempting to understand what had happened....

Now I'm back, all of us are back to become last birds again. For some of us it will be the first time. But for others it will be the last and the "irremediable absence" must disappear forever. But can it ever?

SEC censures five; Ford adviser included

WASHINGTON [UPI] — L. William Seidman told Gerald Ford about a government investigation of his auditing firm when Ford, vice president at the time, asked him to become an adviser, a White House spokesman said yesterday.

Ford then asked his counsel, Philip Buchen, to see "if anything precluded Bill Seidman from joining the vice president's staff," and Buchen found nothing, White House press secretary Ron Nessen said.

Seidman, a friend of Ford from Grand Rapids, Mich., then joined Vice President Ford's staff, Nessen said, and "the President now feels that no facts have turned up to change that judgment."

Seidman's accounting firm, Seidman and Seidman, was censured by the Securities and Exchange Commission Wednesday for negligence regarding four clients. The firm neither denied nor admitted the charges, but consented to the SEC complaint.

Seidman, a White House adviser on economic matters, was not named in the proceeding. He said Wednesday he was not involved in the alleged wrongdoing.

Nessen expressed irritation with reporters who asked Thursday about Seidman, noting that Seidman's name was not in the consent order. "I have a strong feeling about respect for people's reputation," Nessen said.

Seidman resigned from the Grand Rapids firm in 1974 to join Ford's staff. He was a member of the Seidman and Seidman policy board whose decisions involved audits of the corporations that committed the alleged frauds from 1971 to 1974.

The SEC forbade the firm from acquiring new clients until Dec. 15, continuing a voluntary ban begun in June.

The SEC also filed suit in District Courts in Washington and Chicago against three clients of Seidman and Seidman, alleging fraud and misappropriation of funds: Cenco Inc. of Chicago and Omni-Rx Health Systems of Long Beach, Calif., makers of health products; and SaCom of Sun Valley, Calif., which makes electronic equipment.

CB sales continue to soar

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — William I. Thomas is profiting from the current citizen's band talk craze and sees a long-term, steady market for the two-way radios as a universal safety device.

The present phenomenal CB growth rate is expected to pick up even more as a result of a Federal Communications Commission ruling expanding the present 23 airwave channels to 40, effective January, 1977.

Thomas, president of Pathcom Inc., a manufacturing firm based in Harbor City, Calif., said the additional channels will allow more people to use the airwaves for basic communications. However, he is more concerned that the units someday will be used universally as a safety device.

"We're going through a transition," he said. "CB sets are going to be a useful safety device for motorists. Even now, many consider it a life-saving means — not a toy.

"In the early days," Thomas said, "people were talking just to be talking, but on the open highway now, people are asking reasonable questions — about the weather, the highway patrol and places to stop."

CB had its highest growth rate shortly after the truckers' strike three years ago when people began to realize its communications potential.

"Not too many people are aware of the safety element of the CB," said Thomas. "The safety element is the key from my own point of view."

Some motorists use the CB in their cars just to avoid tickets for speeding, but, Thomas said, increasingly they are realizing its value for summoning emergency help.

There currently is only one emergency channel on the CB, and there has been some concern with congestion, but with the recent FCC ruling, this could change.

"That's something we've been working on for some time — to get more channels to allow more people to communicate," said Thomas. "We are still asking for more frequencies so more people can use it."

Thomas estimated there may be as many as 15 million sets in active use. He said there are about six million licensed CB operators, and much unlicensed use.

Despite its widespread popularity, Thomas does not think CBers should be regulated as amateur radio operators are.

"I think the frequency spectrum is a natural resource and the citizens of the United States should have access to it and use it for their needs," he said.

N-sales limits expected in US

[PNS] — The booming export of U.S. nuclear technology — only a decade ago the most tightly controlled technology in the world — is stirring mounting Congressional resistance to what critics view as dangerously loose government controls on nuclear exports.

Some fear that the high profitability of nuclear export coupled with the precarious financial state of the industry has locked both the State Department and private companies into an escalating nuclear export race.

The key concern, reflected in recent amendments to energy bills pending before Congress, is the unfettered sale of nuclear material to nations that do not accept international safeguards.

At least 41 countries have now elected to go nuclear, up from 32 just two years ago. The three newest members of the nuclear club are Indonesia, Poland and Turkey.

According to the recently released annual report of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, 20 countries are now capable of building crude but effective nuclear explosives from the spent fuel of nuclear power plants. Nearly twice that many will have stockpiled enough plutonium from nuclear plants to build atomic bombs during the next decade.

In addition, the Geneva-based International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), a UN group, now proposed to scatter nuclear fuel recycling centers — which yield deadly plutonium — around the world to serve the 454 reactors now operating or planned outside the U.S.

Yet only one-third of the current nuclear nations now observe the IAEA safeguards against malfunctions, sabotage or theft, and most are not members of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), which bans development of nuclear weapons.

Said President Ford in his recent arms control address to Congress, "A world of many nuclear weapons states could become extremely unstable and dangerous."

But despite the acknowledgement, the administration and the nuclear industry have resisted current congressional efforts aimed at limiting nuclear exports.

Those proposals, sponsored by Sen. Stuart Symington (D., Mo.) and Rep. John Anderssn (R., Ill.), would, among other things:

Entitle Congress to approve or disapprove all nuclear export licenses to countries that have not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty;

Insist that all U.S. nuclear customers adhere to IAEA safeguards;

Ban military aid to countries supplying or receiving nuclear technology unless both countries were party to international safeguards agreements.

Industry leaders complain that strict congressional controls will further weaken their position against foreign competitors, such as Japan, France, West Germany and Canada, where there is little or no domestic opposition to nuclear exports.

While U.S. environmental groups were challenging an export license to build a nuclear plant in South Africa last spring, for example, the South African government dropped the U.S. bid and bought a West German plant.

The government claims that, had the U.S. supplied the South African plant, American safety standards might have offered the world environment better protection.

McCarthy denied Texas ballot

AUSTIN, Tex. [UPI] — A three-judge federal panel Thursday ruled unconstitutional a section of the Texas' election code because it does not allow listing of independent candidates for president on the ballot.

But the panel said Eugene J. McCarthy, an independent candidate for president who requested the ruling, waited too late to bring suit and would not be allowed on the Nov. 2 ballot.

The silver-haired former Senator from Minnesota challenged a section of the election code which says independent candidates for president or vice president cannot be listed on the ballot.

"There is no way we can get on the ballot in Texas unless the court rules favorably," McCarthy told the panel in testimony prior to the ruling. "We think it's unconstitutional."

Dave Kendall, first assistant attorney general, said it was unfair for McCarthy to wait until two months before the election to file the lawsuit.

"He's asking you to rule the state law unconstitutional on the hopes he could get enough support to get the required signatures to get on the ballot," Kendall told the judges. "An effort at this late date to put Mr. McCarthy on the ballot would be disruptive."

Secretary of State Mark White, the state's chief elections officer, said the Texas Election Code excludes the names of independent candidates for president and vice president from the ballot. He said the deadline for petitions to be placed on the ballot in statewide elections was February and McCarthy's supporters did not contact him until April.

Health clinic offers contraceptive advice

As part of a comprehensive health program, contraception education counseling and prescriptions are available to students through the University Health Services (UHS). Over-the-counter products may also be purchased at the UHS pharmacy. Members of the professional staff provide non-judgmental consultation to help students make decisions in an informed and responsible manner.

Educational sessions are offered four times weekly, and although every woman receiving contraception services for the first time must attend, these sessions are open to any interested person. Included is a brief film on the pelvic exam. Men are most welcome to attend these sessions and no appointment is necessary. These education sessions lasting about an hour, are held every Monday and Thursday at 7 p.m. and Tuesdays and Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Health Center in room 302.

Once one has attended the session, and has the need to come to the Clinic, one must consider the information presented and carefully decide which method is best. When a choice has been made, call 549-2600 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays or go in person during these hours to make the appropriate appointment in Clinic IV. Appointments for annual follow-up exams may be made in Clinic IV also. Breast self-exam instruction is available at all Contraception Clinic sessions. If anyone has problems or questions at any time, call 549-2671.

Course to be added to Journalism Dept.

There will be a new course in news editing, copy editing, headlining, and news selection offered by the Journalism department this semester.

The course, taught by Prof. Sally Grimes, will meet for the first time Tuesday at 7 p.m. in E-10 Machmer. At this time, a definite meeting time for the course for the rest of the semester will be arranged by those in attendance.

Students interested in the course should bring add-drop forms with them to the first meeting Tuesday night.

Labor Center series to kick off Tuesday

Prof. Malcolm Kisby of Croyden Institute of Advanced Technology, Croyden, England will address the first colloquium in the Labor Center's colloquia series Tuesday at 11 a.m. in the Campus Center, Room 903.

Kisby has been visiting Labor Studies Centers in the United States for the past three months under a Winston Churchill fund grant. In Britain he teaches Labor Studies primarily to labor and management groups in the white collar fields.

He will talk on "A Briton Compares American and British Labor Education." After a short presentation, he will answer questions. The University community is invited.

OH, Central sponsor concert this Sunday

Orchard Hill and Central Area Governments are co-sponsoring an outdoor concert this Sunday which is open to the entire university community. The event is scheduled to begin at noon and run until approximately 10 p.m. Four bands will be appearing: Southside, a new group in the valley; The Baily Bros., also from the valley and now including the members of Reliable Music; The Atlantics, a new band from Boston; and Big Screamin' McGrew Band, also from Boston. The concert will be held on Orchard Hill at the basketball court between Webster and Van Meter. It should be noted that no alcoholic beverages will be sold. In case of rain the concert will take place on Monday.

Radio noise invades Antarctica silence

ANTARCTICA, Aug. 9 [Pacific News Service] — In the seas off Antarctica, where only the natural sounds of wind, water and crunching ice disturb the silence, a new type of pollution has invaded the atmosphere — radio noise, a cacophony of broadcast, teletype and jamming signals overlapping in a jungle of high-frequency electronics.

As radio operator aboard the Research Vessel Hero, I have spent many long hours listening in on this worldwide communications chaos. Even during 1974-75, when we were near the bottom of the 11-year sun spot cycle and radio noise and interference should have been at a minimum, the number of incoming high-frequency signals was overwhelming.

Starting now, and for at least the next five years, the daily count of sun spots will spurt up. The earth's atmosphere will thus be bombarded by ever-larger showers of charged particles emitted by solar storms — forming an effective mirror in the upper atmosphere for radio signals from earth.

As this "ionization" of the atmosphere grows, high frequency (HF) radio signals will increasingly bounce back to earth rather than be lost in the outer reaches of the galaxy. The signals, even though low-powered, will skip back and forth between land and sky, ultimately hopping around the globe in what the experts call "skip-conditions."

The problem can only get worse. Aside from the added solar activity, the world is experiencing an explosion of electronic communications and gadgetry, all of which competes for space in a limited resource — the airwaves.

Airwave pollution is the direct by-product of the escalating use of not only radio, but all electronic products, including high-voltage transmission lines, automobile ignitions, TVs, video games, microwave ovens and even pocket calculators.

To make themselves heard through all the radiation, or interference, high frequency transmitters must grow ever-more powerful. This is especially true of international broadcasting, where the Cold War is still being fought in the HF band.

As the BBC, Radio Moscow, Voice of America and dozens of other government-controlled networks boost their power to leap international boundaries, neighboring countries buy equally powerful transmitters to jam the airwaves or spread their own points of view.

There are now more than 80 so-called external broadcasting stations, most in the HF band, beaming their messages to various corners of the world. As the number grows, megacycle after megacycle of the limited spectrum is used up.

Interference multiplies along with the number of receivers and transmitters. Every television set and transistor radio has its own local oscillator, which radiates if not properly tuned — and most aren't.

Of 25 foreign and domestic built citizens band (CB) radios recently inspected by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), none met the Commission's type acceptance requirements. Television manufacturers, blaming makers of shoddy CBs for increasing airwave interference, are now prodding the FCC to tighten its CB specifications and inspection system.

The CB makers, in turn, blame the video game manufacturers for the added radiation and poor communications quality.

In fact, the CB craze, which began four years ago, is already crowding itself out of existence. According to the electronics trade journals, many of the original "good buddies" and "ratchet jawers" of the trucking world are speaking their last "10-4s" and pulling the plug. They can barely hear each other through all the intereference from other CBers operating on the overloaded 23 channels provided by the FCC.

While the government is expected to increase the number of CB channels to 45, the overload will likely remain and might intensify. Despite the crowding, however, FCC Chairman Richard E. Wiley recently predicted the two-way communication gadgets will eventually be in every American's home, car and boat.

Already, sales volume in the U.S. is expected to top 15 million this year — and stay there. As the craze peaked in March, the FCC received an astonishing 600,000 applications for CB licenses, up from only 17,000 in March 1972.

There are now about 25 million CB units in America, plus a comparable saturation in Japan, where most are manufactured.

Here in Antarctica, those millions of transmitters all come in at once, jumbled in with propaganda, jamming signals and teletype messages. And as solar activity increases, scattering more and more signals over the horizon, so will the jumble.

Since we can't blame the sun, the FCC will have to do. In fact experts agree that the government blundered badly when it relegated the HF band — capable of worldwide communication — to the amateurs in 1912, shortly after radio was commercially introduced in the low and medium frequencies.

Since then, a feeble attempt has been made to keep communications short distance by limiting the power of the transmitter to five watts. Yet under proper solar and weather conditions, those five watts easily carry a message 7,000 miles to the South Pole.

Instead, say the experts, amateur radio should have been placed at a frequency around 400 megahertz (MHz) rather than the present 27 MHz. That would have put it in the ultra high frequency range where communications beyond the horizon would be impossible. A large piece of the radio spectrum would have been conserved for more legitimate long distance communications.

Three years from now, government officials will meet for the World Administrative Radio Conference in Geneva and make a start at working out the international solutions.

Until then, the atmosphere will continue to be a dumping ground for vast amounts of electromagnetic radiation, the effects of which we are only beginning to understand. And the radio operator on the Research Vessel Hero will have plenty of unwanted company.

As the situation NOW stands, the applicant must then go to the welfare office which covers his-her local place of residence in order to determine eligibility through a "determination" interview.

Determination interviews (eligibility determination) for those who reside in Amherst or Northampton are held in Munson Hall. For those applicants who live north of Amherst, interviews are held in Greenfield; for those applicants who live south of Amherst, interviews are held in Holyoke.

The hours of the Munson Office are Monday-Friday, 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

FTC clamps down on vitamin ads

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In a landmark decision that will affect the way vitamins and other drug products may be advertised for children, the Federal Trade Commission yesterday clamped severe restrictions on advertising for "Spider-Man" vitamins.

Saying the use of such "hero figures" can trade on children's trust and open the door to overdoses, the agency announced that Hudson Pharmaceutical Corp. has signed a consent order after already dropping the ads voluntarily.

The settlement bans the use of children's vitamin ads on television or in print if the "dominant appeal" is to children or if children make up half the audience of TV programs carrying the ads.

In addition, the company may not air children's vitamin ads on television before 9:05 p.m. local time if Spider-Man or another hero figure is used; may not depict a hero figure larger than half the size of the ad itself; may not advertise children's vitamins at all in comic books, and may not mail such ads directly to children.

"Children are unqualified by age or experience to decide for themselves whether or not they should use multiple vitamin supplements in general or an advertised brand in particular," the commissioner said.

"Thus the directing of advertising of multiple vitamin supplements to children is in itself an unfair practice."

The case grew out of a complaint filed with the FTC last year by Action for Children's Television, a Boston-based public interest group. Hudson quit using the ads after the issue was raised.

The ads featured the cartoon character, described as the single most popular personality among children today, telling youngsters about the virtues of Spider-Man vitamins.

ACT President Peggy Charren said the settlement is "a precedent-setting event" because it "treats children as a very special audience

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

— Born today, you have a natural affinity for the very young and the elderly. You seem to know instinctively how to communicate effectively with children, how to make them work and play in harmony with themselves and the world around them. You are equally adept at helping the elderly get in touch with their surroundings. Not one to do things for people, you have a special understanding of how to get people to do things for themselves. This is a talent that will in the end provide a vital service to the community at large. There may, however, be times that your services will go unappreciated, for it is the nature of people that they would, in general, prefer to aided through material rather than intangible means.

Although you are by no means self-indulgent, you do have a tendency to expect to get what you want when you want it. Fortunately, the things you desire are, for the most part, completely attainable and completely acceptable. Thus you have neither to thwart your desires nor go against the wishes of society. You enjoy life's luxuries -- but you know through experience that you can live without them. Knowing this, you will not be tempted to "sell out" merely to gain more of the material things that can make everyday living more pleasant.

Possessing great self-confidence as well as self-discipline, you should find nothing serious, nothing insurmountable standing in the way of your success.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You should be recovering fast now from recent emotional upheavals. Don't place blame where it doesn't belong.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Difficulties on the employment scene should lessen considerably today. Use the morning to put forth new ideas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Routine matters take up your time today. Don't be disappointed in another's performance; be happy with your own.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Keep to the well-traveled path when it comes to a search for pleasurable activities today. "Far out" may well be off limits.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The generosity of strangers may take you completely by surprise. Make an effort repay a kindness before day's end.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Anxious moments early in the day may cause you to lose out on gains late in the day. Don't fret: learn from the experience.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Come up with a solution to a minor family problem and you will automatically be able to solve a major one in other quarters.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — When considering a new method of performing an old trick, take your audience into account. Leave excitement in activity.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You would do well to turn your mind from thoughts of travel. Save your energy for a new challenge to your creative instincts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Relax your efforts to get ahead on the employment scene. You may gain a fresher start — and a more profitable one -- another day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Spend a highly beneficial hour with those who can be of both material and spiritual help to you. Career matters come first.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you can tell your story in a simple but detailed manner, you will get your point across. Expect gains at evening.

First day of Ohio busing carried out without incident

[UPI] — Ohio's first school busing program was started in Dayton yesterday with hundreds of busloads of "giggling, vivacious" black and white school students transported to 62 schools without incident.

In the Louisville, Ky., area, attendance was reported higher Thursday at all 23 schools in the second day of classes in that area's busing program which started its second year on Wednesday.

About 14,000 of the Dayton school system's 41,000 students are scheduled to be bused to achieve a 48 per cent black — 52 per cent white racial balance.

The busing schedule in Dayton, a city of about 250,000 in southwestern Ohio, called for students in grades one through five and grades nine and 10 to be bused Thursday. All other grades will begin Friday and some of those pupils also will be bused.

Buses made about 1,000 stops to pick up "a lot of giggling, vivacious youngsters — nothing new on opening day" said Dayton School Supt. John B. Maxwell.

"All is well," said Denis Hart, associate director of the board's Information Action Center. "Everything is super cool. Everything is running smoothly, without a hitch."

"The buses rolled on time," said John Dahm, an advisor to the Information Action Center. "They appeared to be full as expected."

Dr. Robert Kegerreis, president of Wright State University and named by federal Judge Carl Rubin to head a Citizens Task Force to monitor the busing said, "I am extremely happy.

"If things go tomorrow as well as they did today I will be quite cheered," he said.

In Louisville, all 23 high school and middle schools surveyed showed higher attendance than Wednesday when schools opened.

Police said a minor incident at Stuart High School in the Louisville area resulted in three arrests.

School officials emphasized the incident was minor.

"There were about a half dozen students involved, all blacks except for one white boy," said Assistant Principal James F. Huggans. "We had to send for police, but the altercation didn't last too long. These were students we had problems with last year."

Cape Town rioting hits all-white area

CAPE TOWN, South Africa [UPI] — Rioting spread to the exclusively white downtown area for the first time yesterday with police firing tear gas and charging into crowds hammering antigovernment demonstrators with clubs.

It was the first time in 10 weeks of rioting which has killed 292 persons throughout South Africa that violence spread to all-white areas. The latest death came earlier Thursday when a black man was stoned to death by a gang of six black youths on a highway outside Johannesburg.

The escalation of racial violence came only hours before Prime Minister John Vorster was due to fly to a meeting with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger in Zurich on spreading bloodshed in southern Africa.

Witnesses in Cape Town said there were several injuries in the clashes in busy Adderley Street.

Scores of pedestrians fled for cover in shopping arcades as police opened with volleys of tear gas and then charged into crowds of coloreds demonstrating against the government's apartheid segregation policies. By government definition any persons of mixed race officially are designated "colored."

Elderly women were knocked to the ground and police said several whites had been "molested" by the demonstrators.

One white secretary said she was shoved into a gutter when a group of rioters rushed a newsman taking pictures. "In the rush — with the whole group swarming towards me — I was stamped into the gutter," she said.

Businesses quickly closed their shutters and traffic came to a halt with some drivers leaving their cars to seek shelter. Several groups of rioters re-formed after one police charge and ran to the top end of the street to the South African Parliament building with police in pursuit.

Shoes, scarves and shattered spectacles littered the sidewalks after the clashes with police.

Swine flu lag angers Ford

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Saying "it damn well better run right," President Ford yesterday summoned HEW Secretary David Mathews and other health officials to discuss a lag in swine flu vaccine production.

Earlier today, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said that even though there are more than 100 million doses of the vaccine on hand, there will not be enough to start immunization next month in the scope that had been planned.

The problem, a spokesman said, is that the vaccine has not been converted from bulk form to the small vials of individual shots that will be used.

Mathews, in a letter to the manufacturers of the vaccine Wednesday, said the gap had left the program so far behind that the government will get only one fourth of the doses it had expected by Oct. 1. Mathews urged the manufacturers to step up production.

Ford's press secretary, Ron Nessen, told reporters the President "wants to make sure that the program is run efficiently" and has called Mathews and Dr. Theodore Cooper, head of the flu program, to a meeting later today.

Nessen quoted Ford as saying "it damn well better run right."

The conversion from bulk to individual dose was delayed by the manufacturers until after Congress passed legislation to untangle the insurance questions that arose over the program-planned as the largest mass immunizatiom in the nation's history. Congress resolved the issue on Aug. 11 but by then the conversion was already far behind, according to the manufacturers.

HEW said the industry told it there will be 20.4 million individually packaged doses available by Oct. 1. The program is supposed to reach 143 million Americans.

School prayer law holds up in court

BOSTON [UPI] — A Massachusetts law permitting a moment of silent prayer or meditation at the beginning of the day for public school students was upheld yesterday by a U.S. District Court panel of judges.

The three judge panel rejected a complaint filed by the Massachusetts chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union challenging the constitutionality of the law.

The complaint, on behalf of 12 students and their parents from the Boston suburb of Framingham, was filed against the superintendent of schools and school committees.

The plaintiff claimed the school department was forcing children to pray. The opinion was handed down just several days before schools across the state are scheduled to open next week.

"The statute and the guidelines do not advance or inhibit religion, or coerce any student into participating in any activity which infringes his liberty of conscience or interferes with the free exercise of his religion," the judges wrote after deliberating three months.

"The program instituted in the Framingham schools follows the statute precisely.... The only command to the students is the requirement that they be silent for one minute for the purpose of meditation or prayer... there is no command that they meditate or pray," the judges said.

The judges noted in 1973 the state legislature amended the statute to say either meditation or prayer.

U. Vermont robbery nets cash, checks

BURLINGTON, Vt. [UPI] — An armed robbery of $54,000 in cash and checks from the University of Vermont campus book store was being investigated by police yesterday.

The robbery by two, armed masked men took place Wednesday night, Chittenden County State's Attorney Francis Murray said.

Charter flight service expanded

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Beginning Oct. 7, individuals will be able to obtain low-cost charter flights without belonging to an organized tour group, the Civil Aeronautics Board announced yesterday.

A board spokesman said the new Advance Booking Charter Rules "were designed to provide the lowest air transportation available" and "should result in a significant reduction in fares" for the average American air traveler.

The new rules will be in effect for a five-year experimental period, starting Oct. 7. Customers can purchase the tickets from an indpendent charter broker at least 30 days in advance of the flight, or 45 days ahead in nine European countries.

Travelers will be charged only for transportation, not hotel accommodations and car rental as in most charter package deals.

The CAB said the ruling applies only to European and domestic flights.

Except in the European countries, there will be no minimum length of stay. In other words, the customer can use the service for as long or as short a period as desired.

Savings to travelers will be "considerable," the spokesman said, but exact figures have not been worked out.

The new rules also will allow an individual who changes plans to back out of the commitment and get a refund if the airline can find a substitute customer.

Individual charter fares will be offered when an airline can line up a certain number of customers — roughly 40 for large planes and 20 for small ones.

The CAB said the European countries which have the 45-day fixed time period, a minimum "stay" period of 7 days and slight alterations in the substitute rule are the United Kingdom, Switzerland, Belgium, West Germany, France, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands and Finland.

A spokesman for Pan American Airways said the airline welcomes the new rules, but is disappointed that the CAB did not remove limits on the number of charter flights that can be operated by U.S.-based international carriers. Pan Am has no domestic routes and serves only 15 cities in the United States.

At the time the proposal was made, Pan Am said such rules would "aid in meeting the ever-growing demand for low-cost travel to which the American people are entitled."

Fire in Holyoke

HOLYOKE, Mass. [UPI] — Two women were killed early Thursday and six other persons injured in a multiple-alarm fire at a four-story brick apartment building housing about 30 persons.

Minutes before the alarm was sounded at 1:18 a.m., many fire units had been summoned to the other side of the city on what turned out to be a false alarm.

The dead were identified as Elizabeth Wailgum and Mrs. Robert McLain.

Two of the injured persons were in critical condition Thursday at Holyoke Hospital. The other four were listed in good condition.

The blaze was at 526 South Summer St.

Is it 'Mr. Ford' or 'President'?

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — How should Jimmy Carter address President Ford in their TV debates? Well, says Carter, whatever President Ford or Mr. Ford or the President wants, President Ford or Mr. Ford or the President will get.

"I don't want to indicate in the heat of the debate any disrespect for the office of the president or any disrespect for the President himself," Carter told reporters.

"I think he's a good man and I don't know whether to call him Mr. President, or President Ford, or Mr. Ford.

"I know that when President Washington and President Jefferson were in office they preferred to be called Mr. Washington and Mr. Jefferson. But I'll see what President Ford desires to be called and I'll accommodate his wishes."

Hill, Murakami tie for lead with 67's in World Series

AKRON, Ohio [UPI] — Dave Hill and Takashi Murakami were suprised to find themselves sharing the first round lead Thursday in the World Series of golf — but for Jack Nicklaus, only a stroke behind, it was just another day of frustration.

Hill, the game's newest millionaire, and Murakami, a Japanese player with a millionaire's touch around the Greens, shot a three under par 67 to head an exclusive field of 20 world-class players shooting for a record $100,000 first prize.

Nicklaus was the only one of the 20 to avoid a bogey but he was able to produce only two birdies in a round of 68.

"I wasn't too happy with my swing, but it was a good round," said Nicklaus, who suffered a painful series of near-misses on the greens, leaving several birdie putts just a turn or two short of the hole. If they all had dropped, it would have been an excellent round.

"The Greens are good — but they seemed a little slow for Firestone," Nicklaus said.

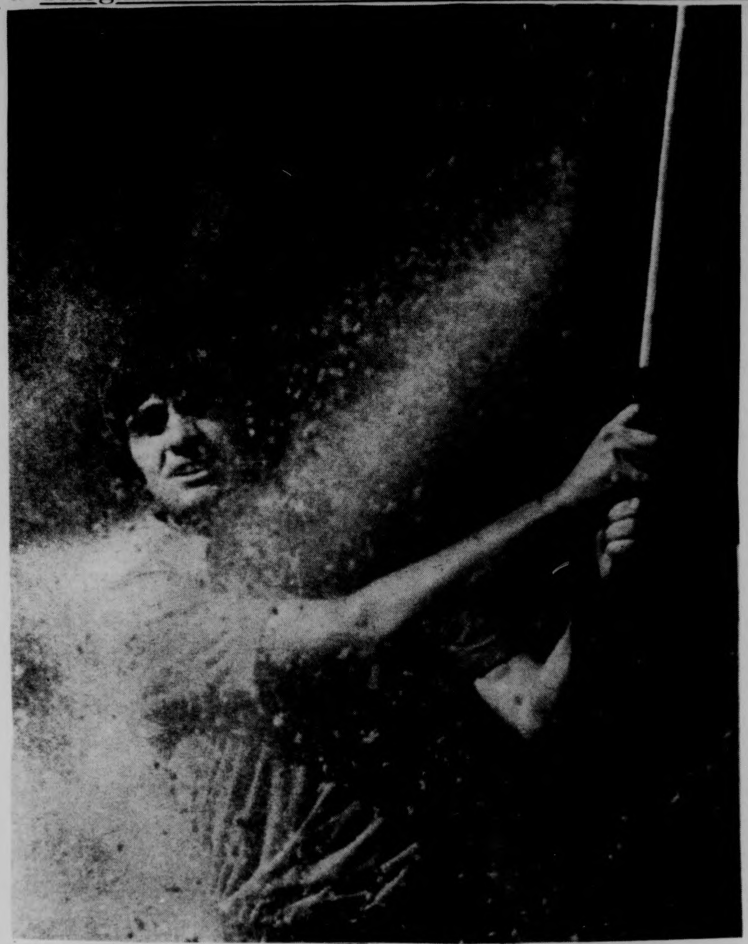
That's the way is has been all year for Nicklaus, the game's greatest player. He heads into the final weeks with only one victory and a fifth place standing on the tour's money list, and both of those showings, if he doesn't improve on them, represent record low points for his unparalleled career.

Ray Floyd, the Masters Champion, was the only other player under par, shooting 69. Tom Watson, who holed a six-iron for an eagle at the 465-yard six, got home in two on the famed 16th hole, shortened to 575-yards to encourage a gambling approach over the water and made birdie and was at 70 with J.C. Snead, David Graham and Buddy Allin.

In nearly 6,000 previous tournament rounds on Firestone's south course, only two players reached the 16th green in two shots when it was played at 62X-yards.

Jerry Pate, the 22-year old U.S. Open Champion, was at 71, one over, with Lee Trevino, who made five par putts of eight feet or longer, Hale Irwin and Hubert Green.

Dave Stockton, the PGA champion, had 73, Johnny Miller suffered a four-stroke penalty for too many clubs because his son's 28-inch putter somehow turned up in his bag, and shot 76.



Dave Hill explodes out of a sand trap on the 17th hole during 1st round action at Firestone CC. Hill is tied for the lead with Takashi Mruakami of Japan.

Brother's dream comes true; twins reunited after 11 years

NEW YORK [UPI] — It was a dream Tom Van Arsdale had all but given up hope on becoming a reality. After 11 years in the National Basketball Association, Tom Van Arsdale was beginning to feel he was never meant to play on the same pro team as his identical twin brother, Dick.

Then, one morning last month, the phone rang in Tom Van Arsdale's home. The voice on the other end was familiar. It was Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Phoenix Suns. He informed Tom he had worked out a trade with Buffalo, a trade that was going to reunite the 33-year-old Van Arsdale brothers.

"I think I had to pinch myself a little bit when I heard of the trade," Tom recalled. "I've kind of been dropping hints I'd like to play in Phoenix the last four years. It came close to being a reality on several occasions but it never did happen.

"It's about time we got back together again. Initially, we were glad to be apart. We felt we wanted to gain our own identities. Now, it's just the other way."

In their quest for separate identities after graduating from Indiana University as second team All-Americas in 1965, Tom's career almost ended before it began.

Separated from his younger brother Dick (by 15 minutes) for the first time in his life, Tom walked out of the Detroit Pistons training camp, lonely and depessed and saying he wanted to go to law school.

But after sitting down and discussing the situation with Dick, Tom agreed to continue. Four years and one trade later, he was an all-star with the Cincinnati Royals, averaging 20 points a game.

Dick, meanwhile, broke into the New York Knicks starting lineup as a rookie, and after moving on to Phoenix in the expansion draft three years later, also developed into an all star

Built along the same lines physically at 6-foot-5 with powerful shoulders, the blond, blue-eyed brothers both proved versatile performers, swinging between the small forward and tall guard positions. Unfortunately, they also proved to be perfect matchups when playing against each other.

"Most of the coaches we had were understanding about matching us up against each other," says Tom. "One coach I had at Cincinnati and Kansas City, Bob Cousy, had the philosophy that I should guard Dick because I knew his moves better than anyone else."

"There'll be no problems with us," Tom promises. "I've never been to the playoffs and I'm looking forward to doing it this year. My family's permanent residence has been Phoenix the last five years and, above all, I'm looking forward to playing with Dick once again. It's about time."

An AFC overview

Will Steelers defend title?

NEW YORK [UPI] — Can the Pittsburgh Steelers win an unprecedented third consecutive super bowl?

Don't ask Coach Chuck Noll. He's worried about making the playoffs.

What has him worried is the abundance of power in the American Conference, mainly in the central division, where Pittsburgh is defending champion.

Two clubs in the AFC Central, Houston and Cincinnati, could quite easily keep the Steelers from the playoffs, and the likes of Oakland in the West and Miami and Baltimore in the East also bar the road to the league title.

"We have to win our division first," says Noll. "Just going off last year's record, there was only one game lost out of the division. Houston lost four games, two of us and two to Cincinnati. Cincinnati lost three, two to us and one out of the division, which, I think, makes them tough."

Despite Noll's fears, the AFC title race again should be a battle between Pittsburgh and Oakland, gradually becoming the bitterest of rivals, with Cincinnati a darkhouse title hope.

Steeler quarterback, Terry Bradshaw comes off his finest pro season. In Franco Harris, he has the second leading rusher in the NFL behind one of the top offensive lines, led by tackle Jon Kolb.

Defensively, the Steelers return intact the unit which terrorized the league in 1975. Joe Greene, the all-pro tackle who missed much of last season with an arm injury, seems 100 per cent again and the linebacking unit of Jack Ham, Jack Lambert and Andy Russell is among the best ever to play the game.

Oakland, the perennial runner-up in the AFC, has the easiest schedule in the NFL and should cruise to the western title. It's in the title game where the Raiders seem to struggle, losing the last three.

Oakland's running game will be hurt by a preseason injury to fullback Marv Hubbard but Mark Van Eeghen has been impressive as a reserve. Rookie Fred Steinfort of Boston College finally sent 49-year-old kicker George Blanda into retirement.

The strongest point if the explosive passing attack, directed by Ken Stabler and featuring receivers Fred Biletnikoff, Cliff Branch, Mike Siani, Dave Casper and Ted Kwalick.

Cincinnati, a powerful offensive team, moved to improve its defense with the addition of end Coy Bacon. Bill Johnson, a longtime NFL assistant, takes over for retired Coach Paul Brown and finds himself with a dangerous pair of receivers to work with Ken Anderson's, the NFL's leading passer. Rookie Billy Brooks of Oklahoma will team with Isaac Curtis to drive defensive backs batty.

Houston, 10-4 last year but out of the playoffs, had its problems during the preseason but the Oilers should be ready to battle Pittsburgh and Cincinnati for the Central Title.

Dan Pastorini had his best season at quarterback in 1975 and has solid receivers in Ken Burrough and Billy Johnson. Curley Culp came from Kansas City early last season and anchored the Oiler's 3-4 defense at middle guard.

Cleveland has Paul Warfield back at wide receiver after a long absence, running back Greg Pruitt and little else to match the Central's big three.

In the Eastern race, it looks as if Baltimore and Miami, which tied for first at 10-4 last season, will be the teams to beat again.

The Colts, who won the Eastern title on the basis of head-to-head competition, own one of the NFL's finest young quarterbacks, Bert Jones, but have had problems keeping his receivers healthy. Lydell Mitchell ranked third in the NFL in rushing last year and is an excellent receiver as well as the young defensive front of John Dutton, Joe Ehrmann, Mike Barnes and Fred Cook melded to form one of the AFC's best units last year.

Miami, almost completely remolded from its Super Bowl Club three years ago, still is dangerous, with Bob Griese leading the way at quarterback. Miami is young on offense, featuring wide receivers Nat Moore and Fred Solomon, who has been hurt, and a talented corps of running backs headed by Benny Malone.

Linebacking has been a problem on defense and injuries forced Coach Don Shula to ask 36-year-old Nick Buoniconti to end a brief retirement.

The rest of the AFC East is a tossup, with Buffalo, minus star running back O.J. Simpson; New England minus quarterback Jim Plunkett, and the New York Jets, minus John Riggins, their first 1,000-yard rusher, struggling.

Simpson asked to be traded to a west coast club and is retired pending a trade. Coach Lou Saban has revamped Buffalo's defense and the loss of receivers J. D. Hill by trade and Ahmad Rashad by option will hurt the offense.

Patriots Coach Chuck Fairbanks sent Plunkett to San Francisco and will go with young Steve Grogan. Running back Sam Cunningham has been impressive in preseason but the receiving has been hurt with injuries to Randy Vataha and Steve Burks.

The Jets, under new Coach Lou Holtz, will have one of the youngest clubs in the NFL, with only three players, one of them quarterback Joe Namath, over 30. Holtz will go with rookies in some key positions, mostly on defense, where linebackers Greg Buttle of Penn State and Bob Martin of Nebraska have been impressive.

Wade advances in US Open play

FOREST HILLS [UPI] — Virginia Wade's fellow Britons had to endure six months without rain this summer as Western Europe suffered its worst drought in memory but there was no lack of rain at the West Side Tennis Club Thursday although Wade and Julie Anthony managed to complete their matches at the U.S. open between the showers.

Wade, the fourth seed wwo spent the summer in New York while playing for the WTT Champion New York sets, defeated Wendy Turnball of Austalia, 6-1, 6-2, in a brisk 45-minutes, while Anthony, a part-time (tennis) television commentator, upset 16th seeded Betty Stove of the Netherlands, 6-4, 6-3.

None of the other men's and women's first round matches scheduled on the second day of the 12-day, $416,000 tournament, was completed, but the forecast was for clearing skies in late evening which gave rise to the possiblity that the night (8 p.m. EDT) matches, featuring Wimbledon and WCT Champion Bjorn Borg and Guiliermo Vilas would take place.

Borg, who also won the U.S. pro title Monday for the third straight year, was scheduled to meet Cliff Letcher of Australia in the first match, while Vilas was due to face Ross Case, another of the Australian contingent.

The 31-year-old Wade, winner of the first open in '68 and nearly $100,000 this season, lost her service in the opening game when she had difficulty judging the pace of the wet, gray, har-tru surface, but then she reeled off six straight games to take control of the match.

At one stage, between the sixth game of the first set and the fourth of the second, Wade reeled off 20 straight points, serving or breaking at love in four straight games.

Turnball made things more difficult for herself by serving seven doublefaults during the match. She held service only three times.

Of her chances of winning the title for the second time, Wade said, "I absolutely don't know. I don't know how I'll shape up. It's a tough draw."

Wade, like the rest of the women, picked Chris Evert to retain the title she won last year for the first time.

Of Evert, the player and the person, Wade said, "Chris is still an exceptionally good player on clay — she is undefeated in her last 95 matches on the surface — but she's become so much more human in the last year.

"Chris has become so much warmer that she's lost the psychological advantage she used to have, that killer edge she always had. She's a little older, a little wiser. I think she's fantastic now. Before, she was so disciplined, being a star at such a young age.

"But Chris is still best on clay."

Fergy to rest now

BOSTON — [AP] — Ferguson Jenkins, the veteran righthander the Boston Red Sox hoped would bring them a flock of victories this season, was reported in satisfactory condition Thursday after surgery on his right leg.

Jenkins suffered a torn right achilles tendon Wednesday while making putout at first base in the fifth inning of game against the Texas Rangers.

That means the rangy hurler is out for the rest of the American League baseball season after compiling a 12-11 record, well under his career average.

The 32-year-old Jenkins who has won 203 games in his career underwent the operation at Hahnemann Hospital in Boston.

The Red Sox said the team had no immediate report on the success of the surgery.

The 6-foot-5 pitcher, new to the Red Sox this year after acquisition from the Texas Rangers, had held his old teammates scoreless while Boston built up a three-run edge when the trouble cropped up in the fifth.

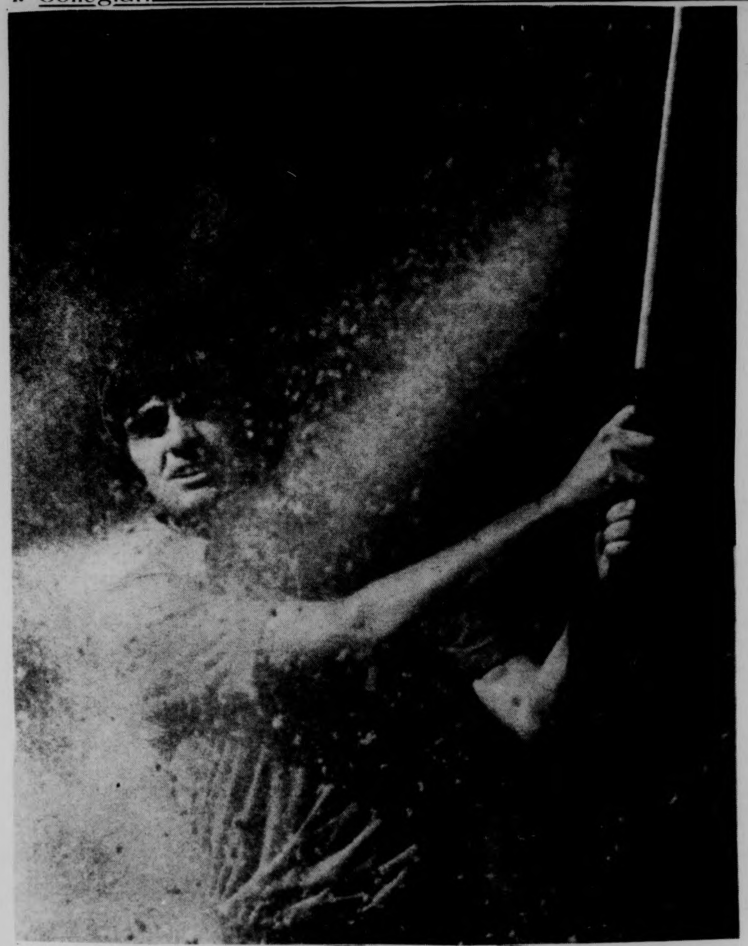
Lenny Randle opened the inning with a grounder right of the pitcher's mound. First baseman Cecil Cooper fielded the ball and flipped to Jenkins who had sprinted for the base.

Jenkins won the foot race, was pushed slightly from the base by Randle and then collapsed.

Randle reportedly believed he was responsible for the injury, but Boston manager Don Zimmer quoted Jenkins saying the tendon had snapped before he got to the base.

Jenkins had strained his right achilles tendon last July and missed two scheduled pitching starts.

Randle said he had tried to push Jenkins aside easily as they met at the bag. He said, "We were very close friends in Texas and I'm really sorry it had to happen.



Dave Hill explodes out of a sand trap on the 17th hole during 1st round action at Firestone CC. Hill is tied for the lead with Takashi Mruakami of Japan.

Hill, Murakami tie for lead with 67's in World Series

AKRON, Ohio [UPI] – Dave Hill and Takashi Murakami were suprised to find themselves sharing the first round lead Thursday in the World Series of golf — but for Jack Nicklaus, only a stroke behind, it was just another day of frustration.

Hill, the game's newest millionaire, and Murakami, a Japanese player with a millionaire's touch around the Greens, shot a three under par 67 to head an exclusive field of 20 world-class players shooting for a record $100,000 first prize.

Nicklaus was the only one of the 20 to avoid a bogey but he was able to produce only two birdies in a round of 68.

"I wasn't too happy with my swing, but it was a good round," said Nicklaus, who suffered a painful series of near-misses on the greens, leaving several birdie putts just a turn or two short of the hole. If they all had dropped, it would have been an excellent round.

"The Greens are good — but they seemed a little slow for Firestone," Nicklaus said.

That's the way is has been all year for Nicklaus, the game's greatest player. He heads into the final weeks with only one victory and a fifth place standing on the tour's money list, and both of those showings, if he doesn't improve on them, represent record low points for his unparalleled career.

Ray Floyd, the Masters Champion, was the only other player under par, shooting 69. Tom Watson, who holed a six-iron for an eagle at the 465-yard six, got home in two on the famed 16th hole, shortened to 575-yards to encourage a gambling approach over the water and made birdie and was at 70 with J.C. Snead, David Graham and Buddy Allin.

In nearly 6,000 previous tournament rounds on Firestone's south course, only two players reached the 16th green in two shots when it was played at 62X-yards.

Jerry Pate, the 22-year old U.S. Open Champion, was at 71, one over, with Lee Trevino, who made five par putts of eight feet or longer, Hale Irwin and Hubert Green.

Dave Stockton, the PGA champion, had 73, Johnny Miller suffered a four-stroke penalty for too many clubs because his son's 28-inch putter somehow turned up in his bag, and shot 76.

Brother's dream comes true; twins reunited after 11 years

NEW YORK [UPI] – It was a dream Tom Van Arsdale had all but given up hope on becoming a reality. After 11 years in the National Basketball Association, Tom Van Arsdale was beginning to feel he was never meant to play on the same pro team as his identical twin brother, Dick.

Then, one morning last month, the phone rang in Tom Van Arsdale's home. The voice on the other end was familiar. It was Jerry Colangelo, general manager of the Phoenix Suns. He informed Tom he had worked out a trade with Buffalo, a trade that was going to reunite the 33-year-old Van Arsdale brothers.

"I think I had to pinch myself a little bit when I heard of the trade," Tom recalled. "I've kind of been dropping hints I'd like to play in Phoenix the last four years. It came close to being a reality on several occasions but it never did happen.

"It's about time we got back together again. Initially, we were glad to be apart. We felt we wanted to gain our own identities. Now, it's just the other way."

In their quest for separate identities after graduating from Indiana University as second team All-Americas in 1965, Tom's career almost ended before it began.

Separated from his younger brother Dick (by 15 minutes) for the first time in his life, Tom walked out of the Detroit Pistons training camp, lonely and depessed and saying he wanted to go to law school.

But after sitting down and discussing the situation with Dick, Tom agreed to continue. Four years and one trade later, he was an all-star with the Cincinnati Royals, averaging 20 points a game.

Dick, meanwhile, broke into the New York Knicks starting lineup as a rookie, and after moving on to Phoenix in the expansion draft three years later, also developed into an all star

Built along the same lines physically at 6-foot-5 with powerful shoulders, the blond, blue-eyed brothers both proved versatile performers, swinging between the small forward and tall guard positions. Unfortunately, they also proved to be perfect matchups when playing against each other.

"Most of the coaches we had were understanding about matching us up against each other," says Tom. "One coach I had at Cincinnati and Kansas City, Bob Cousy, had the philosophy that I should guard Dick because I knew his moves better than anyone else."

"There'll be no problems with us," Tom promises. "I've never been to the playoffs and I'm looking forward to doing it this year. My family's permanent residence has been Phoenix the last five years and, above all, I'm looking forward to playing with Dick once again. It's about time."

An AFC overview

Will Steelers defend title?

NEW YORK [UPI] – Can the Pittsburgh Steelers win an unprecedented third consecutive super bowl?

Don't ask Coach Chuck Noll. He's worried about making the playoffs.

What has him worried is the abundance of power in the American Conference, mainly in the central division, where Pittsburgh is defending champion.

Two clubs in the AFC Central, Houston and Cincinnati, could quite easily keep the Steelers from the playoffs, and the likes of Oakland in the West and Miami and Baltimore in the East also bar the road to the league title.

"We have to win our division first," says Noll. "Just going off last year's record, there was only one game lost out of the division. Houston lost four games, two of us and two to Cincinnati. Cincinnati lost three, two to us and one out of the division, which, I think, makes them tough."

Despite Noll's fears, the AFC title race again should be a battle between Pittsburgh and Oakland, gradually becoming the bitterest of rivals, with Cincinnati a darkhouse title hope.

Steeler quarterback, Terry Bradshaw comes off his finest pro season. In Franco Harris, he has the second leading rusher in the NFL behind one of the top offensive lines, led by tackle Jon Kolb.

Defensively, the Steelers return intact the unit which terrorized the league in 1975. Joe Greene, the all-pro tackle who missed much of last season with an arm injury, seems 100 per cent again and the linebacking unit of Jack Ham, Jack Lambert and Andy Russell is among the best ever to play the game.

Oakland, the perennial runner-up in the AFC, has the easiest schedule in the NFL and should cruise to the western title. It's in the title game where the Raiders seem to struggle, losing the last three.

Oakland's running game will be hurt by a preseason injury to fullback Marv Hubbard but Mark Van Eeghen has been impressive as a reserve. Rookie Fred Steinfort of Boston College finally sent 49-year-old kicker George Blanda into retirement.

The strongest point if the explosive passing attack, directed by Ken Stabler and featuring receivers Fred Biletnikoff, Cliff Branch, Mike Siani, Dave Casper and Ted Kwalick.

Cincinnati, a powerful offensive team, moved to improve its defense with the addition of end Coy Bacon. Bill Johnson, a longtime NFL assistant, takes over for retired Coach Paul Brown and finds himself with a dangerous pair of receivers to work with Ken Anderson's, the NFL's leading passer. Rookie Billy Brooks of Oklahoma will team with Isaac Curtis to drive defensive backs batty.

Houston, 10-4 last year but out of the playoffs, had its problems during the preseason but the Oilers should be ready to battle Pittsburgh and Cincinnati for the Central Title.

Dan Pastorini had his best season at quarterback in 1975 and has solid receivers in Ken Burrough and Billy Johnson. Curley Culp came from Kansas City early last season and anchored the Oiler's 3-4 defense at middle guard.

Cleveland has Paul Warfield back at wide receiver after a long absence, running back Greg Pruitt and little else to match the Central's big three.

In the Eastern race, it looks as if Baltimore and Miami, which tied for first at 10-4 last season, will be the teams to beat again.

The Colts, who won the Eastern title on the basis of head-to-head competition, own one of the NFL's finest young quarterbacks, Bert Jones, but have had problems keeping his receivers healthy. Lydell Mitchell ranked third in the NFL in rushing last year and is an excellent receiver as well as the young defensive front of John Dutton, Joe Ehrmann, Mike Barnes and Fred Cook melded to form one of the AFC's best units last year.

Miami, almost completely remolded from its Super Bowl Club three years ago, still is dangerous, with Bob Griese leading the way at quarterback. Miami is young on offense, featuring wide receivers Nat Moore and Fred Solomon, who has been hurt, and a talented corps of running backs headed by Benny Malone.

Linebacking has been a problem on defense and injuries forced Coach Don Shula to ask 36-year-old Nick Buoniconti to end a brief retirement.

The rest of the AFC East is a tossup, with Buffalo, minus star running back O.J. Simpson; New England minus quarterback Jim Plunkett, and the New York Jets, minus John Riggins, their first 1,000-yard rusher, struggling.

Simpson asked to be traded to a west coast club and is retired pending a trade. Coach Lou Saban has revamped Buffalo's defense and the loss of receivers J. D. Hill by trade and Ahmad Rashad by option will hurt the offense.

Patriots Coach Chuck Fairbanks sent Plunkett to San Francisco and will go with young Steve Grogan. Running back Sam Cunningham has been impressive in preseason but the receiving has been hurt with injuries to Randy Vataha and Steve Burks.

The Jets, under new Coach Lou Holtz, will have one of the youngest clubs in the NFL, with only three players, one of them quarterback Joe Namath, over 30. Holtz will go with rookies in some key positions, mostly on defense, where linebackers Greg Buttle of Penn State and Bob Martin of Nebraska have been impressive.

University of Massachusetts can teach you something you may never have thought you could learn.

The subject is leadership. The course is Army ROTC. The entire curriculum is exciting, challenging and flexible. So flexible that, if qualified, you can enter at any time during your first two years on campus.

Through practical experience, you will learn how to lead. The acquired discipline of mind and spirit and the ability to perform under pressure are important. The people who demonstrate these qualities are the people we want to become Army officers.

Upon graduation as a commissioned Army officer, you will not only have to manage people, but money and materials as well. To make more important planning decisions than most young executives.

Wade advances in US Open play

FOREST HILLS [UPI] – Virginia Wade's fellow Britons had to endure six months without rain this summer as Western Europe suffered its worst drought in memory but there was no lack of rain at the West Side Tennis Club Thursday although Wade and Julie Anthony managed to complete their matches at the U.S. open between the showers.

Wade, the fourth seed wwo spent the summer in New York while playing for the WTT Champion New York sets, defeated Wendy Turnball of Austalia, 6-1, 6-2, in a brisk 45-minutes, while Anthony, a part-time (tennis) television commentator, upset 16th seeded Betty Stove of the Netherlands, 6-4, 6-3.

None of the other men's and women's first round matches scheduled on the second day of the 12-day, $416,000 tournament, was completed, but the forecast was for clearing skies in late evening which gave rise to the possiblity that the night (8 p.m. EDT) matches, featuring Wimbledon and WCT Champion Bjorn Borg and Guiliermo Vilas would take place.

Borg, who also won the U.S. pro title Monday for the third straight year, was scheduled to meet Cliff Letcher of Australia in the first match, while Vilas was due to face Ross Case, another of the Australian contingent.

The 31-year-old Wade, winner of the first open in '68 and nearly $100,000 this season, lost her service in the opening game when she had difficulty judging the pace of the wet, gray, har-tru surface, but then she reeled off six straight games to take control of the match.

At one stage, between the sixth game of the first set and the fourth of the second, Wade reeled off 20 straight points, serving or breaking at love in four straight games.

Turnball made things more difficult for herself by serving seven doublefaults during the match. She held service only three times.

Of her chances of winning the title for the second time, Wade said, "I absolutely don't know. I don't know how I'll shape up. It's a tough draw."

Wade, like the rest of the women, picked Chris Evert to retain the title she won last year for the first time.

Of Evert, the player and the person, Wade said, "Chris is still an exceptionally good player on clay – she is undefeated in her last 95 matches on the surface – but she's become so much more human in the last year.

"Chris has become so much warmer that she's lost the psychological advantage she used to have, that killer edge she always had. She's a little older, a little wiser. I think she's fantastic now. Before, she was so disciplined, being a star at such a young age.

"But Chris is still best on clay."

Fergy to rest now

BOSTON – [AP] – Ferguson Jenkins, the veteran righthander the Boston Red Sox hoped would bring them a flock of victories this season, was reported in satisfactory condition Thursday after surgery on his right leg.

Jenkins suffered a torn right achilles tendon Wednesday while making putout at first base in the fifth inning of game against the Texas Rangers.

That means the rangy hurler is out for the rest of the American League baseball season after compiling a 12-11 record, well under his career average.

The 32-year-old Jenkins who has won 203 games in his career underwent the operation at Hahnemann Hospital in Boston.

The Red Sox said the team had no immediate report on the success of the surgery.

The 6-foot-5 pitcher, new to the Red Sox this year after acquisition from the Texas Rangers, had held his old teammates scoreless while Boston built up a three-run edge when the trouble cropped up in the fifth.

Lenny Randle opened the inning with a grounder right of the pitcher's mound. First baseman Cecil Cooper fielded the ball and flipped to Jenkins who had sprinted for the base.

Jenkins won the foot race, was pushed slightly from the base by Randle and then collapsed.

Randle reportedly believed he was responsible for the injury, but Boston manager Don Zimmer quoted Jenkins saying the tendon had snapped before he got to the base.

Jenkins had strained his right achilles tendon last July and missed two scheduled pitching starts.

Randle said he had tried to push Jenkins aside easily as they met at the bag. He said, "We were very close friends in Texas and I'm really sorry it had to happen.

UMass quarterback, Brian McNally will put his arm to the test this Saturday, when the Minutemen scrimmage Dartmouth in Hanover, N.H.

New Orleans Jazz purchases Wicks

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — The New Orleans Jazz Thursday obtained NBA all-star forward Sidney Wicks from the Portland Trail Blazers in a straight cash deal.

Wicks was the second major player obtained by New Orleans in three weeks. Last month the Jazz signed all-star forward Gail Goodrich from the Los Angeles Lakers.

Wicks became expendable when Portland obtained Moses Malone in the American Basketball Association dispersal draft.

"We have made another effort to significantly upgrade our ball club," said Barry Mendelson, Jazz executive vice president. "Sidney is one of the quickest big men in the NBA and will immediately make us a more physical team on the backboards. Our record last season and the acquisition of players such as Wicks and Goodrich should indicate to the people of New Orleans we are not content to sit still."

Wicks, 6-foot-9 and 225 pounds, was a first-round draft choice of the Blazers five years ago. He averaged 22.3 points and 10.3 rebounds for Portland and was selected to the NBA all-star team the last four years.

"(Assistant coach) Elgin (Baylor) and I have evaluated him positively as a player and look forward to working with him at training camp," said Jazz coach Bill Van Breda Kolff. "We will have more talent in training camp than ever before. Now it will be a matter of building a team that will work well together."

Miami is shaky at linebacker spot

MIAMI [UPI] — True, the linebacking situation is shaky at best, but don't let the long faces around the Miami Dolphins' training camp fool you, they've got plenty of everything else, as usual.

In fact, in the heat of late July and early August, Coach Don Shula was committing such uncoachly acts as admitting that this might be his "best" training camp ever.

But then, the well publicized lightning hit the linebacker corps.

On Aug. 14, in a preseason game against the Philadelphia Eagles, rookie Kim Bokamper fell with a shattered knee. Seven days later in Tampa, Earnie Rhone went down with the same ailment. Both are out for the season.

Meanwhile, it was becoming apparent that veteran linebacker Mike Kolen, said to be the Dolphins' most vicious hitter, was not responding to last December's knee surgery as well as had been hoped.

"At first, we really felt pretty good about the squad's attitude and performance. And we were willing games," Shula said. "But then we were hit hard in one position, losing two potential No. 1 linebackers."

Shula moved quickly, putting in an emergency call to former pro bowl linebacker Nick Buoniconti, who retired last month. Buoniconti is back with the team, but Shula admits "there's no guarantee he's in good enough shape to help us at all."

Buoniconti will probably be used as the second middle linebacker alongside Steve Towle, Miami's leading tackler as a rookie last year, in the Dolphins' "53" defense, a four-linebacker, three-down-lineman setup.

On the outside will be veteran Bob Matheson and Arizona State rookie Larry Gordon.

An NFC overview

Over the hill gang returns

NEW YORK [UPI] — What draft choices and trades have failed to accomplish, the Washington Redskins hope the almighty dollar can achieve.

The Redskins, who finished out of the playoffs last season for the first time in five years, launched a one-team salvo at the free agent market during the offseason and landed some of the biggest names available — running backs John Riggins and Calvin Hill and tight end Jean Fugett.

Those moves make the Redskins a probable favorite in the NFC East. The Detroit Lions and Minnesota Vikings head the central division and the Los Angeles Rams dominate the west.

Riggins and Hill have both rushed for more than 1,000 yards in an NFL season during the past three years, although former Cowboy Hill spent last year in the World Football League. Riggins signed for $1.5 million over five years while Hill came for considerably less, a reported $100,000 per year.

Riggins gained 1,005 yards for the New York Jets last winter but left the Big Apple to escape Joe Namath's shadow. Hill registered back-to-back 1,000 yard seasons in 1972-73 and gained 844 yards for the Cowboys in 1974 before sitting out most of the aborted WFL season in 1975 with a knee injury.

Fugett started for NFC champion Dallas last year but opted for Washington this season so he could be nearer his native Baltimore.

"Potentially, we have the best overall offense since I've been here," said Skins quarterback Bill Kilmer, who threw a career high 23 touchdown passes last season. "With all the people we've got, it looks like anybody can step in to do the job — Calvin Hill, John Riggins, Larry Brown — and Mike Thomas is going to be better than ever.

George Allen

"Last year we threw the ball too much. But this year we can get back to the running game. When we won in 1971, 72 and 73, what got us there was a strong running attack. You need that running game to keep defenses honest."

The Redskins bolstered their defense during the preseason with the acquisition of safety Jake Scott from Miami and end John Matuszak from Kansas City. But the defense as a whole is an elderly group, as is the offensive line.

Whether the new acquisitions will be able to offset that age factor, only time — and the rugged Eastern Division — will tell.

The Dallas Cowboys improved themselves with the signing of free agent running backs Ron Johnson and Duane Thomas plus WFL refugee Danny White, who will back up quarterback Roger Staubach and handle the punting chores.

The Cowboys had 13 rookies on last year's team that went to the super bowl and picked up at least two more blue chippers, running back Jim Jensen of Iowa and defensive back Aaron Kyle of Wyoming, in the most recent draft.

The defense was two-deep everywhere last season and that depth will be tested this year with the absence of linebacker Dave Edwards, who retired, and safety Cliff Harris, who banged up his knee during the preseason and may miss the entire year.

Defending East champion St. Louis bolstered its only weakness of last year, the defense, with the acquisition of linemen Walt Patulski, Marvin Upshaw and John Zook, linebacker Rodrigo Barnes and safety Mike Sensibaugh while the New York Giants suddenly have a running attack with the signing of free agent Larry Csonka, the former Miami star.

The Philadelphia Eagles got a new coach, Dick Vermeil, but failed to get any new players in their bid to improve on the 4-10 season of last year.

This is probably the season the Detroit Lions end seven years of frustration by finally taking first place in the Central Division away from the Minnesota Vikings.

Colleges kickoff season

The college football season opens this weekend with a handfull of games scattered across the country and the inaugural weekend will be highlighted by the debut of three new major head coaches and the appearance of one of the leading candidates for the Heisman Trophy.

The season officially gets underway Friday night at Dayton, Ohio, with the Flyers entertaining Eastern Kentucky and there are 14 more major games on tap for Saturday. Only one of the top 20 ranked clubs in the preseason ratings is scheduled to begin play Saturday, and that's 20th-ranked Kansas, which will go against Oregon State at Corvallis, Ore.

Oregon State is one of the clubs which will be sporting a new head coach. He's Craig Fertig, a former state quarterback at Southern California, who is replacing Dee Andros. Fertig takes over a team that was 1-10 a year ago but a very successful recruiting season has made Beavers' fans optimistic that the school can once again become competitive in the Pacific Eight Conference.

Other head coaches who will be making their debuts Saturday are Robert "Bo" Rein at North Carolina State and Bruce Snyder at Utah State. Rein takes over from Lou Holtz, who left to take the head coaching job with the New York Jets, and Snyder replaces Phil Krueger, who rejoined ex-southern Cal. Coach John McKay at Tampa in the National Football League.

North Carolina State, which became a national power under Holtz, opens against Furman while Utah State takes on San Jose State.

Fans at North Carolina State were treated to a passing game while Holtz was there, but under Rein the Wolfpack is expected to run more.

"He had his program, I have mine," Rein said, referring to Holtz. "I guess I'm a little bit more conservative. I believe in having the running games get things established first. But I'll say this, it's better to come to an established program than to have to build one."

Wolfpack enthusiasts will not see as much passing this year. For one thing, Dave Buckey, who quarterbacked the club to national prominence the past two seasons, has graduated and in his place is Johnny Evans, who is more of a runner than a passer. Evans is considered exceptional at running the Veer offense.

One of the most exciting runners in the country is a quarterback, and he will be on display for Kansas Saturday night against Oregon State. He's Nolan Cromwell, an exceptional all-around athlete who last season became only the fourth quarterback in NCAA history to gain more than 1,000 yards rushing in a season.

Watch out Joe!

Holmes hates quarterbacks

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Joe Namath beware! At least one Pittsburgh Steeler is out to make your homecoming Saturday night a painful experience.

"I hope to have at least two sacks on Namath," said a grinning Ernie Holmes, a Steeler defensive tackle, in anticipation of the preseason game with the New York Jets here, in which Namath, a native of nearby Beaver Falls, Pa., is to make his first local pro appearance. Namath missed the Jets' last two games here with injuries.

Holmes insisted he spoke seriously, but there was probably some jest in his threat. If he hits Namath hard in the final preseason game for both teams, it will have nothing to do with Namath leaving Holmes out of his summer football camp for boys.

The reasons will be a) that as a member of the Steelers' front four, Holmes' job and greatest pleasure is hitting quarterbacks and b) after two straight physically debilitating losses to the New York Giants and the Dallas Cowboys, the Super Bowl Champions are ready to start dishing it out again.

Steeler coach Chuck Noll says the most disappointing aspect of the 4-2 exhibition season has been "some of the physical punishment we've taken from football teams. We're usually not that kind. We're usually on the delivering end. We have to get back to that."

Namath said he was "really looking forward to being back in Pittsburgh. I don't know if it's because of seeing my family or playing the game. The last time I was home was Christmas and that's too long."

US Open Tennis loses top player as Czech upset

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — The U.S. Open Tennis Championship lost one of its most glamorous stars Thursday when third-seeded Martina Navratilova, the Czechoslovak shot-maker who defected to the U.S. during last year's tournament, was upset, 1-6, 6-4, 6-3, in the first round of the women's singles.

Navratilova, who shed 25-pounds of excess weight by staying off the junk food she enjoys so much, was given a good shot at the title held by her friend Chris Evert, and she appeared in control of her destiny when she led by a set and 3-2.

Then the roof fell in and Martina's night ended in public tears as she cried uncontrollably for nearly five minutes before a crowd of approximately 8,000 fans who had braved near day-long rain in the hope of seeing some tennis.

The crowd had not bargained for such a stunning upset, especially as the 5-foot-7, 140-pound, Newberry, of La Jolla, Calif., only returned to the circuit three weeks ago after undergoing an operation on her left knee in February for the removal of cartilage.

Newberry, 23, tried to console her 20-year-old opponent, but nothing she said made any difference. Martina just cried.

"She was crying terribly afterwards and I just walked up to her and said I'm sorry," Newberry said. "You don't like to see anyone that upset about anything in life."

Navratilova, after she had regained her composure, said the match should never have taken place, "but the conditions were equal for both of us."

"I was a step slower than usual. I was just freezing."

Martina said she was totally unprepared when called out to play. "I was told the match ahead of us was tied at 1-all, so I expected a third set. But they played a 12-point tiebreaker and we were given five minutes to get on court."

(In the American Express Final — an event outside the open competition — Dick Bohrnstedt defeated Butch Seewagen, 7-6, in the 12-point tiebreaker after they had split 7-6 sets).

Navratilova also complained of being "extremely hungry" after waiting more than five hours to get on court.

The writing was on the wall when Martina trailed 5-1 in the third set.

She hauled herself back into the match by breaking service in the seventh game and holding in the eighth. In the ninth game she saved three match points and held two break points of her own, but she could not wriggle off the hook. Newberry, who served two doublefaults during the ninth game, gained her fourth match point with forehand down the line and then clinched her victory with a service ace, the only one of the entire match.

Navratilova's manager, Fred Barman, said Martina had nobody to blame for her loss but herself.

"I've got to have a serious talk with her," he said.

"She has got to learn discipline. She could be another Billie Jean King and it would be a shame to let such talent go to waste."

What had been a wet, misrable, day for the hardy spectators ended on a high note with Newberry's stunning victory and that of second-seeded Bjorn Borg, which followed in the men's singles.

Borg, fresh off his third straight victory in the U.S. professional championship and victories in the Wimbledon and WCT finals, defeated an outclassed Cliff Letcher of Australia, 6-2, 6-2, in his opening round match.

Lions, 24-9

PONTIAC, Mich. [UPI] — Rookie linebacker Garth Ten Napel keyed a 21-point third quarter Thursday night with a blocked punt and interception to help Detroit's "kiss and make up" Lions close their exhibition season with a 24-9 thrashing of the Baltimore Colts.

Detroit ended the exhibition season with a 3-4 record but has now won two in a row — both after internal friction between Coach Rick Forzano and his players spilled into public view.

Ten Napel, a seventh round draft choice from Texas, A&M, blocked a David Lee punt six minutes into the third quarter, scooped it up on the 29 and carried it in for the first touchdown of the game. Ten Napel intercepted Bert Jones as the period was coming to an end and returned the ball 36 yards to the three. Three plays later, Dexter Bussey gave Detroit a 24-0 lead with a one-yard touchdown run.

Work Study Jobs Available

SCER is now hiring undergraduate work-study students to serve as office assistants and Resource Center staff.

Office Assistants will be involved in such work as request answering, filing, typing, handling phone calls and assisting in SCER's research projects.

Resource Center staff will be responsible for skimming and cataloging publications and intergrating them into the SCER Resource Center library. Job will also include typing labels for publication files and filing material.

SCER is a student research interest research group dedicated to educational reform at UMASS. We are an "equal opportunity—affirmative action" employer and are committed to ending racism and sexism at UMASS.

Minutemen grid for Green as scrimmage preps squad

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

They're approaching it in a low-key manner, but that doesn't mean that tomorrow's scrimmage at Dartmouth won't be important for members of the UMass football team — or the coaching staff.

According to assistant coach Bob Pickett, of the 22 starting offensive and defensive positions, he could name "about 15 starters." While a good performance tomorrow may not guarantee anyone of a starting spot, you can bet the eyes of the coaching staff will be on the competitors for the seven or so openings.

The scrimmage will also give head coach Dick MacPherson and his cohorts an idea of where the team stands in preparation for next Saturday's opener against a tough Toledo squad.

"We've come along as far as we can expect to at this point," said Pickett. "We're very well off at this stage."

Well off enough to be ready to face Toledo in a week? "We'll know more about that late Saturday afternoon," Pickett said.

A year ago, the Minutemen scrimmaged another Ivy League team, Yale, a week before the season opened. MacPherson came away from that one "extremely disappointed and embarassed" in his own words. His squad put on a horrible show in that scrimmage, fumbling, throwing interceptions, and making every other mistake imaginable. Of course, they followed that with eight straight victories and the most successful season in recent years, so maybe these scrimmages don't mean everything.

The Minutemen have a number of men returning from last year's powerful defensive squad. For that reason, the defense has come aaong faster than the offense thus far, according to Pickett.

However, injuries have weakened the defense. In particular, defensive back Todd Holt and linebacker Peter McCarty are coming back from knee problems, and they will see little, if any action tomorrow.

The quarterback spot belongs to senior co-captain Brian McNally, but reserves Peter Colton and Mike Fallon will no doubt get their shots tomorrow. Rich Jessamy, John Romboli, Bill Colemaa, and Keith Lang will handle most of the running back choress

There are some holes in the offensive line. Dennis Barbato has been moved over from the defensive line, and along with Gerry Greene, Mike McLaughlin, Jim Penta, and a few others, will try to plug those holes.

The men returning to the defense, besides Holt and McCarty, are Ron Harris, John Toner, Steve Telander, John Van Buren, Dave Croasdale, Bob Levine, and Dennis Fenton. A number of others will see action tomorrow as well.

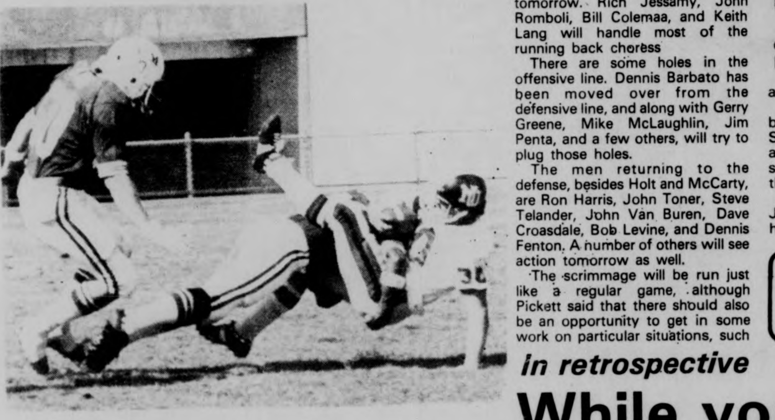
The scrimmage will be run just like a regular game, although Pickett said that there should also be an opportunity to get in some work on particular situations, such as goal-line defense.

Last year, the Minutemen slipped by Dartmouth 7-3 at Alumni Stadium. UMass took advantage of a bizarre scoring play, and with some great defense, hung on for the win.

The lone touchdown came when Jessamy took a short pitch and was hit at the Dartmouth three. He fumbled the ball into the end zone, and in the ensuing scramble, came up with the ball for the score.

The Green attack is led by senior quarterback Kevin Case, a reserve for the past two seasons. Case has a reputation as a fine runner as well as an accurate passer, thus making him perfect for Dartmouth's option plays.

UMass coach Dick MacPherson will be watching closely tomorrow as his squad displays its talents at Hanover.



Hard-hitting, a common trait with the UMass defense of last year, is expected to maintain its consistency beginning with Dartmouth.

Canada thrashes Finland

Pete Mahovlich raises stick as Rick Matin (not shown) scores intial goal of Team Canada's game with Finland. (UPI)

OTTAWA [UPI] — Rick Martin scored a three goals and Bobby Hull and Phil Esposito added two apiece Thursday night to kick off the inaugural Canada Cup Hockey Tournament with a 11-2 thrashing of Finland.

Team Canada was never threatened, taking a 4-0 lead in the opening period. Finland did not score until less than two minutes remained in the game when Lasse Oksanen ripped a goalmouth pass past Canada goalie Rogie Vachon.

Rick Martin opened the scoring with a power play goal at 3:54 just 39 seconds after finnish forward Matti Hagman went off for hooking. Martin completed his hat trick with two third period goals, the first coming 58 seconds into the final session and the second at 11:12 when he batted in a pass from Buffalo Sabres' linemate Gil Perrault.

Hull scored both his goals in the first period while Esposito, Hull's former linemate with the Chicago Black Hawks, registered his goals in the first and third periods.

Team Canada added two more goals in the second period with Reggie Leach deflecting in Bobby Orr's blue line shot at 3:13 on a power-play and Steve Shutt poking one home during a goalmouth scramble at 6:06.

While you were away...

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

While you spent your summer idling on the beaches at the Cape, working an eight-hour shift at your local factory, or doing whatever you did, the UMass athletic department and sports scene did not sit idly by. No, as a matter of fact, there was quite a bit of activity on campus regarding sports. A capsule summery of what took place follows:

Way back in mid-May, the lacrosse team traveled to Maryland to compete in the national championships. Although Garber's Gorillas were beaten by Johns Hopkins, a perennial lacrosse power, UMass did itself proud...Happy news came from within Jack Leaman's office as UMass picked up a peach of a basketball player from the horn of plenty of Indians, last year's undefeated national champs. Mark Haymore, a 6'10" center who backed up Kent Benson last season, decided to transfer to UMass. Although Haymore will be forced to sit out a year (a la Mark Donoghue) because of his transfer, he will be a worthy addition to the Minutemen's basketball program.

Vivian Barfield

The National Football League's Green Bay Packers trained here for a week in mid-August. UMass served as a stopover for the Pack before they traveled to Buffalo for an exhibition game...Vivian Barfield, assistant athletic director, resigned her post in August to take a job with the University of Minnesota. She'll be a hard woman to replace within the athletic hierarchy.

Coach Dick Bergquist of the UMass baseballers will be mighty happy come spring. One of the top schoolboy pitching prospects in the state, Greenfield's Doug Welanc, will be tossing the horsehide for the Minutemen in the spring. He was chosen by the Houston Astros on the 22nd round of the June baseball draft, but decided to forego the pros for college.

Ditto the happy face for soccer coach Russ Kidd. An all-star junior college transfer from New Jersey, Mark Hodgdon, will be one of the goalies for the booters in the fall.. Before she left the athletic department, coach Carol Albert of the women's basketball team left her successor some kind of incoming freshman talent to work with. She recruited four players, including forward-center Penny Libercent, who tried out for the Olympic team with a couple of UMass varsity players, guards Sue Peters and Sue Henry, and Maura Supinski of nearby Northampton. The women b-ballers appear to be building up their program in a hurry.

Coach Fan Gaudette's golf team, New England champions, climaxed a successful season with an appearance in the nationals. Although the linksters didn't fare well there, it was one of the best years ever for UMass golf.

Careful Olympic viewers may have recognized a familiar face among the United States men's gymnastic team. Gene Whelan, an ex-UMass gymnast, competed in Montreal. He transferred to Penn State when the men's gymnastic program here was de-emphasized.

Four new coaches are making their faces shown on campus this fall, and moe fledglings will be coming up in the winter and spring...Wrestling coach Mike Welch, also a grad student, finished up his studies and accepted a job with Southern Connecticut State.

Although undoubtedly this summary leaves out some occurences, that is basically what took place on this campus over the summer. Now, as they say in the Olympics, let the games begin.

Gethers loses retrial bid

By JOE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Former UMass student Craemen J. Gethers lost his bid for a third trial on armed robbery charges, according to a Hampshire County Superior Court decision released Friday.

Gethers, 23, claimed he had found key witnesses whom he had not been able to call for his first two trials.

Gethers also asked for a new trial because he had passed a lie detector test administered after the previous trials.

He is serving 8-12 years in Norfolk State Prison for the August 7, 1974 armed robbery of a McDonald's restaurant in Hadley.

In his decision Friday, Superior Court Judge George J. Hayer sided with prosecution arguments in almost every issue brought up during a hearing last July 1 and 2.

He said Gethers had been given time at the previous trial to look up witnesses, and had agreed then that the court had given him ample time for such a search.

During the July hearing, Gethers said he had been unable to locate witnesses because they had moved away from the University. Several of the witnesses said at the hearing last July they would have testified if they had known Gethers was on trial.

Gethers was looking for witnesses who had seen him on crutches shortly before or after the robbery. Gethers claimed he had injured his ankle playing basketball. This, he said, would have prevented him from leaping over the counter at McDonald's, as witnesses testified.

Several witnesses came forward last July and said they had seen Gethers on crutches shortly before and after the incident.

Judge Hayer wrote, "I find that the decision to use or not use witnesses is a matter of defense tactics and strategy. If witnesses were available to the defendants and were not used, he cannot be heard later to ask for a new trial on the basis that they were not called to him."

As for the lie detector test, Judge Hayer sided with prosecuting attorney Stephen Kaplan who disputed the quality of the privately administered test and the qualifications of the man who administered it, William LaParl of the Scientific Security Co., Boston.

"The Court was not impressed with the experience or expertise of the examiner," Judge Hayer wrote.

LaParl had worked as a lie detector specialist with the N.Y. State Police and had been accepted as an expert at several trials previous to the Gethers case.

Gethers' request that the court withhold its decision for a retrial until an official lie detector test was taken was also denied. Gethers had made this request in the event that Judge Hayer denied an immediate retrial.

Gethers was first tried together with Robert Earl Brown, a former UMass football player. The first trial ended in a hung jury.

Each defendant was tried again in separate trials. Both were convicted. Brown was sentenced to 3-5 years at the Hampshire County jail. He is now attending classes at UMass as part of the jail's work release program.

Gethers' attorney, Matthew Feinberg of Boston, could not be contacted last night about any appeal possibilities his client might have.

A member of the Brown-Gethers defense committee and professor in the UMass Afro-Am dept., John H. Bracey, termed Judge Hayer's decision "an obvious setback."

We will continue to pursue the few remaining avenues open to us," Bracey said.

Carter opens campaign drive

Jimmy Carter, officially opening his 57-day drive for the presidency with Franklin D. Roosevelt's "Little White House" as a backdrop, said yesterday the nation needs him now as it did Roosevelt in 1932 and John F. Kennedy in 1960.

Breaking Democratic tradition by not kicking off his campaign in Cadillac Square in Detroit, Carter said, "I owe special interests nothing, I owe the people everything."

Carter did not mention President Ford, preferring to invoke the memories of Democratic presidents. But he kept up his theme of the lack of leadership in the White House.

"When Harry Truman was in the White House, a sign on his desk said, remember what?" Carter asked. The crowd roared: "The buck stops here."

"There was never any doubt about who was captain of the ship," Carter continued. "Now, no one seems to be in charge. No one seems to be responsible."

Carter flew on to the Southern 500 stock car races at Darlington, S.C., where he crossed paths, to his annoyance it was reported, with Sen. Robert Dole, the Republican vice presidential nominee.

The two men shook hands, however, on the track in front of the grandstand holding 80,000 persons.

It was learned Carter almost cancelled the Darlington appearance when he learned that Dole would be present.

"If elected, I'll try to be a worthy leader of our great country," the Democratic presidential nominee said at Warm Springs.

"This year, as in 1932, our country is divided, our people are out of work and our national leaders do not lead," he said at Warm Springs. "This year, as in 1960, our nation is drifting, without inspiration and purpose.

"As in those critical years, it is time to restore the faith of the American people in our own government and to get our country moving again."

Carter said "strong leadership" will be required: "Political leaders must be willing to tackle economic problems head-on, without timidity or fear.

"We must not lower our standards to accept high inflation, high unemployment and huge deficits as

Earthfoods offers an alternative -- naturally

By ALFORNIA GRESHAM
Collegian Staff

There is one thing in particular that one of the coordinators of Earthfoods would like people to eat.

"Despite all rumors to the contrary, Earthfoods and SAGA manage to coexist quite peaceably," claims Christo Boyd, treasurer of the newly-formed natural foods restaurant in the Student Union.

"Our inquiries among clientele as well as SAGA's books prove that our operation does not cut into other food service establishments on campus.

"Our clientele is composed of ex-brown baggers and people who want a change from dorm food. Period."

But there are other things to eat, also, according to Larry Geller, another officer and coordinator of the eating establishment, such as Sub Atomic Chili, Fennochio with Polenta, Broma Theon (food of the gods) and Sopa de Bolas de Plantanos.

This can all be washed down with herbal teas, coffee, and pero, which is a coffee substitute.

In a program being instituted this semester in keeping with the staff's philosophy of being as ecologically-minded as possible, discounts are offered on the "special of the day" to those who bring their own eating implements. There will be a discount of five cents for those who bring their own cutlery, five cents for your own cup, and another five cents for your own plate. By the way, the special of the day is expected to range between $1.50 and $2.00, so those bringing their own eating materials can eat pretty cheaply.

Earthfoods is a Recognized Student Organization founded last semester to provide natural foods as an alternative to other eating places on campus.

One of the original founders, Malcolm Quint, is now vice-president of the group. Other officers include Kristin McCromack as president, Christo Boyd as treasurer, and Larry Geller as secretary.

The grand opening of Earthfoods for this semester is Monday in the Commonwealth Room, at which time they will be on a limited serving schedule until Sept. 16. From Monday to the 15th, lunch hours will be 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.; on the 16th hours will expand to 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The breakfast program will run from 9 to 11 a.m., lunch from 11 to 2:30 p.m., and an afternoon program from then until 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Free entertainment will be a feature attraction at the restaurant. Volunteer entertainers receive a free meal for their work, according to the organizers. Wendy Keith, who plays acoustic guitar and sings, will appear opening day.

Another plan of the coordinators for the future is the establishment of a coffeehouse every Saturday night beginning Oct. 2. They said patrons should expect to pay around 50 cents or a dollar for entry, with interested musicians getting a percentage of the gate.

Besides seeking musicians, the coordinators are also seeking to increase their staff.

"There is an affirmative action policy in effect for Third Worlders", said Boyd, "but no Third Worlders have applied to date."

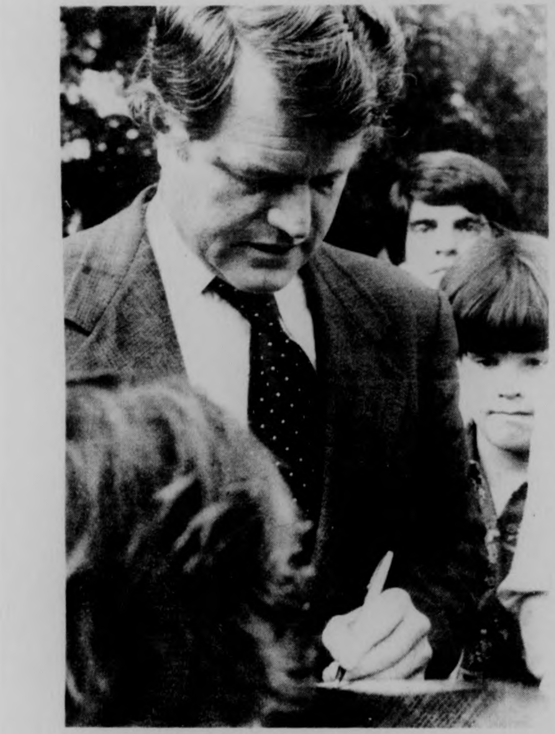
Boyd also said anyone interested in any position, whether as musicians or staff, should contact Boyd or Geller in the Buffet Kitchen in the Student Union Ballroom.

A volunteer program is also in effect. Meal Chits, or meal credits, are given depending on the type of work you volunteer for.

"People who get a reputation for dependability will receive priority in choosing jobs," said Boyd, "but grimy jobs will pay one chit per hour, while easy jobs get one every hour-and-a-half."

The international cuisine at Earthfoods will be featuring such specials as Chinese Day, Carribean Day, Italian Day and so on along the ethnic lines. There is also a strong no-smoking policy, so patrons can enjoy their food in a clean environment.

If you find hunger playing tackle football inside your stomach and you want to try something different, try Earthfoods.



Sen. Edward Kennedy signed autographs.....

Kennedy campaigns at Physical Plant

By DEBORAH EDWARDS
Collegian Staff

"Ten minutes to three o'clock," said one worker waiting on the loading dock of the Physical Plant. Another introduced himself as Kennedy's nephew. A third man, wearing a straw hat and sunglasses, came around shaking hands, as he said, "Vote for me, vote for me, I'm running for dog catcher!" The jokes stopped as three o'clock arrived on Friday.

"Sen. Kennedy is in the area campaigning for volunteers for his campaign, and to meet and talk with the workers of the Physical Plant," said his area campaign coordinator, Darlene Gratton.

The last time Kennedy was in the area was Aug. 27th, on a farm tour sponsored by UMass. At that time, he spoke to a group which included Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery; Dean Ross Whaley of the School of Agriculture; Dean Gene McMurtry, chairperson of the State Rural Development Committee, and State Farm Bureau President Harold Newton.

At that meeting, Kennedy said Massachusetts has come from a farming state to an industrial state in the past 200 years. He said if the trend continued, those agricultural students graduating from UMass might not be able to stay in Massachusetts. He cited the first step of reversing the trend as, "achieving a rational state land use planning system," that would, "protect and preserve our farms."

Kennedy had urged the University to work with state officials to establish an independent task force to examine how uniform and fair tax treatment of farms can be secured.

Kennedy said, "The federal government must expand its support of research at campuses like UMass, to share the burden with the state. In areas like waste, energy, recycling, water treatment, conservation, and pesticide research, federal support is crucial."

After his tour of the Physical Plant Friday, Kennedy went to the Amherst Senior Center. There he spoke to a group about current concerns of the elderly.

Kennedy said he was "vitally interested in assuring the elderly of a decent income," and was concerned with "housing for the elderly," and supported, quality health care.

Kennedy was instrumental in starting a nutrition program for the elderly in which two million meals have been served.

Catholics meet at Newman Club

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

Catholic students on campus may reinforce their religious, intellectual and social values by joining the Newman Club, an undergraduate Recognized Student Organization which meets bi-monthly at the Newman Center on North Pleasant Street.

"It's important to give students a sense of belonging," said Fr. Leo A. LeClerc, director of the center.

"The greatest source of anxiety here as an incoming freshman or sophomore is to find yourself alone on this large campus.

"The Newman Club gives students the chance to meet people in a warm, receptive environment where they can feel at home," he added.

An introductory meeting is scheduled Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center.

According to Sean P. McDonough, president of the 50-member group, this semester is packed with a variety of academic, social and religious activities to "promote the Christian way of life."

A series of speakers, touching on several aspects of Catholicism, have been scheduled for the next few months, he said. Pat Camerino, director of the graduate school office of grants and contributions at UMass, will begin the series with "The Role of Catholics in Academia," on Sept. 19 in the Newman Center.

A coffee house has been slated for later this month, and plans for pot luck dinners, parties and other events are being scheduled, McDonough added.

A weekly bible class will also be initiated by the group, along with two weekly courses: "Contemporary Problems from a Religious Perspective," offered Tuesday evenings beginning Sept. 21, and "Dimensions of the Modern Church," to be held Thursday evenings beginning Oct. 7.

The Newman Club organizes the three weekend folk masses, weekly church bulletins, and helps maintain the Newman Center, Fr. LeClerc said.

"People don't realize how much time and energy these students donate to running our chapel," he added.

A Newman Club Outreach committee is formulating plans to visit dorms on campus to further generate interest towards the Newman Club.

Fr. LeClerc estimated there are about 3,000 persons attending the eight weekend masses offered at the Newman Center.

Hidden 'liberation corridor'-- harmony, unity, and fear

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

The floor exit door has an American flag with a pair of black hands reaching out, with the statement, "Liberedtad Para Los Presos Politicos," neatly printed underneath. Not far from there, a room door shows its sole sign of accupancy by a postcard of President and Mrs. Ford centered on it. This is a floor of great feelings of harmony, unity, – and the fear of being found out.

"The basic corridor started as people, led by Theresa Car, who were into conscienceness raising, wrestled this floor away from housing in the dorm. Car got together people who were involved in different movements such as communism, socialism, and Gay issues to live together and be able to express their views in a positive way for the betterment of the corridor as a whole. It has and is working out that way now."

Although all people interviewed agreed with this philosophy, there was almost a unanimous fear of being found out, isolated and held up for public ridicule. Six people out of seven interviewed would either not reveal their names outright, or wouldn't make any kind of statement until they were assured that there would be no names.

"My sister goes to this school, and neither her nor my family know that I'm gay, and I don't want her reading it here," one floor resident said.

Another resident, who would only give an alias, admitted to have communistic leanings and said that she preferred where she lived because, "it seems we can all work together here, really open and friendly. If other people here aren't into a particular idea or belief of one person, they still feel sympathetic enough to listen."

Still another found that it was more comfortable to live where he-she is.

"Yes, I'll talk to you, but please don't print my name. I have lived here for two years now. I came over because in my last dorm, my roommate didn't know I was gay, and I wasn't comfortable with that. Here I have the freedom to be

Info Phone urges voter involvement

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Do you know where and when to register to vote? Do you know how to file an absentee ballot? Do you know who is running for Congress in your district?

One can get the answers to these questions and all others concerning government by just dialing the phone.

The Voter Information Phone (VIP) is a toll-free number (1-800-882-1649) sponsored by the League of Women Voters serving the voters of Massachusetts.

The phone, which is in its fourth year of operation, was established as part of the Lotte E. Scharfman Memorial Fund, a grant to the League of Women Voters that also sponsors adult education courses in politics. According to VIPhone Director Merry Duffy, the fund was established "to encourage people to be involved in government by making government easier for them."

Duffy says that about 30 calls a day are received during election season and voters are given completely non-partisan information.

Questions range from where to register to vote to information on recent Supreme Court rulings. If the worker does not have an answer, the caller is referred to someone who does.

Two volunteers are always manning the phones on weekdays between nine in the morning and three in the afternoon. There are about 30 volunteers involved in the operation of the program.

"We are here to inform the citizens of the commonwealth on a wide range of government information," said Duffy.

Controversial report criticizes colleges

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

"The golden guarantee at the end of the line is no longer there ... You simply have to raise some serious questions about the value of going to college."
— Frank Newman

In 1971, the bulk of the nation's colleges and universities were the subject of harsh criticism from a Federal task force whose report soon became a "best-seller" among those interested in American education.

The Newman Report, so-called after committee chairman Frank Newman, found that most American institutions of higher learning were lacking variety and flexibility, causing two-thirds of entering students to drop out before graduation.

The report also criticized institutions for ignoring older students and those returning to college after dropping out, and it went on to attack institutions which were dominated by faculties and graduate schools seeking to imitate Harvard and Berkeley.

The report criticized the stolid and immovable character of American higher education.

"The system, with its massive inertia," said the report, "resists fundamental change, rarely eliminates outmoded programs, ignores the differing needs of students, seldom questions its educational goals and almost never creates new and different types of institutions."

At the time of the report, on the leading-edge of higher education, birth was being given to a few unconventional "experimental" colleges, like Hampshire, just down the road, and Evergreen State College in Oregon.

Newman, a 49-year-old graduate of Brown University who had 17 years of experience in business before jumping to a career in higher education, was, at the time of the report, working at Stanford. He has been president of the University of Rhode Island since August, 1974.

So, where have we come in the last five years, and where are we heading?

Newman recently spoke to The Boston Globe about changes since the report was published, and of what the future holds for American high education.

The Globe asked Newman if a college education today is worth the high cost.

"It's not just the cost," Newman said. "The golden guarantee at the end of the line is no longer there. If you go back to the history of universities as they first started in Europe in the Middle Ages or the old Oxford-Cambridge model or the current European model, ... the university is the way to assure

News in Brief

Swedish bank robber turned idol

STOCKHOLM, SWEDEN [AP] — A deep yearning for a little disorder in affluent and law-abiding Sweden has turned a bank robber into a kind of folk hero — a rough Nordic mix of Jesse James and Warren Beatty.

Clark Olofsson has his face on T-shirts. A Danish film producer says he's going to make a movie called "The Ballad of Clark Olofsson" and 50 amateurs beg to try out for the main role. Olofsson escapes from prison using a Swedish-made truck to batter down a gate and a truck dealer advertises the breakout as the ultimate on-the-job consumer test.

A worthy citizen complained to the ombudsman about the unscrupulousness of the ad copy, and last week the Soviet Communist party youth newspaper, Komsomolskaya Prayda, scolded Sweden for turning a thief into a "superman with romantic accents."

Rabbis discourage intermarriage

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rabbis in the Conservative Jewish movement have been told not to participate in marriages between Jews and non-Jews, but to try to convert the non-Jewish partner.

A report issued by the Rabbinical Assembly's Committee on Jewish Law and Standards, updating the organization's stance on the issue of intermarriage said, "The rabbi and all organizations should work to prevent such occurence."

"However, when in spite of all efforts, an intermarriage takes place, we believe it is in the best interest of the community to win these people over to Jewish life," the committee report said.

Intermarriage has been of increasing concern in the Jewish community. Some estimates say between 10 and 15 per cent of all marriages involving a Jewish partner are intermarriages with 70 per cent of the offspring of such marriages being lost to the Jewish community.

Museums now capture multi-senses

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Walk into a room on the second floor of the National Portrait Gallery and you may hear "Porgy and Bess" while you see a big portrait of George Gershwin, who made serious music of jazz.

Or you hear "Appalachian Spring" while you search out some displayed mementoes of the life of the composer, Aaron Copland.

The music changes to the Emerson Movement of Charles Ives' "Concord Sonata" — and you can find on another wall a picture of Ives, the New England insurance man who was called the "Walt Whitman of American music."

The gallery's exhibition, "The Coming of Age of American Music," illustrates a trend in the museum world — exhibitis that tell their story through more than one sense.

"It's a technique which has come into its own in the last eight or ten years," says Peter Bermingham, a curator at the National Collection of Fine Arts.

In November, the National Collection will open an exhibition of 50 paintings based on poems, and will display the poems, too.

Mich. wedding has unusual setting

ST. IGNACE, Mich. [UPI] — Jerry Root and Verna Coger exchanged wedding vows in what amounted to the middle of nowhere yesterday. The ceremony was attended by 26,500 persons, including Gov. William C. Milliken.

Root and his bride had argued over whether the wedding would be held in Michigan's Lower or Upper Peninsula. They compromised and chose the Mackinac Bridge, which connects the two land masses, on the only day of the year pedestrians are allowed on the five-mile long span.

"You couldn't ask for a more beautiful setting," said Root, a resident of Battle Creek in the Lower Peninsula. "And why not on Labor Day when the governor and everyone else is there?"

Explosion linked to busing dispute

LOUISVILLE, Ky. [AP] — The FBI has entered the investigation of a predawn bombing at a high school here yesterday. Despite the bombing and sporadic nighttime disruptions by anti-busing protesters, school officials said classes would resume on schedule today throughout the city.

The bomb that went off early yesterday morning at Male High School in downtown Louisville had been placed beside a radiator in the lobby of a gymnasium, police said.

The bomb blew the radiator from the wall and blasted a hole about two feet in diameter in the floor. However, a police bomb squad officer said it did no structural damage to the building.

The bomb went off about 10 miles from the area in southwestern Jefferson County where police used tear gas Sunday night to disperse about 800 antibusing demonstrators who threw bottles and light bulbs at police. Eighteen persons were arrested.

It was the third night of unruly protests since the opening of schools in Louisville and surrounding Jefferson County. The unified county-city school district is operating for the second year under a federal-court ordered desegregation plan.

But the protests have all been in the evening, well after school hours. Classes have been conducted without disruption since opening day and the school buses have moved through the streets without interference.

The bomb squad officer said he had talked to district school officials who said classes would be held on schedule Tuesday after the Labor Day holdiay.

FBI officials and bomb squad members yesterday swept up broken glass and other debris around Male High School and sent it to an FBI laboratory in Washington.

Group cites failure of crime agency

WASHINGTON [AP] — An independent research group yesterday urged Congress to abolish the multibillion dollar Law Enforcement Assistance Administration because "it is beyond repair."

The report issued by the Center for National Security Studies said the federal crime-fighting agency has not reduced crime, nor has it found out much about what will.

"It is with great reluctance that we recommend the termination of the LEAA program as it is presently constituted," the report said.

"It is too late to tinker with the program; it is beyond repair. Congress should admit its failure and confront once again the basic question of what the federal government can do to alleviate the burden of crime on the American people."

The LEAA, which makes grants to help state and local agencies fight crime, was set up in 1968. It has distributed some $4 billion.

The report, called "Law and Disorder IV," is one of a series of critical reviews produced by the center in a project directed by Washington attorney Sarah C. Carey.

The document was formally made public yesterday, but The Associated Press obtained draft of it last May.

Responding to the center's criticism then, LEAA Administrator Richard W. Velde credited his agency with developing national strategy to reduce crime.

Landing craft relays photos of Mars surface

PASADENA, Calif. [UPI] — A sandy trough winding its way past the Viking 2 Mars landing craft may be the remains of an ancient stream on the arid Martian surface, a project geologist said yesterday.

"This is clearly something that demands our attention and certainly is a beautiful candidate," said Dr. Alan Binder, a member of the team of scientists analyzing the color and black-and-white pictures radioed back from the nation's second Mars observatory.

Besides inspecting the surrounding landscape on the rocky Utopia plain, Viking 2 has started examining the environment with its sensitive "marsquake" meter and weather observing instruments.

And the spacecraft passed another hurdle when it reported yesterday that a protective cover had been ejected as planned from its vital digging arm. The robot will scoop up its first soil samples Saturday to begin the search for life at Utopia.

Binder said in an interview the surface pictures show there is enough fine soil around the lander for the digging arm to gather samples for the biology experiments.

The possibility that water may have existed on the surface of Utopia at an earlier epoch suggests the place might have been hospitable to the development of life.

ST. LOUIS: Democratic vice presidential nominee Walter Mondale paid a Labor Day visit to Postal Service employees at Lamber Field yesterday, promising a better shake for America's working families if the Carter-Mondale ticket is elected in November.

The Program of the Year isn't on TV. It's in the Air Force ROTC.

Look into the Air Force ROTC. And there are 4-year, 3-year, or 2-year programs to choose from. Whichever you select, you'll leave college with a commission as an Air Force officer. With opportunities for a position with responsibility...challenge...and, of course, financial rewards and security.

The courses themselves prepare you for leadership positions ahead. Positions as a member of an aircrew... or as a missile launch officer...positions using mathematics...sciences...engineering.

Look out for yourself. Look into the Air Force ROTC programs on campus.

Vietnam issues US casualty list

PARIS [UPI] Communist Vietnam is what it said was a gesture of "good will" gave the U.S. embassy in Paris yesterday the names of 12 American pilots listed as missing in the Vietnam war and said they were killed in action.

They included seven U.S. Air Force airmen and five from the Navy.

The Vietnamese embassy in Paris sent the list to the U.S. embassy and also issued a press release containing all 12 names with rank, branch of service and serial number. It did not give any details, however, of when, where, or how the Americans were killed.

The list ended years of agonizing doubts for the families of the 12 men. It also was certain to step up pressure on the Pentagon from the families of the other U.S. servicemen still missing in Vietnam.

In Washington, White House press secretary Ron Nessen said "we are encouraged" by the Hanoi action but added the United States had no plans to normalize relations with Vietnam until a complete accounting is made of all American MIAs.

Nessen said Hanoi had agreed to release all 1,100 names, and "we don't have any plans of normalizing relations until we receive all the names."

In transmitting the list, Vietnam said it still seeks a reopening of negotiations with the United States on tracing the missing and on U.S. aid to repair war damage in Vietnam.

In addition, Vietnam's application for membership in the United Nations is scheduled for consideration by the Security Council later this month. The United States last year twice vetoed applications by South and North Vietnam, and Hanoi's envoy to the U.N. said last week cited his country's efforts to trace the MIA's in the hope the bid would win U.S. approval this year.

However, there has been no indication thus far from Washington on how it will vote on the application from unified Vietnam.

The Vietnam cease-fire agreement of January 1973 provided for negotiations of both the MIA search and financial assistance from the United States. But the cease-fire collapsed and so did the negotiations.

Several months ago Vietnam returned the bodies of three Americans previously known to have been killed in action. In recent months Vietnam also has taken a markedly milder tone with the United States.

SCHIPHOL AIRPORT, AMSTERDAM: Passengers of the hijacked K.L.M. jetliner are welcomed with happy faces and flowers as they return yesterday from Cyprus. The Royal Dutch Airlines DC9 was hijacked Saturday shortly after takeoff from Nice for Amsterdam. The three hijackers surrendered to Cypriot authorities late Sunday after releasing their 81 hostages.

Soviet pilot asks for asylum

HAKODATE, Japan [AP] — A Soviet pilot brought his supersonic MIG25 fighter to a screeching landing at this northern Japanese city yesterday and asked for polical asylum in the United States, police said.

Despite parachutes billowing behind to slow the plane, it overshot the small airport's 6,-700-foot runway by 800 feet. It also smashed two navigational antennas on the ground and punctured its nose landing gear.

Japanese authorities declined to identify the pilot "because of the delicate international situation involved." He holds the rank of lieutenant, and witnesses at the airport said he was about six feet tall and appeared to be in his mid-20s.

In Washington a State Department spokesman said no decision had been made about asylum for the pilot. He said, "We are in touch with the government of Japan. The matter is under consideration."

Officials in Moscow declined to comment, but the Soviet Embassy in Tokyo asked to see the aviator. The Japanese Foreign Ministry had no immediate response to the request.

Japanese authorities said the pilot told investigators he came from a Siberian base and "I wanted to defect to the United States but landed at Hakodate because my plane's fuel load was too small to get there."

Witnesses said the plane circled overhead with a deafening roar "as if to conduct a reconnaissance mission."

Police said when the pilot opened the canopy after landing, he fired two pistol shots into the air, apparently to warn Japanese workers away. No injuries were reported.

They said he demanded that the plane, which flies three times the speed of sound, be covered with canvas bacause "it is a top secret of the Soviet air force."

UN agreement calms Korean border clash

SEOUL, South Korea [AP] — The United Nations Command and North Korea agreed yesterday to keep their guards separated in the Panmunjom truce village to avoid further clashes, U.N. Command officials said.

In Washington, the White House said the new security arrangements "hopefully will prevent the recurrence of such unprovoked attacks" as the one Aug. 18 in which North Korean guards killed two American Army officers.

Officials of the U.N. Command, under which the United States and allied forces fought the 1950-53 Korean War, said the new agreement will go into effect in 10 days. Meantime, both sides will guard against incidents that might endanger personnel of either side as they begin to carry out the technical details of the agreement.

In a joint statement, both the United States and South Korea said they are "determined to respond firmly to North Korean provocations" in the future.

Allied officials said the agreement was worked out in five days of secret talks between the secretaries of the joint Military Armistice Commission. It was approved by the chief delegates of the commission.

Kissinger says African talks look optimistic

LONDON [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said yesterday he believes there is a chance for negotiations to bring black majority rule to Rhodesia and South West Africa without the bloodshed of a racial war in southern Africa.

Concluding his weekend of talks in Zurich with South African Prime Minister John Vorster, Kissinger flew to London to report to the British government, the United States' partner in African diplomacy.

Before leaving Zurich where he and Vorster discussed the potentially explosive situation for 14 hours, Kissinger told a news conference the talks produced progress on both procedure and substance in finding ways to prevent a racial bloodbath.

With "patience, good will and dedication" on all sides, Kissinger said, he could negotiate a transfer of power from the white minority to the black majority in Rhodesia and South West Africa Namibia.

"I believe conditions for negotiations exist on both issues," he said. But he warned the issues were "very complex."

Kissinger did not detail what concessions Vorster may have agreed to on South West Africa.

Namibia, which South Africa has ruled under an old League of Nations mandate despite criticism from the United Nations and black African nations.

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Bay State leaders gather to discuss 'laborous' topics

BOSTON [AP] — An annual Labor Day breakfast brought out a swarm of politicians and candidates yesterday, and among the speakers there was agreement on at least one thing — election of Jimmy Carter as president in November.

The traditional gathering of several hundred union and political leaders came as the rest of New England took one last swim, sail, hike, picnic, trip and time to relax on the day set aside to honor honest work.

"If there is one central issue, a national issue, it is jobs," said Gov. Michael S. Dukakis at the Greater Boston Labor Council event. He said the election of Carter to work with a Democratic Congress would help make sure of action to provide work for any who want jobs.

The governor, who said he has had to take steps to save the state from bankruptcy, said the state's economy is on the rise, and the jobless rate is now under the national average.

"We have added close to 50,000 jobs, and more are coming.

"We have laid the foundation for a better economy for the state... But a 7.7 per cent unemployment rate for Massachusetts, even though it's lower than the national average, is obviously unacceptable. There are issues, there is a point beyond which the state cannot go."

The chief speaker, Earl D. McDavid, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Union Label and Service Trades Department, lashed at President Ford for not making a major Labor Day speech.

"I think we are being held in contempt and completely ignored by Gerry Ford on this Labor Day," he said.

McDavid also criticized large multi-national corporations, saying they are undercutting the U.S. labor movement by promoting foreign-made imports.

"If you are driving a foreign car," he said, "you have helped put 464,000 people out of work in the past few years."

"The anti-trust division of the Department of Justice has been virtually at a standstill under the Nixon Ford administration," he added.

Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., the House Majority Leader and one of four Bay State congresmen at the session, contended, "Republican administrations have always been deaf to labor.

"I know Jerry Ford. He's a decent fellow, but he can't run a nation. His idea of a Labor Day would be a return to the days of the celuloid collar."

The entrances to the Statler-Hilton Hotel where the breakfast was held were picketed by members of the antibusing group ROAR, organized to protest busing of pupils in Boston's current program of court-ordered public school integration. They have been critical of Kennedy and O'Neill on the issue.

UConn team examines 'Legionnaires Disease'

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — University of Connecticut researchers yesterday began examining specimens from the 29th victim of the "Legionnaires' Disease" to determine if nickel carbonyl poisoning caused the mysterious illness.

Dr. William Sunderman Jr., who heads the research team, said tests on the specimens of other Legion disease victims were "inconclusive" because the samples were contaminated.

State Health Department spokesman Robert Costello said doctors performing the autopsy on the latest victim, J. Bruce Rogers, 60, Moorestown, N.J., were instructed to use non-metal instruments to prevent contamination.

Sunderman said the results of tests to determine if nickel carbonyl caused the illness would not be known for several weeks.

Rogers, manager of four Holiday Inns in Philadelphia, died Friday afternoon at the Burlington County N.J. Memorial Hospital.

Costello said Rogers was "on the list" of Legionnaires' Disease victims, although Rogers' personal physician, Dr. David Flinker, said he died of a blood clot on the brain.

Carter seeks support from Conn. labor

GROTON, Conn. [UPI] — It won't exactly be like old times today when Paul and Mary Ellen Hains try to get in a quick hello to Jimmy Carter and his wife Rosalynn.

The Hains and the Carters were neighbors years ago while both families were stationed at Pearl Harbor. And the families shared their sugar, bridge and baby sitting.

Carter, now the Democratic presidential nominee, is to visit Groton today for a rally at the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics, which makes nuclear submarines.

"They were wonderful neighbors. Jimmy was very quiet, a great reader and he seemed to do a lot of philosophizing," said Mrs. Hains.

What college women are being ..nned with.

As a woman ROTC student, you'll compete for your commission on the same footing as the men in your class.

There are 2-year, 3-year, and 4-year scholarship programs available. A young woman enrolled in the AFROTC 4-year program is also qualified to compete for an AFROTC college scholarship which will cover the remaining 2 or 3 years she has as a cadet. Tuition is covered... all fees paid...textbook costs reimbursed...plus $100 a month allowance, tax-free.

A woman's place is definitely in the Air Force and our pinning ceremony will be the highlight of her college experience.

yourself that you are in the upper class.

"The American university was always more egalitarian than its European counterparts, but there was always that very strong element. If you could somehow get into that marked group, then you were separated out from the rest of society.

"Well, with half the people going to college you simply can't have that kind of guarantee."

Years ago, he told the Globe, "you had to make your own way ... That was very traditional in American life, but without college ... Now, even if you go to college, you have to make your own way. The combination of that fact with the high cost means you simply have to raise some serious questions about the value of going to college.

"My opinion is: It won't do some things and it will do others. It won't automatically make you better educated, although it is very likely to if you do the right things. If you work at the process, it is very likely to have a profound effect on your intellectual development. But it won't do it automatically ... "

Asked if whether or not the value of a college education depended on some sort of payoff in a job or career, Newman replied, "We will have to do a different kind of selling job, a much more subtle, complex, involved one, One which will say, 'Look, we can't guarantee you'll get a nursing job if you go to the University of Rhode Island and get a degree in nursing, because you'll have to compete for that job. But, if you want to be a nurse, this would be a very good background. Or, if you want to be a human being, it would be good to have this. Don't count on us to provide you with that guarantee. But do count on the fact that education is useful if you go to the trouble of getting yourself a good education ...

"In the 50s and 60s it was said that you didn't have to compete for a job. Jobs would come to you. All you had to do was get the right Ph-D or law degree and you'd be recruited right at the college doorstep. And, in fact, it occurred for a little while there and that became our norm ... That's a travesty on the American system.

"Now what's happening is we're going back to the real norm. The norm is, 'OK, so now you've got your diploma. Now you've got to go compete.' "

Newman feels that a personal reassessment of the value of going to college is essential, and even more essential is a reassessment by institutions of what they have to offer.

★ Kennedy visits

"The real test of a civilization," said Kennedy, "is the care and protection it gives to its elderly. They are the ones who made this country. We can make progress in the present without jeopardizing our future."

From the Senior Center, Kennedy moved on to the Lord Jeffrey Inn in Amherst, where there was a public reception.

Kennedy said unemployment increased this month from 7.8 to 7.9 per cent due to, "local, state, and federal government policies."

Kennedy went on to explain his feelings of the Senate and its red tape, and how it snagged progress.

"The institution of the Senate makes bandaid-type solutions," said Kennedy, "for problems that will only grow worse."

Kennedy said the Senate should devise, "an early warning system." He cited the energy crisis as an example. "Recommendations and warnings have been made by authorities in the field of energy conservation, but we as an institution, were not prepared to deal with the problem when it arrived."

Kennedy went to Holyoke for a rally later, where he encountered an anti-abortion protest. Gratton, the area coordinator for his campaign, said, "The senator personally is against abortion, but he feels he must voice the opinion of the majority of the people."

One person claimed that the floor was not just for personal freedom, but to inform the campus and the community at large about different political and social events.

"We were very active in the United Farm Workers' movement some time ago, and did a lot to make the campus aware of what the farm workers struggle was all about."

This type of situation-having people of different moral and political beliefs - may have presented a problem for that corridors' floor counselor. This isn't true in the case of this corridors counselor, who chose to live there.

"I try to deal with each person as an individual — people to me have no labels. This floor is no different to me than any other in the dorm. I also have several political beliefs and think there are people here with similar ones. The counselor feels that here, he will be able to express them.

An overwhelming fear of being found out. Forced together by the intolerance of the rest of the UMass community. The people on this special floor live and work together in understanding and peace, with the hope that someday they won't have to band together as they have done for their own protection, and be able to live in the UMass community at large unpersecuted and unobstructed.

Frog race draws 1000 spectators

NORRIDGEWOCK, Maine [AP] — Norridgewock was jumping on Labor Day as more than 1,000 spectators showed up for the fourth annual Central Maine Frog Race.

About 125 persons, divided into three age groups, entered frogs in the competition, held inside a 30-foot circle. The frogs were placed in the center of the circle, and the first to reach the outer rim was declared the winner.

Bruce Hertz, the race chariman, said the frog owners tried to get the creatures moving by yelling encouragement, stomping the ground behind them and huffing and puffing on their backs. It's against the rules to touch the frogs.

"One girl had a harmonica," said Hertz, "and we had to have a ruling of the judges. She was allowed to use it, but it didn't make any difference. She still lost."

The race was broken down into rial heats, each involving four entries.

'Players' sponsor tag sale, auction

The Amherst Players Guild has scheduled a tag sale and auction for the south side of the Amherst Common Saturday afternoon at 1 p.m.

The upcoming sale is not the Guild's first off-stage appearance here in Amherst. Members of the group contributed to the fun at the last Amherst Fair with their "funny faces" booth where both children and adults had a chance to see how they looked wearing stage make-up. If the sale is as successful as the booth was, the Guild may schedule it as a regular annual event.

Davy Rowland, the APG member heading up the sale, says she encourages everyone to stop by the South Common on Saturday afternoon and see what's going on.

Proceeds from the tag sale and auction will go towards APG's fall production of After The Island, an original play written as a sequel to Shakespeare's The Tempest by one of the group's members.

Anyone wishing to donate materials or services to APG can arrange to do so by calling Rowland in Shelburne at 1-625-2109.

In case of rain, the sale will be held at the Senior Center on Kellogg Ave. in Amherst.

Journalism Dept. to offer 3-credit course

A three-credit course in news editing, copy editing, headlining and news selection is being offered by the Journalism Dept. this semester.

The course, taught by Prof. Sally Grimes, does not have a definite meeting time scheduled yet. The first meeting of the course will be tonight at 7 p.m. in E-10 Machmer, at which time a definite class time will be arranged.

Those interested in the course should bring add-drop forms to the first meeting tonight.

Town Democrats to host barbecue

The Amherst Democratic Town Committee will hold its annual barbecue Sunday at the Hadley Young Men's Club. The public is invited.

With the state-wide primary only two days away, a large number of political figures and candidates are expected to attend. State Rep. Jim Collins, State Sen. John Olver, Ed McColgan and Ed O'Brien, the two contenders for the nomination for U.S. Representative from the First Congressional District, will be present.

In addition many other candidates running for County offices will attend. Among these are Ted Boruchowski, Paul Dineen and Bob Garvey, contenders for Hampshire County Commissioners, as well as Robert Czelusniak and George Scheurer, candidates for Hampshire County Register of Deeds.

Festivities will begin at 12:30 p.m. with a softball game between the Hampshire County Democratic All-Stars and a team of Amherst Democrats. Food will be served from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. The barbecue will also feature the live music of a German "Oompah" band and many door prizes contributed by local merchants.

Tickets at $5.00 per person (50 cents for children under 12) may be obtained either at the door or in advance by calling 256-8874 or 253-9310.

George Sulzner, assisted by George Como and Joan Ross Logan, will be in charge of the day's activities.

Publisher donates sex books

NEW YORK [UPI] — Publisher Ralph Ginzburg's loss will be the American Civil Liberties Union's gain — and maybe Ginzburg's, too.

In 1962, Ginzburg printed 125,000 copies of "Eros," which Ginzburg calls "an elegant, expensive, hardcover magazine on the subject of love and sex."

Federal authorities deemed the material criminally obscene. After a 10-year legal fight that went to the Supreme Court twice, Ginzburg went to jail for eight months.

In 1976, Ginzburg still has 3,216 copies of Eros gathering dust in a Pennsylvania warehouse. He announced Monday that the copies will be donated to the ACLU for fundraising purposes. Ginzburg put the value of his gift at $300,000.

Though obscenity standards have undergone drastic changes in the last 14 years and Eros seems outdated by the fare prominently now displayed at most newsstands, Ginzburg, the ACLU and a New York rare book dealer, Arnold Levy, agree Eros has become a collector's item.

"In the open market today, in mint condition, they fetch between $85 and $125 each," Levy wrote. The original price was $10.

Because of his conviction, Ginzburg said Monday, "I'm the only man in America who can't sell them" because "the burden of proof would be on me" to show Eros is not obscene.

But if someone else — like the ACLU — sells Eros, Ginzburg said, "the burden of proof would be on the prosecutors."

"I couldn't bring myself to destroy them, and so I've donated them to the most likely recipient — the American Civil Liberties Union, which, of course, champions freedom of speech and press like no other organization extant."

In accepting the donation, Melvin L. Wulf, legal director of the ACLU, wrote Ginzburg, "You are quite right in describing them as collector's items of substantial historic interest, and we appreciate the opportunity to use these copies to raise money for the ACLU..."

Hewlett-Packard wrote the book on advanced pocket calculators.

And it's yours free!

Hewlett-Packard built the world's first advanced pocket calculator back in 1972. And led the way ever since.

If you're about to invest in your first pocket calculator—one that will serve you through college and beyond—you'll need all the information you can get to make a wise decision. That's why Hewlett-Packard's put together an objective, informative 24-page guide entitled, "What To Look For Before You Buy An Advanced Calculator." And it's yours—Free!

In it you will find such helpful information as: A survey of types of calculators available; Programming; Logic systems; Applications; Functions; Features; Construction; Accessories; Memory; Service and much, much more.

Get your free copy of "What To Look For Before You Buy An Advanced Calculator," at your campus bookstore or telephone 800-538-7922 (in Calif. 800-662-9862) toll-free for the name of your nearest dealer.

HEWLETT-PACKARD PRESENTS THE FIRST FAMILY OF ADVANCED CALCULATORS.

HP-21 Scientific. New low price. $80.00*

The HP-21 makes short work of the technical calculations even so-called "non-technical" courses require. If you need a calculator for more than simple arithmetic—this is it—especially at its new low price.
- 32 built-in functions and operations.
- Addressable memory.
- Performs all standard log and trig functions (in radians or degrees).
- Performs rectangular/polar conversion, register arithmetic and more.
- Two selectable display modes: Fixed point and scientific.
- Lowest-priced HP Scientific calculator.

HP-22 Business Management $165.00*

The HP-22 easily handles the kinds of calculations you face in business courses today, in management tomorrow. Breeze through business math calculations. Build existing statistical data into reliable forecasts. If you're going into business administration, this is the calculator for you.
- Combines financial, mathematical and statistical capabilities.
- Performs complex time-value-of-money computations including interest rates.
- Performs rates of return and discounted cash flows for investment analysis.
- Performs extended percent calculations, accumulated interest, amortization, etc.
- Ten addressable memories.
- Full decimal display control.

HP-25C Scientific Programmable with Continuous Memory. $200.00*

The HP-25C is our keystroke programmable. It can solve automatically the repetitive problems every science and engineering student faces. What's more, its Continuous Memory capability lets you retain programs and data even when it's turned off.
- Continuous memory capability.
- 72 built-in functions and operations.
- Keystroke programmability.
- Branching, conditional test and full editing capability.
- Eight addressable memories.
- We also offer the HP-25, (without the Continuous Memory feature) for $145.00.*

HP-27 Scientific/Plus $200.00*

The HP-27 is for the science or engineering student—whose course work extends into business administration. The reason: It features every pre-programmed scientific function we've ever offered, plus comprehensive stat and financial functions. That's why we've dubbed it our Scientific/Plus.
- 28 pre-programmed exponential, log and trig functions, 15 statistical functions, 10 financial functions—53 in all.
- 10 addressable memories—20 memories in all.
- 6 selective clearing options give you flexible use of memories.
- Fixed decimal, scientific or engineering display formats.

Separate and free

Each to his own anger
Each to his own Identity
Black man's fist raised high denies pacification claims right to choose his own way
Response: A dream
A dream
A White dream
There is no place for anger and frustration in a middle class environment, so we just don't understand –
Sympathize

Perhaps
We are not mindless and unfeeling
But we are not Black and we can't feel the pain of being Black, of growing up Black in a white world
In a white school system –

It is time we realized that the fact that IQ tests are culturally oriented is not coincidence, but a symptom of something that is so deep and so unseen that even the liberals in all their (our) well-meaning can never really feel this.

Hey, hey, what I'm trying to say is that we all know that life has not played exactly fair in our country and that white middle-class is not necessarily right. We know this. But when we have these dreams of a perfect America – Utopia – it is still in a white middle-class framework. We expect that our dream of perfection is everybody's goal. So it is alright to support this interest group and that, the means are different, but the goals are the same (we comfort ourselves) except that they're not.

Men thought that giving women the vote would pacify them and get them back in the kitchen where they belong, but here we are out in the streets fighting just as hard for the right to be. Simply to be. And it's not going to happen so fast, because men think they know what we want, what we are, what we are capable of, when we are still trying ourselves out. What we want is not merely our place beside men in a world they created, but our own life in perhaps an entirely different style.

So the dream doesn't work. You cannot fight for anyone but yourself.

There is still power in unity. I cannot deny that. But it should be unity in like kinds. Militant with militant, sub-culture with sub-culture, etc.

Not 'separate, but equal' – Separate and different! Separate and free!

No "dream", but each to his own reality.

Separate and free!

We have so many different needs and they should all have a chance to be realized. Support each other, but mostly, support yourself.

The case of Brown and Gethers

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter because of the urgency of this matter. The case of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers has set a strong precedent that cannot be overlooked. The case has emphasized an increased notion of racism in Western Massachusetts. It has also developed the old notion that, "All Blacks look alike."

In this respect, there is a need to clarify points on this case. On August 7, 1974, McDonald's restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley was robbed at 11:30 a.m. by three Black males who took off with $1200. The store was immediately closed, and the state police were called to the scene. On arrival, the police interviewed eleven witnesses; the manager, dishwasher, grill man, counter woman and seven customers, of which three came forward with the clearest description. A UMass grounds keeper discovered the stolen car on Rocky Hill Road, about one and one-half miles west of UMass. Police found a sawdust shotgun, shells, a dark green coat, brown sweater, red headband and money bags around the car. Police found no fingerprints at McDonald's or inside the stolen car.

On August 9, 1974, Debra Cooke was brought to the UMass police station [the basic reason being, that the University has the highest number of Blacks in the area and would be the first place for the police to find suspects]. During the identification process a picture of Roy Eddington was deleted and replaced by a picture of Robert Brown from Cambridge, Mass. [Note: the picture was not one of Robert Earle Brown, who was convicted.] Debra Cooke picked an early picture of Robert Brown from Cambridge as one of the suspects. At this time Robert Brown of Cambridge was the only individual chosen. State Trooper Thomas Ford asked for confirmation by the witness. Ford then stated that a later picture would be received and Cooke would be asked to come back.

A search of the room of Robert Earl Brown of Elmira, N.Y. was conducted on August 12, 1974 without probable cause, a warrant, or authorization from the area Head of Residence. The search was to find Robert Brown of Cambridge, but mistakenly, the names were confused.

On August 14, 1974, a picture from Hartford [from a larceny in February, 1974] produced an up to date photo of Robert Earl Brown [and not the suspect Robert Brown from Cambridge]. The witnesses were called in to make another identification. The new picture was inserted next to the first picture. Ultimately, the witnesses made the mistake of thinking the first and second pictures were the same. This mistake led to the search warrant being issued on August 16.

Trooper Ford and Phillip Cavanaugh of the UMass police conducted the second search of Robert Earl Brown's dorm room. The object of the search was to find a gold buckle belt, brown pants, green coat, brown sweater and a gun [please note: a green coat, brown sweater were found in the stolen car]. The results of this second search produced another green coat, brown pants and an eggnog color sweater. This led, ultimately, to the arrest of Robert Earl Brown on August 23, 1974.

Craemen Gethers was never a suspect, until he was identified on August 26, 1974 at Kentucky Fried Chicken [located a mile east of McDonald's, where two witnesses were employed. The two white women identified Craemen as the suspect wearing a red rope belt on his head, sunglasses, and holding the shotgun during the crime.

They stated that they could remember him because of his features, face, goatee and sunglasses. Craemen Gethers was on crutches when he walked into Kentucky, he was wearing a hat that was on backward and could not expose the top part of his face, and was wearing sunglasses.

Based on Debra Cooke's testimony at the Probable Cause hearing on September 26, 1974, both Robert Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers were bound over to the Superior Court. In February Robert Earl Brown took a polygraphy test that produced deceptive results. In March the first Superior Court trial began on the 17th. The trial lasted four days, and was deliberated by a jury of one black male and eleven whites. Prior to the trial Debra Cooke had made a racial slur in Probable Court, which implicated Craemen Gethers as ugly. "He's ugly just like the guy with the shotgun." The main witnesses proved that they could not identify the three Black males. First, two of the three main witnesses claimed to have seen Robert Earl Brown in Kentucky Fried Chicken the last week in August [of 1974] after the arrest of Robert Earl Brown]. When it was proven in Court that the defendant was staying with his mother in Springfield. Secondly, Craemen Gethers had an alibi to confirm that he was in a Southwest dorm at the time of the alleged crime. Finally, the third black male has never been identified by the witnesses or found by the police. The jury deliberated fifteen hours before Judge Cross decided it was hung.

Craemen Gethers was tried again in mid-July [of 1975] by an all white jury. With a new lawyer who apparently took the case lightly, Craemen Gethers was convicted of participating in the armed robbery of McDonald's on July 24, 1975. In light of the racial remarks, contradictions presented by the witnesses, the fact that the state did not have a picture of Craemen Gethers until he was booked for the alleged crime. This was the only picture shown to the witnesses [instead of the normal spread system]. Craemen Gethers has served one year of his eight to ten year sentence. Presently, Craemen Gethers has been denied a furlough by the Classification Board at Norfolk State Prison. Craemen Gethers last appearance in court was July 2, 1976 before trial Judge Hayer for a new trial based on two polygraph tests that turned out positive. Since July 2, the Judge [Hayer] has not made a decision.

Robert Earl Brown was tried again on October 16, 1975 by an all white jury. Prior to the trial an individual by the name of Robert Brown who was white was sentenced for rape. The same lawyer [Jerome Farrell] was unable to delay the trial because of the conflict, or the fact that the jury was all white. Mr. Farrell who's performance is being questioned stated that the judge did not want the case to be in the papers like the previous trial. Jerome Farrel was not prepared when the original picture chosen by Debra Cooke of the suspect Robert Brown [from Cambridge] was not the defendant Robert Earl Brown [from Elmira, New York]. The fact that the picture was a mistake, the false probable cause that led to a search of Robert Earl Brown's dorm room, the two sets of clothing [the items found in the stolen car, compared to the items found in Robert Earl Brown's room], the contradictions of where Robert Earl Brown allegedly was standing at McDonald's on August 7, 1974 by the three witnesses, led to the conviction of Robert Earl Brown on October 22, 1975 for armed robbery. On October 29, 1975, before two hundred supporters, trial Judge Paul Tamburello sentenced Robert Earl Brown to a three to five Walpole sentence. On February 5, 1976, Brown returned for sentence reduction, and a new trial motion [without the trial transcript].

The motions were overlooked by trial Judge Paul Tamburello and he remanded Robert Earl Brown to the Northampton House of Correction to allow him to resume schooling. But the decision produced conflicts with the paper transfer from Walpole to Northampton, eligibility for work release, and placed Robert Earl Brown in a limbo situation.

Robert Earl Brown did not quality for the work release program until June 1 when a letter from the Commissioners Office in Boston confirmed the program. Secondly, Robert Earl Brown's transcripts were delayed from mid-April to the beginning of July. Since the complications on Feburary 5, 1975, Brown has gone for post bail in April, which was denied by Judge Tisdale who replaced Tamburello because of retirement [but was reinstated by the Chief Justice on April 29, 1976]. Currently, Robert Earl Brown is still on the work-school release program. A trial date is being set for some time in early September. Because of the original sentence, on October 16, 1976, Robert Earl Brown will be eligible for a one third parole consideration.

In summation, the case of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers strongly resembles the Scottsboro case of the 1930's. Apparently, the racism being perpetuated in Boston and Mississippi has not changed since this time. The case of Robert Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers must be seen in the same light as the Charlotte 3, Wilmington 10, Gary Tyler of Louisiana, and the countless other innocent people who are political prisoners. These are the reasons we ask for your support in the Robert Earl Brown-Craemen Gethers case.

Thank you for your few minutes.

R. Earl Brown

The SCER story

Once again, the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) has released a well-prepared and timely report underlining a critical need in the University community. This time, as the Collegian reported in its news pages last week, SCER researchers found that UMass would be graced with numerous benefits if a cable television system is established on campus.

But outside of the excellent reports it publishes, such as "The Wired Campus", SCER does not regularly receive from the UMass community the recognition and the acclaim it is due.

Behind the scenes at SCER are a wealth of highly motivated people, using the instruments of research and teaching to effect changes in educational policy.

A direct consequence of this research activity is the heightening of students' understanding of how the institutions affecting them operate and what can be done to change them. And, as was pointed out in this month's issue of Change magazine, "They (SCER) have created in their research center a model for what might be done on a national scale to enliven the university by the infusion of student ideas."

SCER has long been committed to the concept of student-interest research. Since its inception in early 1974, SCER's "student as consumer" research approach has investigated the areas of dorm and off-campus housing, land use management and planning studies, affirmative action, altering the conception of student governance, de-emphasizing competitive intercollegiate sports and many more.

Two skillful, full-time professional staff persons — Director Larry Magid and Doug Moreton — furnish the experience and advice required for student researchers to channel their intellectual energy into the forefront of educational policy-making on campus while honing their research techniques. Voluminous, ingeniously organized information files have been accumulated and are available for research of all kinds.

Find out how you can plug-in to SCER to help shape the future of the University's programs and policies. You'll value the experience for a lifetime.

Classics professor to lecture tomorrow

Judith R. Baskin, a newly-appointed assistant professor in the Department of Classics, will lecture on "Biblical Interpretation: The Rabbis And The Church Fathers."

The lecture will be tomorrow in Herter 301, with refreshments at 4 p.m. and the talk at 4:30.

Baskin will discuss the very different ways in which the Talmudic Rabbis and the Fathers of the early Church approached the same Biblical texts, and the influences each body of writings exerted on the other.

The lecture is open to the public.

Baskin, who received her Ph.D. from Yale University in Medieval Studies, will teach courses here in Biblical Hebrew and Judaic Studies.

In addition to teaching Judaic 100, The Jewish People I, Baskin will offer Judaic 200, The Bible and Archaeology (TuTh 2:30-3:45; schedule number 528024I) and Hebrew 110A, Elementary Biblical Hebrew (MWF 10:10; schedule number 430629). These courses are still open and enrollments are welcome.

Thursday, William G. Doty, a visiting lecturer in the Department of Classics, will give an illustrated presentation titled "Mandalas East and West: The Symbol of Cosmic Centering."

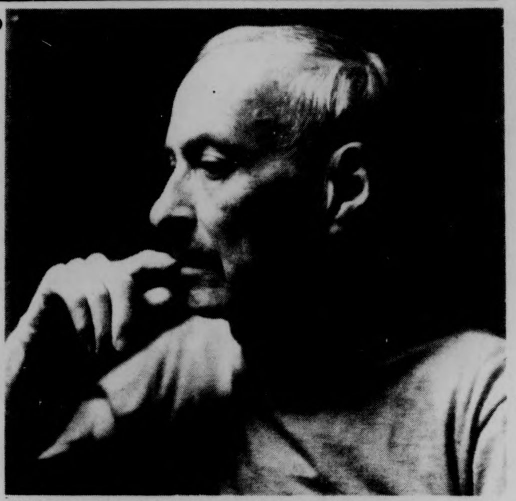
The lecture will be in Herter 301, with refreshments at 4 p.m. and the talk at 4:30.

Doty will discuss the comparative religious and mythological significance of one of humankind's most pervasive symbols, the mandala, as well as associated symbols such as the cosmic egg and the uroborus. It will include slides from Africa, the American Southwest, Mexico, France, Haiti, India, Nepal, Medieval Europe, ancient Iran, Greece, Rome, Israel, The Wizard of Oz, and contemporary drawings and paintings from psychoanalytical work.

The lecture is open to the public.

Doty, who received his Ph.D. from Drew University, is the author of several books and numerous articles on the study of primitive Christianity and of myth and ritual. He will teach courses here at the University in the Religion Concentration in the Classics Major. In addition to courses in elementary New Testament Greek and upper level readings in the New Testament, he will teach a new course in Comparative Religions, which will involve a comparison of Eastern and Western religious traditions, myths, and rituals. This course will be offered MWF at 1:25 (schedule number 170245). It is still open and enrollments are welcome. There are no prerequisites. (Classics 190B)

For more information, consult the Department of Classics (Herter 539; telephone 545-0512).



UMass Press has published latest collection of poems by Amherst poet

The UMass Press has announced the publication of Amherst poet Robert Francis' latest book of poetry, a collection which includes his seven previous volumes of verse plus a section of new, unpublished poems.

The book is illustrated with eight wood engravings by Wang Hui-Ming.

ROBERT FRANCIS: Collected Poems, 1936-1976 marks the anniversaries of three significant events in Francis' life: his 75th birthday, the 50th anniversary of his move to Amherst, and the 40th anniversary of the publication of his first book, Stand With Me Here.

To honor the celebration of this poet's new book and his three anniversaries, the Press will be sponsoring a poetry reading by Francis at the Jones Library Gallery in Amherst Saturday at 8 p.m.

Tryouts for 'Lenny' today and tomorrow

Auditions for City Studio Theatre's production of "Lenny" by Julian Barry will be held today and tomorrow from 7 to 10 p.m. at Hampden Student Center in Southwest at UMass.

The role of Lenny Bruce will be performed by Michael Rusk, an actor who has worked with the Stratford Subway Cabaret, City Stage of Flint, Mich., and the Theatre Experiment Laboratory of Boston.

All other roles are open — six actors, four actresses, and four jazz musicians are needed. Positions are also available in the following areas: technical, costumes, props, and stage management.

"Lenny", directed by Mark Cuddy, will be performed Oct. 20-23 at Hampden Student Center, UMass, Oct. 26-30 and Nov. 3-6 at City Studio Theatre.

Reserve copies of the play are available at City Studio Theatre, UMass Theatre Department, and the UMass library. For additional information call 584-3978, between 1 and 5 p.m., today through Saturday.

Roister Doisters to meet tomorrow

Roister Doisters Drama Society will hold its first meeting tomorrow night at 6:30 in the Campus Center, room 804.

The meeting is mandatory for all active members. Fall plans will be discussed and an emergency election will be held.

New members are welcome, and Third World people are encouraged to attend.

INTRODUCTION TO AFRICAN STUDIES
UMass — Afro-Am 190 G
W 7-9 p.m.
New Africa House

This course, an introduction to both the Africa of today and of antiquity, utilizes a carefully planned team approach in order to blend the specialized approaches of anthropology, art, history, and politics. Beginning with a brief look at several urgent contemporary issues in Southern Africa, it moves back in time and outward in perspective to explore the forces which have shaped modern Africa: the rich and varied arts; the diverse but ancestrally related ethnic groupings; the long interaction with Europe culminating in colonial conquest and exploitation; and the building, over a period of millenia, of a distinctive African civilization. The course's chief goal is to help the student develop a clearer understanding of Africa and Africans and their place both in world history and current world affairs.

Not a traditionally organized course, it utilizes a multiple learning approach: film, slides, art displays, guest speakers, panel discussions, and student participation as well as appropriate lectures. It is designed to serve the needs of students wishing an introduction to [illegible], more specialized, African study as well as those interested only in a general survey. It is open to undergraduates of all the five colleges.

The core faculty team includes Professors Dovi Afesi, Johnnetta Cole, E. Jefferson Murphy, and Femi Richards.

AFRO-AM. 155 REVOLUTIONARY CONCEPTS IN AFRO-AMERICAN MUSIC I (C)
MWF 11:15 - 12:30
New Africa House 315
Schedule Number: 045987

An introduction to the history of Black music from its African origins to the end of the 19th century. Discusses styles, characteristics, and instrumentation of early African music and moves to development of New World forms from early religious expression to the beginning of the blues. 3 Credits "C" core. For further information call 545-2751.

ANTHROPOLOGY 220, Skeletal Analysis is a laboratory course held from 2:30 until 5:00 on Tuesdays. Students learn human skeletal anatomy and how to analyze skeletal differences in past and present-day human populations. The emphasis is on major adaptive features of the skeletal system, evidences of disease, and the relation of the skeletal system to locomotion. This course may be of interest to biology students, pre-med students, and others as well as majors in anthropology.

ANTHROPOLOGY 381

Quantitative Techniques in Anthropology, will be offered on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9:30 - 10:45. This is a new course that incorporates basic statistical methods with the approach and data that are typically used in anthropological studies. This course fulfills the quantitative methods requirement for anthropology majors.

For information on these or other courses in anthropology, contact Alan Swedlund (Machmer 101, Ph. 545-1308), Director of Undergraduate Studies in the Department.

EDUCATION 391B EXPLORATION IN CREATIVE WRITING

Objectives are to experience and explore ways to integrate creative writing in the classroom (K-graduate school), both as a means of developing self-expression, self-awareness, and self-growth, an art form, and as a curriculum tool for teaching other subject matter. Topics for discussion will include creativity, expression, surrealism, multi-cultural classrooms, and "word traps." We will also spend some time on integrating creative writing with other forms of expression such as movement, painting, music.

DANISH 251-551, DANO-NORWEGIAN LITERATURE

The goals of this course are to give the student some familiarity with the literatures of Denmark

NOTICE

A large number of students who preregistered for Theater 110 (1 pass credit in Theater practice) were erroneously bumped from the course. The course was listed as restricted and this was incorrect.

Students are urged to re-register for Theater 110. There are many slots still open and students may register by using the normal add forms. Any interested students are encouraged to contact Mr. Arthur Niedeck in Room 111, Theater Department, Fine Arts Center.

The course is open to non-theater majors and students may earn one pass credit for working on a choice of crew for any specific Theater Department production during the Fall Semester. All students are welcome.

a normal circumstance."

He said inflation was one per cent when Harry Truman left the presidency, and two per cent under Lyndon Johnson and Kennedy, but "unfortunately, under this Republican administration, the inflation rate has averaged more than six per cent.

"When President Johnson went out of office, unemployment was less than four per cent, and, at the end of Truman's term, less than three per cent of our people were out of work," he said.

"But the unemployment rate today is 7.9 per cent," Carter said. "Under this Republican administration the unemployment has been the highest since the Hoover depression."

He asked: "Is this what we want in this country?" and the crowd shouted "No."

President Ford stayed home, receiving word about the name of dead fliers released by Vietnam, the Soviet MIG25 aircraft which landed in Japan and the agreement with North Korea.

His advisers has said Ford would be "presidential," while planning his campaign's first major speech at the University of Michigan next week. He and his family gathered at the White House for Labor Day — some to get their campaign marching orders.

Carter's speech started a five-day tour of 20 cities in 11 states. His schedule yesterday took him to Norfolk, Va., and finally to the New York City area in the industrial Northeast where his public opinion analyst, Patrick Caddell, said Carter support, previously described as soft, was improving.

Lightning bolt strikes near mountain hikers

MILLINOCKET, Maine [AP] – Four persons were rescued from Mount Katahdin Monday after spending the night stranded on inaccessible Knife Edge, Baxter State Park rangers said.

Three of the mountain climbers were treated at Millinocket Community Hospital and released, while a fourth was kept for observation, a hospital spokeswoman said.

A lightning bold struck close to the hikers Sunday afternoon, causing the injuries, officials said.

The hospital said the hikers included New England Telephone Co. official John McCatherin, 36, of Portland and Boston, Mass., who was treated and released.

McCatherin's son, Scott, 12, was kept for observation.

The other hikers were identified as John Moore, 26, of Atlanta, Ga. and Charlene Post, 24, of Portland.

The rescue effort was hampered by fog and rain which prevented a helicopter from flying to the scene, rangers said.

YOUR BIRTHDAY

by STELLA WILDER

Tuesday, September 7 – Born today, you have tremendous energy, and as a result, you may well be intolerant of those who must take frequent breaks in order to recover physical strength and mental determination. You move at a quick pace and find it difficult, therefore, to work in tandem with another. Whatever partnerships you form in life must be, if they are to work, of such a nature that they do not require physical proximity. You can work well with others, but only if you are allowed to work at your own pace while others work at theirs. You work particularly well on the aspects of a given project that involved detail work, and are happiest leaving the overall image of the endeavor to others.

You enjoy travel and could easily combine a love of the new and different with your career. An excellent salesman, regardless of what the product involved may be, you are one of those fast-talking individuals who could carry coals to Newcastle and sell every last lump with no difficulty whatever. You are not one to court danger -- but you will not give up a chance for gain or glory simply to avoid it.

Although you are not demonstrative where your feelings are concerned, you are highly romantic person and take a great deal of joy from your relationships with loved ones. Children bring you special joy, for they enable you to relive your own youth, which was a particularly rewarding time of your life.

Wednesday, September 8

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Impatience could spell the end of a profitable period for you. Make every effort to suppress feelings of restlessness.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – An unsettling morning event may make it difficult for you to make the kind of progress you anticipated during afternoon hours. Even so, you can try.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – If you insist upon a reasonable explanation of another's most recent behavior, you may be in for a big disappointment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Efforts to bring another over to your camp should be successful -- if you make your move in the forenoon. Direct others toward new goals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Personal liberty is not te be sacrificed for gain. Take very good care of your health: present circumstances may be hazardous.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – The Aquarius who is a natural home lover stands the best chance for happiness during these few days. Exert extra effort in the afternoon.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Unless you can respect another's right to ask questions -- whether or not you intend to answer them -- avoid personal contacts, especially in the evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Perception and inspiration go hand in hand today as you observe the competition and measure its talent and determination. Objectivity pays off.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Distressing circumstances may mar the morning hours. Memorable visits from friends and relatives liven up the day later on.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your sense of justice may serve to make you more than a little unhappy today. Aid in seeing justice done and you will feel better.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – If corrections must be made, you should look to your methods of operation. An inclination toward exaggeration may cause trouble in afternoon hours.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Affection is necessary in your personal relationships. Children especially cannot be expected to thrive on discipline alone.

Pirates' Rennie Stennett forces Phillies' Mike Schmidt and relays to first base to complete a rally-killing doubleplay. The Pirates swept yesterday's doubleheader. (UPI)

Pirates win two decker; cut Phils lead to 5½

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — The charging Pittsburg Pirates got eight innings of five-hit pitching from Bruce Kison and a four-hitter from Larry Demery in the nightcap Monday to sweep a doubleheader from Philadelphia, 6-2 and 5-1, and move within 5½ games of the National League East leading Phillies.

The Pirates, 15½ games back on Aug. 24, have won 12 of their last 13 games while the Phillies have lost 10 of their last 11.

Bill Robinson hit a two-run triple and Richie Hebner added a solo homer to help Demery, 10-4, pick up the victory in the second game. Demery walked four and struck out two. Manny Sanguillen and Tommy Helms also knocked in a run apiece with singles off loser Tom Underwood, 9-5.

Robinson's two-run triple in the third inning scored Richie Zisk and Dave Parker, who had each singled. Hebner's homer to right field came during the fifth, in which Helms also singled in Frank Taveras.

The Phillies' run came when Garry Maddox smashed his second double and third hit of the game in the eighth, took third when Jay Johnstone flied out and scored on Greg Luzinski's sacrifice fly.

In the opener, Kison not only stymied the Phillies' bats for eight innings but contributed a single and a triple to spark a 12-hit attack against loser Jim Kaat and two relievers.

Kison, boosting his record to 12-8, gave way to Kent Tekulve after walking the first two batters in the ninth. Tekulve came in and allowed a single to load the bases but got Bob Boone to ground into a double play and retired Larry Bowa on a fly out to end the game.

Rennie Stennett, Zisk, Willie Stargell, Parker and Robinson each drove in one run with singles for the Pirates. Another Pirate run was scored by pinch-hitter Al Oliver on a wild pitch by reliever Gene Garber.

Colt players criticize boss

BALTIMORE [UPI] — The Baltimore Colt players said Monday the club's front office "completely destroyed this team" and criticized owner Robert Irsay and General Manager Joe Thomas for forcing the resignation of Coach Ted Marchibroda.

Quarterback Bert Jones, reading a statement following a 90-minute players' meeting, said Irsay and Thomas "forced Ted Marchibroda to resign. They were severely wrong in this and it is tremendously unfair to Ted, this town and the team."

Jones, who said the players planned a meeting with Thomas later Monday, said the team supported Marchibroda's insistence that the coach be given complete control of field operations of the club.

"He only wanted to select, control and direct his players to be a team — a winning team. The winning team we had last year," the statement said.

Jones said Thomas and Irsay "have completely destroyed this team by forcing Ted Marchibroda out the week of the first league game. I'm not sure anyone could put this team back together after this arbitrary action of the front office.

"The only man who could is Ted Marchibroda," Jones said. "Ted Marchibroda should be reinstated as the head coach."

The players left their training camp at St. Mary's Seminary after the 90-minute meeting with heads down. Jones described the tone of the session as "sad".

Marchibroda resigned Sunday after a 4½ hour meeting in Milwaukee with Thomas and Irsay. Marchibroda, who led a team that finished 2-12 in 1974 to a 10-4 record and the playoffs last year, said he quit because of front office meddling.

"I could not tolerate the interference I was getting," Marchibroda said. "The players on this team are a fine group of men dedicated to winning and they do not deserve the internal bickering of coach and management."

Marchibroda was known to be unhappy with Thomas for losing several veterans via the expansion draft, waivers or trade without replacing them with comparable players. Irsay has backed Thomas.

The last straw in the bickering was apparently Thursday night when Marchibroda and the owner clashed in the locker room after the Colts' fourth straight preseason loss, 24-9 to Detroit. The Colts finished the exhibition season with a 2-4 record, but were picked to repeat as champions of the American Football Conference's Eastern Division.

US skaters gain confidence with unbeaten Czechs next

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Team USA, which wasn't lacking for confidence going into the Canada Cup Hockey Tournament, goes up against unbeaten Czechoslovakia Tuesday with possibly the boost it needs to milk that confidence into results on the ice.

The game is one of two contests in the series to be played at the Spectrum, home of the NHL Philadelphia Flyers and the only U.S. site chosen by cup officials. While advance ticket sales have been lagging, officials expect a crowd of about 15,000 in time for the opening face-off.

Team USA, 0-2 in the series, threw a scare into star-studded Canada Sunday night in Montreal before losing, 4-2. The stubborn performance by the gutsy Americans may have given them the impetus to pull an upset in the tournament, possibly against the world champion Czechs, 2-0.

But if the words of veteran Lou Nanne are any indication, team USA had visions of surprising more than a few people going into the tournament.

"I like to think we have the type of club that knows what they can do and can come up with results," the Minnesota North Stars' defenseman said last week at a luncheon. "I do know we can perform better than people think.

"We're in this thing to win. I know many people think we don't have much of a chance, but they're going to be surprised."

The physical Americans, hurt by penalties in a 5-2 loss to Sweden, were down 3-0 to the Canadians before goals by Fred Ahern and Steve Jensen made the game close, and uncomfortable for a crowd of 16,339 in the forum. An empty-net goal by Canada's Darryl Sittler settled the issue.

"This team showed a lot of pride," team USA coach Bob Pulford remarked afterward. "We scared the living daylights out of them."

That new-found confidence of team USA will receive a real test from the Czechs, who overpowered an outmanned Finland team, 8-0, Sunday night with goalie Jiri Holecek turning in the first shutout of the tournament.

Coach Karel Gut, who said he has "the best Czech team in the last 10 years," said he might rest Holecek Tuesday and substitute Vladimir Dzurilla.

On offense, the Czechs will test probable starting goalie Pete Lopresti of team USA with Milan Novy, who has three goals thus far in the tournament, and Jiri Bubla, who scored twice in the game against Finland. The Czechs bombarded Finland with 49 shots on goal.

There is a possibility the Czechs could be looking ahead to a showdown with Canada Thursday night in Montreal but they would be wise not to overlook the scrappy Americans.

"One thing is in our favor," Nanne said. "We may be the biggest underdog, but we're only playing each opponent one game, and anything can happen."

Team USA returns to the spectrum Thursday night against the Soviet Union.

O.J. offer falls through

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — Buffalo Bills' owner Ralph C. Wilson Jr. confirmed Monday that the Los Angeles Rams had rejected a proposal deal for premier running back O.J. Simpson.

"I am very disappointed the Rams turned us down," Wilson said. "And I am especially sorry for O.J. What we asked was not unreasonable for a player of his stature. He may be the best known performer in the history of football. But Los Angeles makes its own judgements, just as we make ours."

Wilson said the Bills had asked the Rams for defensive end Jack Youngblood, running back Lawrence McCutcheon, reserve defensive tackle Mike Fanning and first-round draft choices for 1978 and 1979 in exchange for Simpson.

Sports in brief...

DALLAS [UPI] — The Dallas Cowboys yesterday traded kicker Toni Fritsch, the third leading scorer in the National Football League last season, to the San Diego Chargers for an undisclosed draft choice.

HOUSTON [UPI] — The Houston Oilers cut 10 players, including veteran wide receiver Otis Taylor, to get down to the National Football League's 43-man limit Monday.

Coach Bum Phillips said the Oilers, who also traded linebacker Guy Roberts to Atlanta for guard Dennis Havig, would cut one more player if former Detroit running back Altie Taylor arrives as expected this week.

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Second-seeded Evonne Goolagong breezed into the women's quarter-finals with a 6-2, 6-0 triumph over Francoise Durr and third-seeded Guillermo Vilas, the Argentinian poet, became the first player to reach the quarters of the men's singles at the $416,600 U.S. Open Tennis Championships when he downed Russia's Teimuraz Kakulia in straight sets, 7-5, 6-4, 6-0, before a sold-out Labor Day crowd.

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Nine players, including veterans Milt Morin, Hugh McKinnis, Jim Bailey and Henry Hynoski, were released Monday by the Cleveland Browns.

Morin, a tight end from the University of Massachusetts, would have been entering his 11th season with Cleveland. McKinnis, a running back, was preparing for his fourth year.

NEW YORK [UPI] — The New York Yankees Monday activated slugger Ron Blomberg, who has missed more than a season with chronic bicep tendinitis in his right shoulder.

Blomberg, who last appeared in a game July 12, 1975, was operated on April 16 after aggravating the injury by attempting a comeback in spring training. He was placed on the disabled list April 8.

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Terry Hanratty, used sparingly in seven seasons as a backup quarterback, was placed on waivers Monday by the Pittsburgh Steelers.

In reducing the squad to the 43-player limit, the Steelers also placed running back Mike Collier and two rookies on the injured list and traded two rookies to Seattle and Buffalo for future undisclosed draft choices.

Hanratty played briefly in the Steelers' first three pre-season games this year but saw no action in the last four exhibitions, in which coach Chuck Noll used rookie Mike Kruczek, second-round draft choice from Boston College, as Terry Bradshaw's backup quarterback.

Dartmouth beats UM in fake game

By TOM CROWLEY
Sports Staff

After the 13-10 loss to Dartmouth College Saturday at Alumni Stadium in a five-quarter scrimmage, head football Coach Dick MacPherson was a bit ambivilent about the results.

"We're not too pleased, but then we're not too disappointed either," said Coach MacPherson.

While some things didn't go right, like the score, the Minutemen did outgain the Big Green of Dartmouth 213 to 187, and marked up more first downs, 16-13. Two other stats thougn, indicated why the UMass head coach was not too pleased either as UMass amassed merely 73 yards passing while Dartmouth compiled 75.

The other stat is the pass completed category where UMass was only seven of 25 with one interception while Dartmouth had a respectable eight for 14 with two passes picked off.

Coach MacPherson pointed out that no quarterback worked with the first unit except Brian McNally who went three for four for 30 yards. "Mike Fallon would come in with no real unit. One time he'd be with the north team and the next time with the south team," MacPherson said. Fallon went one for four while his competition, Peter Colton, went two for seven.

The problem that surfaced at the scrimmage was the lack of depth at wide receiver. John Van Buren who started off the tilt at split end was switched back to cornerback where he played last season and helped create what Coach MacPherson termed "a dire need for depth at wide receiver."

What receivers UMass does have earned praise from MacPherson as he said "We know Gladchuk is good and Zawada is playing like a senior. We also have three good tight ends."

The leading receiver in the scrimmage for UMass was a back,. not a receiver, as Dennis Dent caught two of the seven completions, all others getting one.

Dent came from the area of the offensive team which also seems to be the deepest. MacPherson said "We have three good quarterbacks and we're deep at halfback and fullback."

MacPherson also singled out Dent for running well from scrimmage and running back kicks. "He needs it to get his confidence up."

Dent got 36 yards on six carries while fullbacks John Romboli (12-86) and Billy Coleman (five for 9 and a one yard touchdown run) also had good games.

While the offense showed its lack of depth at receiver, the defense showed its potential weak spot at defensive back and linebacker. Van Buren returned to corner for Todd Holt and John Beerworth hurt his ankle as the defensive backfield got nicked up. The linebacking corps was hit, too as John Toner left with an ankle injury in the first half and Brian Saulin had a shoulder injury.

What went right for the defense is the defensive line. "They did their job," MacPherson said. He singled out defensive backs Beerworth, Greg Sprout, and Ron Harris and sophomore linebacker John McLaughlin. "He's going to be a player."

McAleney waived

Ed McAleney, former defensive star for UMass, was one of four rookies to be waived by the Pittsburgh Steelers yesterday as the Super Bowl Champions reduced their squad to the 43-player limit.

Earlier in the day the Steelers cut reserve quarterback Terry Hanratty, and later waived wide receiver Freddie Douglas, and linebackers Charles Hunt and Jim Rosecrans along with McAleney.

McAleney, a defensive end, had been chosen by the Steelers on the eighth round in the college draft last spring. He was All Yankee Conference for three years as a Minuteman starter, and co-captained last year's squad.

Taylor, Thomas, Johnson waived as NFL teams trim rosters to 43...

Terry Hanratty, Otis Taylor, Duane Thomas, Ron Johnson, Jack Snow, Jim Marsalis and John Matuszak were among the more prominent names given their pink slips Monday as most of the National Football League clubs pared their rosters down to the prescribed 43-player limit.

The expansion Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Seattle Seahawks are allowed to retain 49 players for the first two weeks of the season, which begins Sunday.

Hanratty, used sparingly in seven seasons as a backup quarterback for the Pittsburgh Steelers, was put on waivers as coach Chuck Noll elected to stay with rookie Mike Kruczek, a former Boston College star, as his No. 2 signal-caller behind Terry Bradshaw.

Hanratty, a former star at Notre Dame, was the Steelers' No. 2 draft pick in 1969, Noll's first year as head coach. In seven seasons he played in 42 games, starting 17 of them, and completed 159 of 417 passes for 24 touchdowns.

The defending world champion Steelers also placed running back Mike Collier and two rookies on the injured list and traded rookie offensive tackle Ron Coder of Penn State and rookie wide receiver Bob Gaddis to Buffalo for future draft picks.

Taylor, a one-time all-pro wide receiver for Kansas City, was one of 10 players cut by the Houston Oilers. The Oilers also traded linebacker Guy Roberts to Atlanta for guard Dennis Havig and waived nine other players, including running back Robert Holmes, who once played for Kansas City's Super Bowl champions.

Thomas and Johnson, former all-star running backs, were let go by the Dallas Cowboys, along with rookies Charles McShane, an offensive lineman from Cal Lutheran; Bill Farris, a punter from Mississippi; and Jerry Lawrence, a free agent defensive lineman from South Dakota State. The Cowboys also traded kicker Toni Fritsch to San Diego for an undisclosed draft choice.

Thomas, a one time "bad boy" who had been attempting a comeback, had worked hard during training camp despite an early hamstring pull and earned the respect of his teammates and fans alike for his new attitude. But his skills on the field never matched those displayed with Dallas during its Super Bowl years of 1970 and 1971.

Johnson, who signed with Dallas as a free agent this year after playing out his option with the New York Giants, was a seven-year veteran who twice rushed for more than 1,000 yards in a season with the Giants. He previously played with the Cleveland Browns.

Marsalis, a seven-year veteran who starred as a defensive back on Kansas City's championship clubs, was one of 10 players trimmed by the Chiefs. He was attempting a comeback from offseason knee surgery. Veterans cut along with Marsalis were linebacker Tim Kearney, punter Jim McCann and defensive back Don Martin.

Matuszak, a 6-8, 260-pound defensive end, was released by Washington only a month after the Redskins acquired him from Kansas City. Six other players were released by Washington, but the Redskins did obtain offensive guard Dan Nugent from Los Angeles in exchange for two undisclosed draft choices.

Veteran defensive lineman Leo Brooks and 10-year defensive back Jim Tolbert were among eight players cut Monday as the St. Louis Cardinals shaved their roster to the maximum 43 players.

Also placed on irrevocable waivers were wide receivers Randall Burks and Roger Wallace, defensive tackle Larry Jameson, offensive lineman Bob Richards and linebacker Donnie Thomas.

Nettles knits Sox as Yanks win, 6-5

NEW YORK [UPI] — Graig Nettles hit his 25th homer to take over the American League lead and the New York Yankees held off a late Boston rally Monday night to defeat the Red Sox, 6-5, and increase their lead in the American League East to 11¼ games over second place Baltimore.

Nettles' homer, off reliever Tom Murphy, followed Lou Piniella's single and a walk to Chris Chambliss with one out in the fifth. The ball cleared the right centerfield fence, but hit a back wall and rebounded onto the field. The umpires originally called the ball in play, but following an argument by several Yankees, the call was changed to a home run.

New York took a 3-0 lead against loser Rick Jones in the first as newly-acquired Cesar Tovar stroked a bases-loaded double for two runs and Mickey Rivers knocked in another with an infield out.

The Red Sox scored twice in the seventh off winner Doyle Alexander on singles by Carl Yastrzemski, Carlton Fisk and Jim Rice and an error by Rivers. They added three more in the eighth on Rick Burleson's homer and Cecil Cooper's two-run double. A leaping deflection by Piniella in right field prevented Cooper's hit from going over the fence for a game-tying home run.

...while Pats gain Briscoe

FOXBORO, Mass [AP] — The New England Patriots cut nine players and acquired one in a trade Monday as Coach Chuck Fairbanks juggled his roster to start the National Football League season after some disastrous injuries.

Fairbanks traded a future draft choice to the Detroit Lions to get an experienced wide receiver, Marlin Briscoe, eight-year veteran who has worked with Denver, Buffalo, Miami and San Diego in addition to the Lions.

He also waived from the roster wide receiver William Armstead; defensive linemen Mark Ilgenfritz and Perry Brooks; quarterback Tom Shuman; running backs Greg Oliver and Ricky Lake; linebacker Mike McGraw; defensive back Doug Beaudoin and offensive tackle Glenn Hyde.

Two players were placed on the injured reserve list and will be out for the season — defensive end Greg Boyd, who has a badly wrenched knee, and linebacker Rod Shoate.

The team said Shoate, who suffered torn ligaments in his knee in Sunday's final exhibition game against Philadelphia, and tackle Pete Cusick, who also was injured, will undergo surgery Tuesday.

The Patriots reported x-rays indicated Raymond Hamilton suffered only a sprained wrist, not a fracture, and linebacker Sam Hunt and safety Tim Fox sustained only knee bruises.

Freshmen express mixed feelings

New experience brings complaints, compliments

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"What do I like best about UMass?" giggled Joanne Amorosi of Crampton dorm, "The people that I've met here are the best."

This is a typical answer of freshmen as they become accustomed to the way of life at UMass.

When the dormatories opened up last Tuesday, thousands of freshmen began a new way of life different from anything many of them had ever experienced before.

Doug Payson of Kennedy said, "I like the campus and facilities the campus has to offer. The state has done a good job setting up such a program. This is a lot nicer than a lot of the other places I've checked out."

Taking a contrary view, saying the campus does not provide enough was Jeff Wein of Cance, who was angered that the University does not have a hockey rink and that there is hockey only for people on the hockey team.

On the subject of dorms, Mark Howards of Cance was pretty satisfied with them even though he was told previously that Southwest was a bad place to live. He said he found the people are pretty friendly.

Beth Elliot, also of Cance, likes her floor and said, "I don't mind the noise, I find it rather comforting."

The only complaint was registered by Steve Barraclough of Washington Middle who said he liked the dorm rooms the least because they are so small, but thought that he would get a larger room as he became an upper classman.

Many students complained about the campus being as spread out as it is.

Shelia McFadgen of JQA was annoyed at the distances she had to walk to classes.

Brian McNamarra of Kennedy revealed that the campus was so big that he got lost a lot. Most freshmen were confident that given time they would find their way around campus as well as anyone else.

Other complaints ranged from Wendy Kaufman of Butterfield dorm, who was anxious for all the activities such as clubs to start, to Stacy Babineau of Crampton, who said that she did not like classes with huge departments who only had one administrator, with waits of 40 minutes to get a piece of paper signed.

Several students confessed an immediate dislike to the food served in the dining commons, such as Brian Dawe of Patterson.

"The food in the dining commons is the worst thing they could ever have, the food's all starch," he said.

The strangest, but maybe one of the most honest answers to the question, "what do you like least about UMass?" came from Paul Whalen of Sylvan who immediately admitted, "The toilet paper, its like notebook paper."

It hasn't even been a week of classes yet and this student has taken up residence at the library. Face it, the summer is over. (Photo by Jim Webb)

N.Y. mother charged after dog eats her child

NEW YORK [Compiled from wires] — A young welfare mother was released without bail yesterday on charges of leaving her six-day-old daughter alone in a shabby Manhattan apartment with a German Shepherd dog so hungry that it ate the child.

Joanne Beshold was a typical small-town woman looking to "make it big" in the Big Apple. A rape, a pregnancy, and her dreams were apparently shattered Profile, P. 3.

Officials said the year-old dog was not vicious, but had not been fed for several days and attacked the baby out of starvation.

Assistant District Attorney Alan Donleavy argued at the arraignment that Joanne Bashold, 24, be kept in custody to prevent a possible suicide attempt, and that she undergo a mandatory psychiatric examination.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Hyman Solnicker disagreed and released her, but he did order Bashold to submit to a psychiatric examination by Oct. 7, the date of the next court hearing on the matter.

Police said Bashold gave birth to her daughter, Carra, last Thursday at Bellevue Hospital. She told police the baby was the result of a rape when she had not reported. The child was described as a normal, healthy full-term baby girl.

Bashold was released with her baby Sunday night, but the next morning she returned to the hospital to get her belongings.

She left Carra alone in her rundown apartment with the four-month-old, 15-pound dog, which police said had not been fed at least since Bashold entered Bellevue last Thursday.

Bashold told police she left the infant with the dog to guard the baby for an hour-and-a-half Labor Day morning while she returned to Bellevue to retrieve a few meager possessions. Among them was about $20 in cash with which she planned to buy food for herself, the child and the dog.

At the age of six days, the infant was killed and partially eaten by the German Shepherd puppy in a mean, barren $120-a-month two-room apartment in Spanish Harlem.

When Bashold returned to the apartment, police said, she found the bloody remains of her daughter.

Dr. Michael Baden, the city's Assistant Chief Medical Examiner, immediately ordered the dog destroyed and an autopsy performed on it.

"As far as we can tell," Baden said, "the dog was not vicious. It attacked the baby not to kill her but to eat her.

"The dog was in a very malnourished situation," Baden said. "It certainly hadn't been fed while she was in the hospital, and neighbors said it hadn't been fed for even longer."

Police said there was no food in the apartment when they arrived to investigate the death. Bashold told detectives she had been on welfare since she came to New York from Cleveland, Ohio, in June.

Only a rug and a wooden folding chair were in the flat, along with an empty refrigerator. The dog had gone unfed for at least six days.

Bashold appeared yesterday before Judge Solniker on a charge of criminal negligence in connection with the infant's death. She was released without bond to await grand jury action. Her Legal Aid Society lawyer said she would be available for psychiatric examination if such was deemed helpful.

A cousin, Christine Hahn, said she would take care of Bashold for the time being.

Mother and child had been discharged from Bellevue Sunday evening. Bellevue normally does not release patients at such an hour unless they insist. The hospital's property office closes at 5 p.m., thus necessitating Bashold's return the next day to gather her belongings.

"The mother was given no medication for herself on discharge," the hospital said in a statement, "as no need existed. Post-hospitalization check-up visits were scheduled for both mother and child in accordance with hospital practice.

"The hospital is gathering all associated facts at its disposal concerning this case and will cooperate with authorities in this regard."

Southie police, youths clash

BOSTON [Compiled from wires] — Trouble flared in the South Boston section of the city last night on the eve of what officials hoped would be a peaceful beginning of the third year of court-ordered busing.

Four Boston police officers, a black bus driver and three other persons were injured in a rock-throwing melee that apparently started when groups of youths stoned a Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority bus.

Police said two adults and two juveniles were arrested in connection with the incident in the Andrew Square section.

A spokesman for the Boston City Hospital described the injuries as "minor" and said none of the people would be admitted for treatment.

One of the police officers said he was hit in the shoulder with a crowbar, the spokesman said. The others were injured when hit by stones, and the driver was cut by broken glass when a rock shattered a window in his vehicle.

Boston Police said the trouble

Room to Move branches out to serve many needs

By DEBORAH BLANDINO
Collegian Staff

Room to Move, a multi-cultural community counseling and educational center, has become a model for similar programs around the country. According to Allen Gordon, its acting co-ordinator, this is a result of the many changes that have taken place this past year.

"About seven years ago our major focus was on hallucinogenic drugs, and then on hard drugs," said Gordon. "Now our emphasis is centered upon the alcohol problem."

"Room to Move wrote a proposal in collaboration with Health Education and Mental Health to mount an alcohol prevention effort," he said, adding that this was funded by the Division of Alcohol Education Project last year on a three year grant.

Gordon emphasized the fact that Room to Move is now a program which deals with treatment, not prevention, as in previous years.

"Room to Move's three major focal points are drugs, alcohol and personal counseling. The major emphasis will be personal counseling by qualified counselors either in a one-to-one or group setting," said Gordon.

Gordon said workshop series in personal growth and development, and alternative highs (non-drug) such as yoga, meditation, Transcendental Meditation (TM), fantasy trips, are offered. He said the purpose was to teach different ways to deal with enjoyment while getting people to relax.

"Personal crisis counseling, or short term counseling covers a vareity of areas," he said, "which includes loneliness, roommate problems, and sexual identity problems. We don't really get into severe depression cases unless its related to drugs or alcohol."

Gordon said the organization is also an information service.

"We can tell someone where to get help even if we don't deal with the problem. He cited family, pregnancy, housing and abortion as common referral topics.

"We also have use of physicians' desk records to identify drugs, their symptoms, and the effects of combination drug use," he said.

Gordon aid Room to Move has three funding sources — the Undergraduate Student Senate, the Commuter Assembly and also receives funding because ot its affiliation with the University Health Services. The current budget is $25,300.

Gordon admitted to funding problems.

"Orchard Hill used to fund $900 per course per semester, but they changed their priorities to courses concerning racism and sexism. They won't pay us to teach what we want, and we can only teach courses if they're supplemented by funds," he said.

"Room to Move has a paid core staff of five to ten people each year, and each year we pick up new staff volunteers who go through a pre-service training. The following year they replace the core staff," he said.

Anti-nuke teach-in series to begin

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) will sponsor organizational meetings tonight and tomorrow aimed at gaining support for a series of anti-nuclear power teach ins.

The teach-ins are tentatively planned for Oct. 5 and 6. Tonight's meeting, at 7:30 in Campus Center Room 805, and tomorrow night's at the same time at the Jones Library in Amherst are an effort to gain grassroots support fot the teach-ins and the nuclear anti-nuclear power movement.

Diane Woolf, a research assistant at MassPIRG, said that the meetings will inform all interested persons about the current status of the anti-nuke movement.

She said that another domonstration at the Seabrook New Hampshire Nuclear power site will take place on October 23. A large group of persons from the Amherst area participated last month in an anti-nuke demonstration at Seabrook — with more than 100 being arrested.

Woolf added that the meeting will also discuss upcoming hearings on the Montague Nuclear Power site.

The Montague site has been a controversial subject since Samuel Lovejoy topped a weather-testing tower at the site more than two years ago.

It is unclear when those hearings will be taking place. A yet to be completed environmental impact statement must be submitted before the hearings commence.

Woolf said that the nuclear power movement is becoming a national issue since people have become aware of potential dangers in the construction of the plants and the disposing of nuclear waste.

All interested persons are encouraged to attend.

Amherst selectmen to give zoning law 'serious thought'

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

The Town of Amherst zoning by-law that states no more than four unrelated individuals may reside cooperatively in one dwelling unit was the subject of further discussion in town hall last night at the Board of Selectmen meeting.

Late in August UMass Legal Services Office (LSO) attorneys Ellis Landset and Jim Starr requested the Zoning Board of Appeals grant a variance request and thereby permit 11 unrelated individuals to remain living in the house they rent at 47 Carriage Road. The request was denied by the board but the by-law has remained a problematic one for the town.

Two members of the Board of Selectmen, including Chairperson Nancy Eddy, expressed concern that the by-law must be dealt with in some manner. Eddy suggested the town Planning Board, Citizen Review Commission, Board of Health and Landlord-Tenant Committee be called together for a meeting to review the problem and attempt to work out a feasible alternative. LSO attorneys would also be present at the meeting.

Eddy said the meeting would serve as a chance for these groups to "thrash out a proposal for the (Fall) Town Meeting that we all can live with."

Selectperson Diana Romer admitted past efforts to equitably enforce the by-law have been "literally unproductive" and that there is a need for housing not satisfied by apartments, referring to the need for more than four people to live together in one unit in order to cut costs.

Eddy also stated that the distinction between related and unrelated individuals is not the problem to be dealt with but, rather, individual concerns such as noise, health, etc. should be regulated. She stressed, however, that she did not favor outright repeal of the law but alternatives to it.

Contentions brought up at the variance appeal by Landset included indiscriminate enforcement of the by-law, the intent of the by-law when originally written and discriminatory aspects of the by-law. Landset and Starr claimed the by-law discriminated on the basis of lifestyle, economic status and marital status.

The case involving the 11 individuals residing at 47 Carriage Road was not discussed specifically at last night's meeting because a 21-day period for appealing the Zoning Board of Appeal's decision to District Court had not elapsed.

Eddy said she did not want the selectmen discussing a case that might be taken into the courts. Landset said he and Starr will be pursuing the "legal remedies available" to them on behalf of the LSO clients at 47 Carriage Road.

The by-law and the issues surrounding it (health and building codes, noise, property values, etc.) will be discussed tonight at a Citizen Review Commission meeting in town hall.

Eddy said, "We may not come up with anything in time for the Fall Town Meeting, but we'll try."

The deadline for putting articles on the town meeting warrant is September 24. The town meeting will be held October 18.

Eddy stated that the selectmen had reached a consensus that the town staff should "get cracking" on the problem and the Planning Board should give the by-law "serious thought." Landset characterized the discussion as "positive."

21 dogs, 8 cats dead

Animal poisonings investigated by UMass

Belchertown officials announced yesterday that at least 21 dogs have died since a second series of apparent poisonings began last week. About eight cats were also reported dead.

During the spring semester of 1976, 33 dogs and two cats were poisoned in the Belchertown area.

The UMass Department of Veternary and Animal Sciences have begun autopsies of the animals to determine how the poison was administered. Local police say they believe the poison used was Endosulphan, a highly toxic pesticide that they warn could also kill small children.

Last spring, researchers at UMass found that Endosulphan, used to kill beetles and other insects on crops and ornamental trees, had been used to kill the animals.

No suspects have yet been arrested.

Belchertown Dog Warden Wallace Chevalier said some pet owners whose animals were killed last spring had lost replacement pets in the second round of poisonings.

Many of the dead animals had been penned inside yards after first reports of the renewed poisonings, and police speculate that a methodical animal killer placed poison within reach of the animals.

Animals that have eaten the poison show symptoms of sudden convulsions and vomiting, followed by a painful death.

The pesticide is readily available through farm stores and agricultural suppliers. A 50 pound bag of endosulfan powder sells for about $12.

As of yet, there is no known antidote for the pesticide. According to the Pesticide Program Supervisor for the State Pesticide Board, one should induce vomiting and try to limit its absorbtion into the bloodstream.

Anyone caught and convicted of poisoning the animals faces a maximum fine of $500 or a year in jail for each animal.

Last spring only three of the 33 dogs poisoned survived. Two were treated by a veternarian.

Police in Granby, Westhampton and Southhampton reported that mysterious dog deaths in those communities were believed linked to the Belchertown deaths. UMass scientists are also checking the carcasses of these animals to determine the cause of death.

GSEU petition hearing delayed until October

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

A shortage of state stenographers has forced a delay until late October of a Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission hearing on the Graduate Student Employees Union petition for recognition as a collective bargaining agent.

The hearing was originally scheduled for Sept. 15. It could have been held in September despite the shortage if the union was willing to pay $30 per day for a stenographer, but it could not afford to do so, union Chairperson Michael D. Forster said yesterday. The union had requested the hearing be held as scheduled, with the University picking up the tab for their own stenographer and the union's. The University refused, however.

The University had filed a motion asking dismissal of the union's petition on the grounds that graduate student employees are primarily students and they are "superfluous" as employees, according to Forster. The union in turn filed a motion to strike the University's motion.

Forster said the union is now "collecting data to make the strongest case possible". He said the union will attempt to show graduate employees are "in fact, essential." He declined to go into specifics, claiming that by doing so the union's case might be weakened.

The union has well over 30 per cent of graduate employees signed up as members, Forster claims, and will now begin work on organizational intrastructure along with further recruitment of graduate employees.

Attempts will be made to sit a council of union stewards representing all academic departments. Forster said the first council meeting would probably be next week whether or not all departments are represented.

The first general membership meeting for the union will take place at the end of the month, Forster said, although no definite date is set.

The union will have a table set up on the floor of the Campus Center concourse starting next week and will be selling union T-shirts. Forster said work will continue to be done through both departments and broader areas, for example, hard sciences, humanities, social sciences, etc., in order to maintain a "cross-fertilization of ideas," Forster continued.

The union was first created in November, 1975 as an attempt to organize the approximately 1900 graduate student employees into a bargaining unit.

Dream shattered in Big Apple

NEW YORK [AP] — The call crackling over the police radio on a sunny Labor Day morning was a 1054 — somebody in need of medical attention. As Patrolmen Bill Connolly and Al Dwyer headed toward the Spanish Harlem address, their car radio sounded anew, informing them that in one of the most modern cities in the world, a child had been eaten by a dog.

"I was praying that the child was still alive and that we could help it," said Connolly.

His hopes vanished when he and Dwyer dashed up six flights of tenement stairs and knocked on the door of Apartment 26. The only response was the whimper of a dog behind the locked door. Moments later, 24-year-old Joanne Bashold arrived, after having telephoned from outside for police help.

"What happened?" the policemen asked her.

"The dog ate my baby," replied the brown-haired, 5-feet-2 woman, clad in green sweater, faded blue jeans and furry bedroom slippers.

"Why did you leave the baby there?"

"I left the baby on the floor with the dog to protect it," Bashold told the officers.

Bashold and her baby were discharged Sunday night. She brought it back to her apartment on East 105th Street, in what police termed the worst block in the 23rd Precinct.

The tenement is atop a bodega, a Spanish general store, which blasts Hispanic music at all hours. The hallways were filthy, with dried human excrement in corners, the acrid smell of urine heavy throughout the building.

Bashold, herself not of Spanish extraction, had lived there three months — on welfare. On her first night home from the hospital, she had slept with the baby on the rug on the floor.

Like thousands of small-town women before, Joanne Bashold came to New York from a suburban community to seek her fortune, her mother recalls. That was three years ago; Joanne was 21 at the time.

Last June, whatever dreams she may have harbored shattered, Joanne applied for welfare, stating she was six months pregnant. Unmarried, she said she did not know who the unborn child's father was.

New York City has more than 1.1 million persons on relief, and annually spends more than $1 billion on them. Joanne became a statistic with the others, allotted $270 a month, $50 more than a single recipient gets. The extra money was to help her prepare for the birth of her child.

She never asked for more, never appeared again at the welfare office, made known no special need for additional assistance.

"Quite frankly," said a welfare department spokesperson, "there probably were other resources open to her that we would have provided had we been made known of special needs."

In Kirkland, Ohio, Bashold's parents said she called them several times last week to express her happiness over the birth of her daughter — a birth that came as a surprise to the parents.

Her father, J.P. Bashold, said his daughter asked whether he thought her dog might be jealous of the new baby. The parents also owned a German Shepherd.

The elder Basholds said Joanne told them she planned to come home next month to show them the baby. Then she called Monday to inform them of the infant's death.

"She was in shock, stunned," Mrs. Bashold recalled. "I was horrified. She wasn't too talkative."

One of the police officers assigned to the case, Patrolman Bill Connolly, angrily blamed the infant's death on the negligence of welfare workers, whom he described as "a bunch of bleeding hearts, bunch of creeps, phonies."

Peter Barrett, a spokesperson for the welfare department, said in an interview that prior to Bashold's acceptance as a relief client, she was sent to Bellevue for medical examination and verification of her pregnancy.

"No special needs or requests for services were given," Barrett said. "There were no health problems that were evident."

Barrett was asked if there are any special things a new mother gets routinely.

"Well," he replied, "as a matter of routine she would be referred to Bellevue and that would be a matter between Bellevue and the patient and most likely her expenses would be picked up by Medicaid.

"The record shows no special needs, no health problems, no evidence of drugs, mental illness or child abuse. And the bottom line is that there was no cause to suspect any unusual circumstances. She fits a profile of a welfare client that is quite normal given the circumstances of people in need.

"It's against the law for a caseworker to visit a client's home because of the civil liberties issue, unless the client requests it. Now after her hospitalization or before she could have come into a center — we haven't seen her since June 28 — and said, 'Look, I'm down on my luck. I've spent money getting ready to have the baby, or whatever. I need a social worker to come visit me and look at my surroundings and see what my needs are' ... a caseworker could have recommended more furniture."

But Joanne Bashold, alone and pregnant in her dismal apartment on East 105th Street, kept her own counsel, made no complaint, voiced no request.

"She was a quiet girl," remembers her mother back in Ohio.

End of 60's protests spells ROTC revival

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

The Army ROTC program on campus, a major target of protest during the Vietnam War, is enjoying a more receptive climate here today and is beginning to flourish once again.

Enrollment in the Reserve Officers Training Corp at the university has been on the rise since 1973, after a low period in the early 70's when, across the nation, the military establishment suffered embarrasingly from its role in Vietnam.

In 1968, total enrollment in the program numbered 384 students. Three years ago, however, enrollment in the program was down to a low of 59 students. Last year the number climbed to 90 and is still on the upswing.

Captain Michael Kelly of the University unit said people have taken a new look at ROTC, and because of "resiliency" in the program, or its flexibility, it has "bounced-back".

Captain Kelly said that ROTC was one of many institutions "bearing the brunt of progress" made by the political protests of the late 60's and early 70's.

Army Col. Baxter M. Bullock, professor of military science and commander of the campus Army ROTC unit here, said that in the early part of the decade there was resentment being expressed against the military establishment, and that many government institutions were "lambasted" for the war in Vietnam.

"Today," Bullock said, "there no longer is that resentment."

Although ROTC enrollment figures are not yet definite for this semester because of the present add-drop period and the influx of new students, it is anticipated that the number will exceed last year's figure.

There nas been in recent years a growing nation-wide trend toward enlistment in the armed forces, particularly by recent high school graduates who choose the military as an alternative to college.

The trend reflects the current economic slump and the diminishing job markets as more people seek the financial security, free job training, and career opportunities found in military life. Army ROTC offers the same, if not greater, career security as found in the regular military.

Maj. Dan Farmer, assistant professor of military science, said, "I don't like to use it as an explanation," but the economy plays an "overwhelming role" in the recent surge of ROTC enrollment.

Maj. Farmer said there was once a time when people felt a strong obligation to serve for their country, but that is no longer true.

"That has passed," he said, "but still, a lot of people feel a strong sense of patriotism. They just no longer feel they owe some sort of debt."

I think many people join because there is a high element of adventure. It offers a chance to see the world.

"ROTC teaches leadership. Studetts who choose the program are thrown into it, and have to learn to accept and deal with leadership roles very quickly," he said.

To become a commissioned officer through the ROTC program, students must maintain the same academic standards required to be in "good-standing" at the University, and must receive their degrees. Grade point averages of students currently in the program range from 2.0 to 3.95.

The army, Kelly said, "has to teach people that we care about people as individuals."

erupted when youths hurled stones at the bus. MBTA police went to the aid of the driver and passengers, and were themselves stoned. Boston police offering their assistance also became targets.

The crowds were quickly dispersed as police reinforcements moved in but rock-throwing incidents continued throughout the area.

Earlier in the evening, a motorcade wound through the streets of South Boston honking their horns in an anti-busing protest.

Police said there was no trouble associated with the motorcade itself, although one driver was arrested for motor vehicle law violations. But the fracas apparently erupted after the motorcade reached Andrew Square and the participants were joined by groups of youths on foot.

More than 100 police reinforcements were sent to the area.

Earlier yesterday officials predicted a calm opening of schools today and said police presence in the streets and classrooms would be reduced.

In the city's Charlestown section, another center of anti-busing sentiment, four persons were arrested for throwing rocks at patrolling police cars. No injuries were reported.

Boston officials said police would be on the streets and in reserve around the city's most troubled schools when classes start today but they remained hopeful in predicting calm.

Vietnam 'cynical'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — State Department officials, while pleased that the Vietnamese have supplied any information about Americans listed as missing, describe the handing over of only 12 names as a "cynical act designed for political purposes."

An analysis of the list of 12 names leads the officials to conclude that the Vietnamese have had this information and were withholding it, for at least ten years. State Department officials believe that the motive for releasing the dozen names now is directly linked to the forthcoming application of Vietnam for membership in the United Nations.

U.S. officials have indicated that the United States will veto the U.N. application until there is a full accounting of the American missing in action.

WASHINGTON (AP) — John D. Ehrlichman, once one of Richard M. Nixon's top presidential sides, was ordered yesterday to begin serving a 20-month prison sentence on Sept. 17 for his role in the White House plumbers' case.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gessell ordered Ehrlichman to report to the federal prison camp at Safford, Ariz., on or before that date. The 10-day period to Sept. 17 was granted to allow Ehrlichman to get his affairs in order.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Trial status poses question in Maine

BIDDEFORD, Maine [AP] — A 17-year-old youth who has been apprehended in connection with a shooting spree here turns 18 today, raising the question of whether the court will consider him a juvenile or not. Police said the youth was taken into custody shortly before midnight Monday after he held off some 30 law enforcement officers for about an hour, peppering the ground below his second floor apartment with bullets.

No one was injured in the incident, and the youth surrendered when he was overcome by tear gas, police said.

The youth, whose name was not released because of his juvenile status, turns 18 today, according to Capt. Joseph Beal. The Biddeford police officer said it would be up to the court to decide whether the youth would be tried as an adult.

The youth, who is being held at the Cumberland County Jail, is scheduled to appear in Biddeford District Court on Thursday.

Superior Court judge convicted

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. [UPI] — Samuel J. Tedesco, 60, the first sitting Superior Court judge convicted of a felony in state history, is scheduled to be sentenced today by Superior Court Judge Thomas J. O'Sullivan.

Tedesco was convicted June 29 of notarizing a false signature on a liquor permit for a country club partly owned by his family. The country club was once considered as a site for a greyhound race track.

His sentencing was postponed from yesterday because of a death in the family of the prosecutor, Chief State's Attorney Joseph T. Gormley. Tedesco could be jailed for three years, fined $1,000 and removed from the bench.

The former Democratic lieutenant governor was "quite shocked" when the jury, after deliberating five hours, found him guilty, according to his lawyer, state Sen. Salvatore DePiano, D-Bridgeport.

Tedesco was charged with falsely notarizing the 1975 liquor permit application of the Candlewood Valley Country Club in New Milford.

octor sued for 'defective' valve

NEW YORK [UPI] — A $31 million malpractice suit was filed in U.S. District Court yesterday by a woman who charged Houston heart surgeon Denton A. Cooley with negligence for installing a defective artificial valve in her heart.

The suit was filed by Mrs. Toby T. Dresdner, 37, Valley Stream, Long Island, and named as codefendants St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital of Houston, Cutter Laboratories, Berkeley, Calif., manufacturer of the valve, and Dr. Robert D. Leachman, an associate of Cooley.

The complaint alleged that in 1969 Cooley implanted in Mrs. Dresdner the Wada-Cutter Micro valve. In 1975, Mrs. Dresdner said, she experienced symptoms similar to those which she had before the valve was implanted.

She said several days after talking to local doctors, she received a letter, dated April 1, 1975, from Cooley in which the doctor said he had received reports of complications occurring three to five years after implantation of the Wada-Cutter valve.

"We must recommend that you return to the Texas Heart Institute in the near future for replacement with a new valve with more favorable wear characteristics," the letter said.

Attorneys for Mrs. Dresdner said Cutter Laboratories had notified Cooley and other doctors that of 18 persons implanted with the valve there had been "six sudden late deaths." In two of these deaths, autopsies disclosed a defect in the valve, the attorneys said. Autopsies were not performed on the other four.

Mrs. Dresdner returned to Houston July 14, 1975, and tests indicated that her valve had become defective. On July 17, the defective valve was removed and a new valve, the Cooley-Cutter Valve, was implanted.

U.S. military to benefit from downed Soviet jet

WASHINGTON [AP] — U.S. military sources said yesterday they expect an intelligence bonanza from examination of the first advanced Soviet MIG25 jet fighter to land within reach of U.S. Air Force experts.

The sources said American technical intelligence specialists have been all over a MIG25 "Foxbat" interceptor since it was flown to northern Japan Monday by a defecting Russian air force pilot.

Of special interest to U.S. technicians is the radar used by the Russians to guide the missiles that the Foxbat would fire at U.S. fighters such as the F15 in an air battle.

American specialists also are reportedly gathering vital first-hand information on the MIG25's twin turbojet engines, its airframe design and construction. Officially, the United States avoided saying whether Japanese authorities had allowed U.S. experts access to the MIG25, which has been described as the fastest weapons-carrying warplane in the world.

Pentagon spokesman Alan Woods told a briefing "I'm sure we'd be interested," but "it is up to the Japanese to decide who is going to be looking at it."

9Other sources indicated the United States wants to spare its ally, Japan, any diplomatic difficulties with the Soviet Union.

Pentagon officials anticipate the Japanese will return the MIG25 to Russia. The pilot reportedly has requested asylum in the United States, and U.S. officials have said he would be welcomed here.

The MIG25 has been a source of concern to U.S. military officials since it demonstrated in the early 1970s its ability to fly faster than 2,000 miles per hour at altitudes of 80,000 feet and above.

A reconnaissance version of the Foxbat drew special attention several years ago when Israeli-piloted F4 Phantom jet fighters tried unsuccessfully to intercept Soviet-piloted MIG25s flying over the Sinai. Those MIGs were based in Egypt at that time, but the Russians have since withdrawn them.

If they'd had their preference, U.S. technicians probably would have preferred getting their hands on the reconnaissance version of the MIG25 because that would have given them an opportunity to study sophisticated cameras, sensors and "black box" intelligence-gathering electronic equipment now in use in Russia's most advanced surveillance planes.

'A cause for concern'...

...nuclear waste

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Government management of hazardous nuclear waste is faulty and "a cause for concern," a report prepared for the U.S. energy research agency warned yesterday.

The report urged more administrative and policy reforms, saying many problems can be solved but that the last chance for such corrective action may be at hand.

Radioactive wastes that must be sealed away from mankind and the environment for thousands or even millions of years already are "an unavoidable consequence of our nuclear age," the report said.

It said approximately half a million tons of highly radioactive waste and millions of cubic feet of less dangerous "low level" atomic debris — all but a fraction of it produced during three decades of nuclear weapon programs — must be dealt with immediately.

The report was prepared for the Energy Research and Development Administration by Mason Willrich, a University of Virginia law professor who worked on it this summer at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's energy laboratory. A Sept. 1 draft of the report was obtained and released yesterday by consumer activist Ralph Nader.

"We are concerned about radioactive waste because it is a potential radiological hazard to man and other and forms of life," the report said.

"If a human being is exposed to excessive amounts of radiation, depending on the circumstances, the harmful effects may be immediate death, life shortened by radiation-induced cancer, radiation-induced genetic change which may affect subsequent generations, or temporary ill health followed by complete recovery."

That, the report said, is why it is so important to find effective ways of storing such wastes as plutonium, which loses only half its radioactivity in 24,000 years.

"Thus far, the U.S. government's record of management has been marred in a sufficient number of instances to be a cause of concern," the report said.

It said 18 leaks from high level waste storage tanks at Hanford, Wash., have poured more than 430,000 gallons of waste into the ground. The hazard there "will remain for hundreds of thousands of years," it said, even though no deaths or injuries have been reported so far.

The report's key recommendation was that a national radioactive waste authority be established to take over all management of nuclear garbage.

Medical costs spotlighted

WASHINGTON [AP] — The government's new five-year health plan released yesterday places top priority on controlling runaway medical costs, and de-emphasizes last year's proposal to boost liquor and cigarette taxes as a preventative health measure.

The report, "Forward Plan for Health," represents the U.S. Public Health Service's blueprint for tackling major health problems during 1978-82.

The major concern is health care costs, which rose 300 per cent during the last decade to $118.5 billion last year, said Dr. Theodore Cooper, assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

"Until costs can be contained, federal policy making in health will be dominated by these basic economic considerations," Cooper said. "Proposed solutions must address the total health care system, not merely a major component or program in that system."

The new five-year plan, the third in a series, calls for "major attack on cost escalation as the factor now driving national health policy." It emphasizes greater use of preventive services, such a spublic immunization programs, improved quality of care and more research on medical malpractice.

The report makes mention, without specifically endorsing proposals advanced last year to restrict liquor advertisements and boost liquor taxes and to increase taxes on cigarettes high in tar and nicotine.

The Public Health Service said, however, that it continues to support efforts authorizing the Federal Trade Commission, which is not part of HEW, to set maximum tar and nicotine limits.

Death toll rises as Kissinger negotiates

CAPE TOWN, South Africa [UPI] — Thousands of colored rioters, screaming "We want blood!" yesterday battled police in white areas and in ghettoes. Police opened fire on the rampaging mobs, killing a black and a colored man to bring the death toll in nearly three months of racial strife to 300.

Blacks and coloreds, the official South African designation for persons of mixed race, formed human waves to attack police with stones and bottles in all-white areas of Cape Town and segregated enclaves near Cape Town and Johannesburg.

In one incident police turned on whites who booed when they clubbed colored rioters.

Police fired volley after volley of tear gas, sending huge clouds of the burning gas over the city, and blasted the mobs with buckshot. Then, when the rioters regrouped and charged again, opened fire.

At the same time Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in Hamburg, Germany said he is ready to conduct a shuttle diplomacy mission to try to avert a bloodbath in southern Africa pending an invitation from black leaders.

But a senior U.S. official said Kissinger had already received such an invitation from Tanzania's foreign minister and "it looks as if we are going."

The U.S. official told reporters it was all but certain Kissinger would return to Washington last night, consult with President Ford and leave for Africa no later than Monday.

For his part, Kissinger told a news conference, "I cannot at this point make it definite." He said he awaits a formal invitation from African leaders who completed a summit meeting in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania earlier yesterday.

"I would be prepared, if the conditions are right, to leave some time next week," Kissinger told the news conference.

Kissinger emphasized that he first wanted a report from Dar es Salaam from Assistant Secretary of State William Schaufele, who was in the Tanzanian capital.

Asked about the significance of his African diplomacy on the forthcoming election in which President Ford faces Jimmy Carter, who boosts of his black support, Kissinger said: "The mission has no domestic political significance."

The significance of U.S. action in southern Africa was an attempt to bring about through negotiation guaranteed "majority rule, minority rights and economic progress" for the peoples of the area.

Fighting increases in Lebanon halting Arab League peace efforts

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Escalated fighting in Beirut and the Lebanese countryside brought Arab League peace efforts to a standstill yesterday and Christian leaders said only further Syrian intervention could end the war.

Escalating artillery duels in the rugged mountains northeast of Beirut threatened to explode into a long-feared "battle of the mountains."

A leftist newspaper said both Moslem and Christian militias had thrown "more sophisticated and more deadly weapons, including missiles, into the spreading fight for the peaks that mark the eastern frontier of Christian-held territory.

Leftist and rightist military communiques reported heavy fighting in central Beirut, the city's front-line southern suburbs and around the besieged leftist city of Tripoli in the north.

Volleys of mortar shells burst without warning on the "green line" separating Moslem and Christian Beirut and sniper fire raked the single street joining the two sides, forcing the Arab League peace keeping troops guarding their small slice of no-man's land to close the crossing for several hours.

As a result, rightist chiefs postponed indefinitely talks on the League's latest peace plan with Arab League mediator Hassan Sabry el Kholy. But Kholy's negotiations had already run aground on the two sides' unwillingness to compromise and agree on joint withdrawals from the mountains.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — With a mariachi band blaring music in the background, Mexico President Luis Echeverria yesterday opened a two-day visit aimed at easing tensions and bolstering trade between the United States and his country.

Echeverria's ceremonial purpose was to snip the ribbon opening MexFair 76, his country's largest trade exhibit in history. He hoped the fair would help erase a trade deficit with the United States which has resulted in Mexico buying $5.1 billion worth of U.S. goods while selling only $2.1 billion worth of goods on this side of the border.

Most of his schedule was social and private.

Carter focuses on 'morality' during Conn. stop

GROTON, Conn. [UPI] — Jimmy Carter, campaigning in the populous Northeast, yesterday compared "the disgraceful activities of the FBI" to street violence and said Director Clarence Kelley should be fired for accepting gifts.

The Democratic presidential candidate pursued the twin themes of morality in government and lack of sensitivity in the Ford White House during campaign stops in New York City and at a Groton, Conn., defense plant.

"Knowing what I know now, yes, I would have fired him," Carter said in answer to a question about FBI Director Kelley.

When pressed by reporters at Trumbull Airport in Groton, Carter said: "I think the head of the FBI ought to be reasonably clear of any allegations that any law or any propriety has ever been violated. Based on the information that has been released, I would replace Mr. Kelley."

Carter brought up President Ford" decision to retain Kelley, despite disclosures that the FBI director accepted gifts from employes, when he addressed about 1,200 persons at Brooklyn College.

Asked what could be done about street violence, Carter said the No. 1 cause of crime was unemployment and hinted this would be a priority in his administration.

"Another thing we can do to hold down crime is to set an example in our law enforcement agencies," he said.

"There has been a great contribution to the rise of crime in our country because of Watergate, the CIA revelations and the disgraceful activities of the FBI.

"I think the director of the FBI ought to be as pure as Caesar's wife. We shouldn't have federal funds given to decorate his house."

Kelley paid for work done on his home by FBI workers, and after a report from Attorney General Edward Levi, Ford said he saw no reason to dismiss Kelley over the incident.

Carter began the campaign day at a Manhattan subway station, where he shook a few hands, accepted a rose from a florist and answered questions from a surging group of reporters.

"Everything the government does ought to be designed to bring families together and not separate them," he said.

Police estimated 8,000 persons turned out to watch Carter arrive at the General Dynamics Electric Boat Division in Groton.

Carter, who worked on nuclear subs as a Navy officer, urged a strong national defense and said the words "national security" were "used to cover up crime" Nixon administration

Authorities investigating Greenfield bomb plantings

GREENFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Authorities began investigating two bomb plantings yesterday one at a bank, the other in a mailbox — plus a suspicious fire.

Police said the bomb incidents appeared to be related, but were uncertain whether they were linked with the fire.

A blast before dawn tore apart a mail collection box on the sidewalk in front of the town's post office, about 30 minutes before a two-alarm fire destroyed a nearly completed wood frame professional office building. Later in the morning, authorities discovered a bomb planted in the night depository vault of a branch bank, and explosives experts successfully removed it before any damage occurred.

No one claimed responsibility for any of the incidents, police said. A large amount of cash left over the weekend in the night depository of the Country Bank was not taken by burglars who left the bomb, investigators said.

The fire that destroyed a new building scheduled for occupancy by two doctors may have been set, said Fire Chief Clayton Cromack.

It occurred near the post office, where an explosion scattered debris over a block-long area at about 3 a.m. Officials recovered pieces of a battery and detonator believed to be from the bomb.

At the bank, telephone and alarm lines were cut and police said the bomb apparently was supposed to be triggered by means other than a timer.

Quiet expected as doors open in Boston schools

BOSTON [AP] — A large force of police will be on the streets and in reserve around Boston's most troubled schools Wednesday, though officials cautiously predict calm when classes resume for the third year of court-ordered integration.

Unlike the past two years, there has been little buildup of antibusing activity in the poor white neighborhoods where past opening days have been disrupted by demonstrations and occasional violence.

"We share a sense that this year will be quieter than the preceding years," Mayor Kevin H. White said at a news conference yesterday.

"There is a mood in the city of getting the bitterness and tension of the past two openings behind us," he said. "So we are responding with less police presence. But if somebody wants to challenge us, we are prepared to respond with as much or more force than in past years."

Last fall, about 2,000 police were assigned to keep order during the opening days. Though this year there will be somewhat fewer, police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia said, "We hope to keep low visibility, but we'll have great numbers of officers available."

This year's integration program is almost identical to the one last fall. About 25,000 of the 75,000 public school children are scheduled to ride buses across the city.

The school system is 47 per cent white, 41 per cent black and the rest Hispanic and Asian. The projected enrollment is about 1,000 pupils fewer than last year's, but this is the smallest drop since integration began in 1974.

Tomorrow, police plan their strongest security at three high schools where there has been frequent trouble in the past — South Boston, Charlestown and Hyde Park. Only South Boston High, however, will have uniformed police inside the school.

Besides city police, about 300 state and metropolitan officers will be stationed at schools.

"We're hoping that we won't have any difficulties anywhere," said Charles V. Berry, state secretary of public safety.

"We're not gearing up for the same kind of thing we did last year. But we want some visibility to let people know we're around."

Federal marshals will also be at the three high schools to watch for civil rights violations. Some marshals will be sent in to help the resident Boston force.

Seven indicted for illegal baby selling

HACKENSACK, N.J. [UPI] — A county grand jury yesterday indicted seven persons, including five attorneys, on charges of arranging the sale of infant babies to adoptive parents in a five-state network.

Bergen County Prosecutor Joseph Woodcock said the indictments were the result of a 10-month investigation by authorities in New Jersey, New York, Illinois, Michigan and California.

Edward Terner, an attorney in West Orange, N.J., was named in four of the indictments, which allege eight white babies were sold between August, 1972, and January, 1975, to couples who paid fees of up to $9,100 for the adoption.

The other attorneys named were Harry D. Cohen, Chicago; J. George Ivler, Paterson, N.J.; Bernard Lampear, Southfield, Mich; and Harold Rosenstein, New York.

Ivler's wife, Enid, and Robert Ackerman, a landlord in Port Murray, N.J. were also named in a two-count indictment.

The indictments charge that Cohen and Turner unlawfully assisted in the placement of infant children, contrary to statutes of New Jersey which prohibit placing a child into the home of anyone but a brother, or sister of the natural mother.

"All I'm prepared to say is that these people know each other and do business," Woodcock said.

"I won't characterize this as a ring. In some cases the adoptive parents were New Yorkers and in others they were New Jersey residents," he said.

The first count of the indictment charges Cohen and Terner with arranging th sale of three babies for $4,800, $5,550 and $8,000 to adoptive parents. Another count charges they received $9,100 for placement of another child.

None of the adoptive parents is named in the indictment.

Yale president defends 'elitism'

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Yale University President Kingman Brewster Jr. yesterday incoming freshmen — including Ronald Reagan Jr. and Kate Udall — that a liberal arts education may be elitist.

"Access to it is limited, hopefully rationed on the merits, not on the basis of race, creed, color or financial or social background... Selectivity on almost any objective basis can't avoid the misplaced accusation of elitism," he said.

But he defended the idea of a liberal arts education, saying, "at its best a liberal education does seem to develop the qualities of mind, judgment and spirit which have something to do with leadership."

Brewster told the 1,306 members of the Class of 1980 to ignore the critics — those who would "play God and decide how many and who should be educated for what" — and "enjoy the privilege of a liberal college education."

The class includes 513 women, the most since Yale went coed in 1969.

Among them was Miss Udall, daughter of Arizona Rep. Morriss Udall, an early challenger for the Democratic presidential nomination. Another presidential aspirant, former California Gov. Ronald Reagan, enrolled his son in the class. Neither Reagan nor Udall was at opening day ceremonies.

In his welcoming address, Brewster noted that the economic hardships of the recent recession have encouraged students to think of their education in terms of the jobs available after graduation.

"But I sometimes wonder whether the pendulum has swung a bit too far in the past few years, from the reckless abandon of the spoiled generation of the 60s to the calculating caution of the rationed generation of the 70s."

Brewster told the freshmen not to "take counsel of your fears."

"The trouble with letting fear be your lodestars is that it leads to an insurance mentality. How to minimize your risks becomes your pre-occupation."

University officials said they planned no special security precautions because of the presence of the politicians' children. But uniformed police officers were added because of several rapes and other attacks on students last year.

Girl found following six month abduction

PORT MOODY, Canada [UPI] — A 13-year-old girl, found starved and weak in a dungeon beneath a neighbor's garage where she was kept for six months, told her abductor in a note she knew God would free her, police said yesterday.

A 43-year-old man, whom police said was well known to the girl and her family, was arrested and was expected to face charges of kidnaping and rape. His home had been searched several times following her disappearance, police said, but the dungeon-originally built as an air-raid shelter beneath the garage — was not found.

Police said the girl, Abby Drover, had been frequently abused during her ordeal and was sometimes left alone for as long as two weeks in the 10-by-7 foot room 10 feet underground. So weak she could hardly walk, she was taken to a hospital for treatment and an emotional reunion with her family and then her mother took her and her two sisters into seclusion.

In a note scrawled on pink letter paper to the kidnaper while she was a prisoner, the girl wrote, "God has helped me so far and He will help me to the finish. God works in mysterious ways but what He does is right."

The girl disappeared on her way to school March 10. An intensive search of the area, about 13 miles east of Vancouver, failed to find her. Fears were expressed she had been murdered.

Sunday night two uniformed police officers were called to a house near the girl's home following a domestic complaint.

They saw a man coming out of a hole in the floor of a garage behind the house. When they investigated, they found the girl in the tiny chamber underneath. The dugout also contained a bed and chains.

"She was in a pitiful state physically," the police spokesman said. "But she was very alert mentally — we were amazed at her mental condition."

Port Moody Police Chief Len McCabe said the only access to her dungeon was through a trap door under a cupboard.

"The room was made of cement bl[illegible] were no windows and th[illegible] told it was built as an air raid shelter," he said. "There was a portable toilet in there but for long periods there wasn't anyone around to empty it.

"She was left alone for periods up to two weeks over these months.

"The only food she was given was things like chocolate bars, occasionally some milk — nothing more substantial than that," the police chief said.

"She was a thin little girl to start with and she lost at least 15 pounds," he said. "But she didn't appear to give up hope that she would be found."

The first two policemen on the scene, he said, only discovered her "when they heard her whimpering in the hole.

"She looked very feeble, dehydrated, very pathetic. When she was abducted, she had short curly hair. But now it's grown past her shoulders.

Ex-Beatle guilty of plagiarizing

NEW YORK [UPI] — Former Beatle George Harrison was found guilty yesterday of "subconsciously" plagiarizing the 1962 John Mack tune "He's So Fine" for Harrison's 1970 hit record, "My Sweet Lord."

Federal Judge Richard Owen, a composer himself, ruled that Harrison was guilty of copyright infringement, although the judge concluded, "I do not believe he did so deliberately."

Owen scheduled Nov. 8 for trial on the issue of damages in the lawsuit brought against Harrison by Bright Tunes Music Corp., which owns the copyright to "He's So Fine."

"It is clear," the judge said, "that 'My Sweet Lord' is the very same song as 'He's So Fine.' This is, under the law, infringement of copyright and is no less so even though subconsciously accomplished."

"He's So Fine" was one of the top hits in England in 1963, Owen said. Years later Harrison began putting together his "My Sweet Lord" during a singing engagement in Copenhagen, Owen said, and finished it in London.

The song was issued by Apple Records, the Beatles' recording company.

Owen said it was apparent from the trial evidence that Harrison was not conscious of the fact he was plagiarizing the theme of "He's So Fine."

Harrison's subconscious mind, Owen said, "knew this combination of sounds would work because it already had worked in a song his conscious mind did not remember."

Communist Party not represented on Maine ballot

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — A Superior Court judge upheld yesterday the state's refusal to list the Communist Party's presidential candidate on Maine's Nov. 2 general election ballot.

Justice Sumner Goffin ruled that Secretary of State Mark Gartley acted within the law last month in determining that the party had failed to collect enough voter signatures to place the names of presidential nominee Gus Hall and running mate Jarvis Tyner on the ballot.

Following Goffin's ruling, an attorney for the Communist Party said its only apparent option is to mount a write-in campaign on behalf of the Hall-Tyner ticket.

"Right now, it seems our only available remedy is a political remedy, a write-in campaign," said attorney Gary Wood of Portland.

Goffin's findings resulted from a Communist Party civil suit which questioned the breadth of the petition challenge posed by State Rep. Louis Jalbert, D-Lewiston.

Jalbert had contested the 13,418 signatures on the Communist petitions, and presented evidence maintaining that 4,031 names were those of non registered voters. Just under 11,000 names are needed for listing on the ballot.

Gartley's decision not to list the Communist ticket was made after a review of the evidence and a public hearing. Goffin found that the hearing was proper and did not violate due process.

According to the judge's ruling, the attorneys for the Communist Party claimed that Jalbert's challenge was based solely on the allegation that signatures had been obtained under false pretenses. The attorneys said the allegation of fraud was used to pave the way for an extensive examination of the petitions.

Goffin's five-page ruling noted, however, that the challenge also cited questions involving voter residence, registration, proper signature and correct address.

Join the 'rush'

By KATHY MOORE

In the past two decades there have been countless research reports concerning what is commonly referred to as "students and the college experience". Most stress the psychological importance of interaction with peers and the individual's sense of "belonging". It has been shown that a failure to fulfill these basic needs may interfere with the individual's educational development.

Large schools such as UMass are not tailored to the needs of the individual. Due to its vast enrollment, students are often forced to compete for living space, parking, thinking and studying space.

These are some of the various reasons why fraternities and sororities have been making a national comeback in the past few years.

Fraternities and sororities attempt to replace the individuals sense of becoming "just an I.D. number" with a sense of belonging. Additional attractions include practical benefits such as good food, effective security, and lasting friendships.

Students generally find that dorms for the most part serve as a place to store one's belongings, to study, and to sleep. An immense and frequent turnover of residents tends to promote an impersonal atmosphere and a general lack of trust between students. In addition, students often have little or no choice as to where and with whom they live.

These problems rarely arise in Greek organizations because members are chosen by mutual selection. There is a sspecial period at the onset of each semester designated for "rush". During this time anyone interested in fraternities or sororities is offered the opportunity to see the Greek system from the inside. Tours of the various houses are given as well as social functions designed for meeting the current members.

Rushing helps the individual who is interested in the Greek Area to find the fraternity or sorority that best suits him-her. It is also a time when students are afforded the chance to find out more about the Greek System without feeling pressured into making personal commitments.

This semester "rush" begins Saturday, September 11 for sororities and Monday, September 13 for fraternities. Interested individuals should submit their name and-or rush application to 203 Hampshire House by Friday, September 10.

Kathy Moore is a Collegian Guest Commentator.

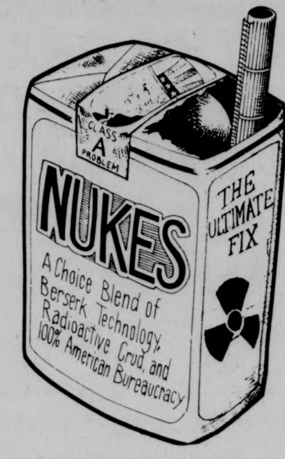
Organizing against nukes

Given the information people are fed from the status-quo media, it is easy to understand why most people care little about the dangers posed by the nuclear power industry.

Not everyone has sat back quietly while nuclear plant monstrosities are constructed, however. In Seabrook, N.H. recently, some 180 citizens were arrested after non-violently occupying the site of a nuke plant. The Vermont Yankee nuke is now being largetted for protest demonstrations by local Vernon residents who have become outraged after the plant dumped 83,000 gallons of "slightly" radioactive contaminated water into the Connecticut River. And overseas in Whyl, W. Germany and Malville, France, tens of thousands of people took over nuke sites, forcing the shelving of any further construction.

But such demonstrations do not materialize spontaneously; they only develop after serious organizing and educational campaigns are launched.



CLASS A PROBLEM
NUKES
A Choice Blend of Berserk Technology, Radioactive Crud, and 100% American Bureaucracy
THE ULTIMATE FIX

Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG), is now conducting a recruitment drive in the UMass community for people to help organize an "Anti-Nuclear Teach-In" next month. WMPIRG has scheduled two meetings for people who want to inform and actively involve more people in this issue. The meetings are tonight in Campus Center Room 805 at 7:30 and tomorrow in the Jones Library, Amherst at 7:30 p.m.

The nuclear power industry is already faced with a complex of crises — runaway costs, safety failures, resource shortages, energy demand decreases, political sabotage, etc.

If enough people learn the basic public interest skills with WMPIRG, it may be all it takes to bring the industry to a standstill.

Detroit's useless Renaissance

By THOMAS MAJOR

The next time you read in the newspapers about Detroit's latest riot, remember two words: Renaissance Center. Because those two words stand for a multi-million ddllar mistake that illustrates what is wrong with Detroit today.

Detroit has become an urban moonscape. Gangs rule the streets while policemen are being laid off, businesses flee the downtown area to the suburbs, the tax base is evaporating, and the Detroit-based auto corporations cut back because of the recession.

Because nobody in the government, from President Ford and Jimmy Carter to Detroit mayor Coleman Young will do or say anything to stop the decay, Detroit's superbusinessmen stepped in to fill the vacuum.

Henry Ford II spearheaded their drive to make an effort to attract more business into the city. So, in defiance of common sense and realities about the city's problems, they decided to build a giant office-hotel complex. They brought in the hottest architect in the country today, John Portman, to design the hotel of Renaissance Center. And in a year or so, they will open these shiny new towers. Right now, it looks like Renaissance Center will be a small success: the hotel is booked months in advance but office space is being rented at a slower pace than anticipated.

But Renaissance Center won't even begin to help Detroit because it will not solve the problems which drove the city into its present state of ruin. It won't improve the city physically (except for the 33 acres on which Renaissance Center is built), it won't change the inept operation of the city government by Mayor Young, the non-leadership from President Ford, the incompetence of Federal programs designed to help Detroit, and the deafening silence from both the Republican and Democratic presidential nominees on the issue of the cities.

Because the city government was weak in its administration of the city and provided little effective leadership, businessmen got to play the role of Mad Urban Scientist. To a patient dying from cancer they will give a diamond ring named Renaissance Center.

The great tragedy is the money that will be thrown into the Center. $350 million dollars will be spent on the construction of Renaissance Center. $350 million dollars which will vanish into the sterile towers of the Center and leave the surrounding city starving for capital. $350 million dollars diverted from the city's ills at a time when the city desperately needs every cent. $350 million dollars thrown into a project whose profits (if there are any profits at all) will go to the superbusinessmen who will spend it elsewhere.

Whenever one mentions a stupendous amount of money like $350 million dollars, somebody always comments on how many hospitals, F-14 swing-wing jets, elementary schools, moonshots, or public jobs that much money can buy. But for the millions trapped in the decaying ruins of Detroit, the only number that matters is the number that shows how much of that $350 million dollars will reach their hands. Zero.

Radio static

To the Editor:

The Amateur Radio Association regrets to inform you that in your Friday paper, you carried an inaccurate and misleading article. It was entitled "Radio noise invades Antartica Silence".

The article has one basic fault — it neglects to define the difference between CB and Ham radio. It leaves the reader with the impression that they are one and the same — and they are actually far from being the same.

Ham radio is a different animal than CB. The Ham-CB relationship is the same as chess to checkers... You have to put some time to be a chess player, and fewer people play — but one gets more enjoyment and involvement from it. Anyone can play checkers, but the game is just not that deep.

Hams operate on different bands through the spectrum, and have always pioneered in the development of higher and higher frequency communication, including their advancement of laser and optic communication which the phone company is just now getting into. Hams also have two working communications satelites in orbit. They operate on moonbounce, teletype, television, facsimile, in addition to standard voice and morse code modes.

CB, on the other hand, is a channel for local communication for business and pleasure, for use on the highway or home — but more or less an additional telephone.

The article mentions a "mistake" by the FCC in putting the amateurs on 27 MHz. There are no amateurs on 27 MHz. That band was taken from amateurs by the FCC in the late 50's. The mistake the article was referring to was that the FCC should have put CB up on 400 MHz, where skip is almost impossible and the noise level is lower. This way the current CB mess would be cleaner.

In closing, the club wishes to invite anyone who is interested in more than talking to trucks and wishes to advance to Amateur Radio to keep posted in the Notices and watch for our meetings.

Vote McCarthy

To the Editor:

Senator Eugene McCarthy is now officially on the Massachusetts ballot. The McCarthy '76 Baystate Committee was formed in the Springfield area by a small but dedicated staff. We started slowly due to the fact that the media in general has ignored the candidacy of McCarthy.

However, we can now feel the momentum picking up. A McCarthy '76 information booth will soon be located in the Campus Center. We need volunteers for both the UMass and Springfield areas. We now have a third choice, a better choice, an independent. Why let the two major parties dictate our choices to us? The Republican party has seen fit to nominate the president who never should have been.

Too many of us who believe in a constitutional presidency, and would like to see the country on its feet and moving again, feel that Senator Eugene McCarthy is our only choice.

Confessions of an armchair radical

I watched as the throng gathered to the strains of folk music. It was mostly the young who had come to Philadelphia to hear Dr. Benjamin Spock, Jeremy Rifkin, and many more plead for economic equality and an end to oppression in these United States. They had come on the eve of the Bicentennial to hear and heed the cry for drastic change, tinderwood under which the fires of revolution would be kindled by an impressive array of radical arsonists.

I felt the pulse of the crowd throb and quicken as shouts of "We've carried the rich for 200 years! Let's get them off our backs!" echoed amid the thousands seeking to disburden themselves of the wealthy's sodomistic shackles.

The speakers were faced with a delicate task, to instruct without boring, to inflame without enciting to violence. I sat back, gulped down a beer, and switched channels.

Switched cha....? But I thought... No, I'm afraid, my gentle reader, that I was not in Philadelphia that day.

For you see, I am an armchair radical.

I know next to nothing about revolution, socialism, communism, Albanian solidarity, Red China, the Red Sea, the New Left, the Old Left, or any other south paw movements. However I have bluffed my way onto the radical scene and can hold my own in any but the most erudite of radical company. It's a simple question of knowing your jargon. What I'm offering then is a primer on how to become a successful phony radical, a how more than ever essential for those students who wish to pass Economics 100, or better yet, make it on the college scene.

My success has relied entirely upon one secret. The only requirement for instant radical erudition is familiarization with the most prominent radical personality of the last century — Karl Marx. Now Marx possessed neither a quick wit, nor a funny gait. Likewise he did not star in "Monkey Business." He was hardly one for fooling around.

As an armchair radical idolatry does not fit in with your placid nature. However appearances are important and when you speak of Marx bow your head slightly, gently touch your forelock, and brush away several tears of admiration. Tell your conversant that there is nothing wrong, just an allergy acting up. He'll either admire your profound respect for this man or he'll be too busy bowing his head and touching his forelock to notice you.

Now you must understand the psyche of the radical in order to play his game. Marx, in his eyes, is not just a man, he is a figure. Your typical radical is usually a man, he is a figure. Your typical radical is usually an agnostic, yet he pores over the works of Marx with the zealous faith that he disdains in his religious counterpart. Admiration for Marx is about on a par with that of Jesus Christ. Karl Saves! Keep Right (left?) with Karl!

When talking about Marx refer to him affectionately as the Moor. That was what his children called him. In a roundabout way you're hinting at family ties and your audience is bound to cling even more attentively to your radical pronouncements.

The Moor was gung-ho on a philosophy of change called dialictical materialism. According to Marxian mumbo-jumbo the end-product of this system of reasoning will be the demise of capitalism. On the whole it's pretty nifty stuff. But as an armchair radical you can hardly be expected to actually study Marx's works. "Das Kapital" alone covers more than two thousand pages. And what's more, it's in German! What is needed then is a stock of quotes from which you can readily draw your radical insights. Five or six should do it. Remember appearances are the thing and what an armchair radical lacks in depth of thought, he makes up for in breadth of superficiality.

Quotes to know include "You have a world to win", "Nice guys finish last" (Marx's I'm pretty sure), and one deathbed quote that has befuddled Marxist followers the world over — "I am not a Marxist". If you ever find yourself being upstaged by some radical flash in the pan, quote that baby and he'll disappear faster than Leon Trotsky.

There it is. Instant radical erudition. What could be simpler? The call has gone out. ARMCHAIR RADICALS OF THE WORLD, UNITE! YOU HAVE NOTHING TO LOSE BUT YOUR JEANS!

Election 'excitement'

"My name is Jimmy Carter, and I'm running for president." Terriffic. It looked like a real dog-fight developing, with the newly-united Democratic minions attempting to sweep over the disheveled but determined Republicans like Sherman marching through Georgia to the sea (to turn a phrase). Once the Republicans had succumbed to the inevitable and nominated Ford, it made little difference who won the big race: in the grand American tradition both parties nominated largely uninspiring, safe politicians.

The excitement in this race comes not from the dazzling personalities involved, but rather from the possibility that something unusual might happen. An incumbent president might be thrown out of office. The Republican Party might end its hundred-year history in defense of Jerry Ford. A president and two-thirds of the Congress might belong to the same party for the first time in recent memory. When it comes to excitement, nothing can beat the great American quadrennial partisan bloodletting.

Better than that, I thought to myself as the last vestiges of "Grits and Fritz" faded from my television screen, there might actually be a National Debate of the Greatest Proportions (all one word) over the Pressing Issues of our Time (now you can breathe). Jimmy Carter and Jerry Ford simply do not believe in the same things. While it is, as usual, difficult to discern what they believe in, there is no question as to what they do not believe.

Jerry doesn't believe in "big government," but Jimmy doesn't believe in "the government's indifference to the needs of the people." Jimmy doesn't believe in "wasteful and excessive defense spending" while Jerry doesn't believe in weakening our defense posture vis a vis the Russians." I believe that they do not believe in each other. It is increasingly difficult to believe in either of them.

More important, no one wants to believe either of them. It is estimated that more than ten million Americans who voted in the last presidential election will stay away from the polls this year. The campaign has only just started, and already the national mind is saturated with presidential politics. No one wants to hear about it, no one wants to read about it, and it is coming to the point where people are refusing to think about it. Of all the Western Democracies the United States ranks second to last in voter turnout, a standing that shows no signs of improving.

Politicians spend their lives telling people things, hoping that sooner or later they will be listened to. Jimmy Carter captured the Democratic nomination by telling the people that the politicians in Washington are not to be trusted, that politics is an inherently corrupting business. And now, just as Carter had hoped to be instilling a sense of greatness in the American people, he is discovering that the people believe it. They have gone farther than he had hoped, however, and the test will be whether or not the people can see any difference between the White House and the Georgia Governor's mansion.

Carter may be too successful. He may have so completely convinced the people that politics is beneath their contempt that they may rob him of his chance to turn the nation around. Carter may defeat Ford, but if he fails to capture a mandate for change his victory will be empty indeed.

Introducing Robert Wood

By DUDLEY C. PHILLIPS IV

At the request of concerned students and faculty, I made a public invitation to UMass President Robert Wood. The invitation appeared in the May 10, Collegian. We invited Robert Wood to lunch in the Hatch for Sept. 15. We allowed 120 days for our busy president to schedule the date.

During the last year, it became evident that President Wood was losing touch with the concerns and difficulties of the Amherst Campus. His ability to answer to faculty grievances has given way to the efforts of the Massachusetts Society of Professors. The Faculty Senate has embarrassingly low participation and its recommendations are buried by the governance process. Some faculty are also quitting.

The Student Governments have drawn out the budgets and described these institutional "financial arrangements" with a high degree of expertise. The concerned students explored and contested enough to see that students have no voice in budgetary affairs. The issues were brought to court over real estate and categorical transfer of funds. These happenings are completely out of Robert Wood's hands.

When President Wood has spoken to student, faculty, and professional persons on the Amherst Campus, he refers to the campus governance process: "A 70 day maze." Student research of 2 years ago established that the governance process described by the Wellman Document does not, and never has worked. The institutional decisions are administrative. Policies and financial priorities follow from the Trustees down, and not from the bottom up.

The Trustees depend on Wood's information and assessments of the entire system of the University of Massachusetts. In Amherst, it is to our interest to have our proposals and problems known to Robert Wood. At present, he is out of touch.

A president of a state university has two major areas of concern. He-She must influence the Legislature and solicit funds from many sources. But he-she is also the chief administrator of the institution. Because the finances and notions of academic excellence are so co-mingled, budget decisions determine which educational program will be followed. To get advice on academics, President Wood must confer with the Deans. Again, there has been a reduction of communication with Deans. Wood's office sends one-way memos. He just does not know.

In the last year, Wood has fought with the Governor, the Legislature, his own administrators, MSP, faculty task committees, and employee unions. He has watched administrative positions become vacant. Wood and Senate President Kevin Harrington's re-organization of higher education failed, and the institution received about 66 per cent of the proposed budget for 1976-77.

If Wood intends to maintain a state-wide "system" of education, he must answer to his subsidiary campuses. We in Amherst would like Wood to come around; it would improve his ability to assess and report to the Trustees. People might feel as though they are heard by the government of education. Robert Wood might to interested in how we are doing with fewer funds, fewer faculty and overcrowded conditions.

On Wednesday, Sept. 15, I shall be in the Hatch to treat President Wood to lunch. He has been out of local action so long that getting into the down-home campus' activities may serve as a re-introduction to the Amherst Campus. Robert Wood needs an introduction and it is to our advantage to keep him introduced and involved. He has not been able to work it out for himself.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Health Services offer new family plan

A comprehensive health program for dependents of students is now available for students who have paid the basic health fee. Students may enroll their spouses and children at the University Health Services.

Dependents will receive the same comprehensive package of services that is currently provided to students for an additional fee of $55 per semester. This is an inclusive fee which includes coverage of the spouse and all dependent children.

Special information and tour sessions are being held at the University Health Center, Room 302 today at 3 p.m. and tomorrow at 7 p.m. More information and enrollment forms can be obtained at the Health Center.

MSP slates meeting today

The Massachusetts Society of Professors will hold a meeting at 3:30 today in CC 168. Speaking at the meeting will be Prof. Thomas Shipka, past chairman of the National Education Association's Higher Education Committee.

A reception will immediately follow the meeting. All interested persons are encouraged to attend.

Students invited to Senate meeting

The Undergraduate Student Senate will meet tonight at 7:30 p.m. in room 174 of the Campus Center. All Senators are urged to attend because many senators have graduated or moved, increasing the chance that no quorum will be reached. All students are invited.

According to Annette Guttenberg, speaker of the senate, the meeting will include a review of the summer.

Hillel begins fall with song and dance

Hillel, a Jewish cultural organization on the UMass campus, will hold its opening social event of the fall semester tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Farley Lodge.

Admission to ths evening of food, dance and drink is 75 cents for all who hae not yet paid their Hillel rgistration fee.

Certain federal workers to get hikes

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Senate tentatively agreed yesterday to exempt top-level employes of the government's judicial and executive branches from a proposed wage freeze for members of Congress.

With elections just eight weeks away, the Senate seemed ready to join the House in banning an automatic salary increase scheduled for its members Oct. 1.

The House voted last week for a far-reaching, one-year freeze covering senators and congressmen, cabinet officers, Supreme Court justices, federal judges, many agency heads and any federal employe earning more than $37,800.

The Senate, on a voice vote, tentatively decided to allow cost-of-living increases for all but members of Congress.

Congress approved legislation last year permanently tying Senate and House salaries to the automatic cost-of-living increases provided for all federal employes except those in the "super grades" and above.

The provision was widely regarded as an attempt to set up a permanent program so senators and House members would not have to go on record every time they voted themselves a pay increase.

Last year's pay hike was 5 per cent, and congressional salaries climbed from $42,500 to $44,625 in the first pay raise since 1969.

Sen. Robert Taft, R-Ohio, backed by Sen. Roman Hruska, R-Neb., urged the Senate Tuesday to exempt top-level executive and federal positions from the freeze.

Taft said a salary freeze would make it even more difficult to attract top people into government work and "to keep first class people in government."

But Taft joined others in demanding the freeze for members of Congress, calling last year's bill a "back-door approach. There is no lack of candidates for the jobs we hold."

"I believe that was a very bad public relations move for Congress," Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., added. "Congress has enough problems maintaining a good image before the public."

Placement available for student interns

Student Volunteer Services (SVS) is a student-initiated and administered program which serves as a referral agency to the various social service agencies in Western Massachusetts.

Although SVS is no longer a component of the now defunct OUTREACH Program, they are under the Office of Internships and still attempt to place students in part-time placements.

SVS attempts to offer part-time field practicums which enhance classroom reflection. Thus, SVS maintains an updated listing of over 90 social service agencies in the local area. The agencies are available to lend support and guidance to students who wish to supplement their academic goals with a "mini-internship", which could be essential to their overall program.

The office is located in 409 Goodell and is open from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. daily. Counselors are available for assistance. Minorities and Third World students are particularly urged by the staff to take advantage of the part-time placements.

WMUA offers jobs to prospective jocks

WMUA will hold an introductory station meeting tonight in Campus Center Rm 163 at 8 p.m. Anyone interested in working for the station in any capacity should attend this meeting. Women and Third World people are urged to attend.

Viking 2 camera scans martian surface

PASADENA, Calif. [AP] – The second of Viking 2's swiveling cameras took its first look at the Utopia Plain yesterday scanning a section of the Martian desert site heretofore unseen by man.

The new views might help scientists understand how that section of Martian landscape was formed.

Some features of the area already-photographed by the other camera on Viking 2's robot lander "suggest you can start thinking about exotic depositional mechanisms – processes involving water or ice," said Thomas Mutch, head of the lander photo team.

One such feature, he said, is a slight depression toward one slide of an earlier picture that resembles a water-worn ditch or trough.

The additional coverage provided by the most recent pictures could help differentiate the Viking 2 landing area from the terrain around Viking1's lander, 4,600 miles away.

Also on Viking 2's experiment agenda was its first test of the atmosphere above Utopia Plain.

Using a sensitive, complex instrument called a gas chromatograph mass spectrometer, the robot laboratory will be looking for the same atmospheric gases detected by Viking 1.

Scientists are particularly interested in finding traces of argon and nitrogen gas, because the relative abundance of the two elements can help scientists trace the history of Mars' atmosphere back billions of years.

Tuesday's lander photographs were the first to be taken stereoscopically. This process, taking two pictures of the same scene from slightly different angles, produces photos with a three-dimensional appearance. Using the stereo pictures, scientists will choose a new site for Viking 2's first attempt to use its mechanical shovel arm to scoop up a sample of dirt for its miniaturized life-detecting laboratories.

Spokesmen said the previously selected spot for the first digging had been rejected because the 10-foot sampling arm would have come down on a rock.

Therefore, a new spot in the rock-littered neighborhood of the lander must be located for the first sample.

Viking 1 seems to have been reporting the discovery of life for the ppst few weeks, Gerald Soffen, Viking's chief scientist, said Monday. But he said its experiments failed to produce any of the carbon-based, or organic, molecules which are found in every living tting on earth.

The sample, due to be dug on Saturday, will be put inside the lander for analysis of the soil's chemical content.

One of the objects of Viking 2's soil analyses will be to confirm or deny the "tantalizing, but inconclusive" findings of Viking 1.

If Viking 2 finds organic molecules, he said, "That would do it for us," as far as conclusions about the existence of life on Mars.

Pakistan ravaged by floods

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan [UPI] – Floods spawned by pounding rains collapsed a dam nearly 450 feet high in eastern Pakistan and gushed through a plain of more than 5,000 square miles, washing away entire villages, government spokesmen said today.

Officials siad the rampaging flood waters were caused by Monday's collapse of the Bolan Dam, a 442-foot-high earth-filled structure in Baluchistan. They said the waters swirled across a 5,000-square-mile area in the province, which is 134,052 square miles in area and has a population of 2.4 million persons.

They said casualty figures from the flooding in Baluchistan province were not known but added that loss of life among the area's nomadic population could be high.

Officials said all available government machinery had been brought into action. The army was assisting civil authorities by air-dropping rations from helicopters and evacuating endangered persons to higher areas.

Grad tax would mean lower or same taxes

BOSTON [UPI] – A Dukakis administration fiscal expert said yesterday a graduated state income tax, as proposed by the legislature's Taxation Committee, would mean the same or lower taxes for 95.4 per cent of Massachusetts taxpayers.

Assistant Administration and Finance Secretary Robert H. McClain also said the gradtax proposal would remove inequities in the current income tax laws which hurt many elderly and inhibit development of investment capital.

McClain made the remarks at a meeting of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' cabinet in support of a proposed constitutional amendment on the November ballot which would permit a graduated income tax and pending legislation setting the rates which will take effect if the amendment is approved.

Massachusetts now has a flat income tax of 5.37 per cent on earned income and 10.75 per cent on unearned income such as stock dividends and capital gains.

McClain said a computer analysis of 1975 tax returns, and a comparison to the rates under the gradtax proposal, show that families earning $22,000 or less will pay slightly less under the gradtax. Those earning more than $22,000 will pay slightly more.

He said the redistribution of the tax burden, however, would be "modest". He said individuals at the highest income level, over $1 million, would pay only one per cent more, and much of the one per cent would be offset by deductions on the individual's federal income tax.

The biggest inequity that would be eliminated, McClain said, is the double taxation on unearned income, which he said makes it unattractive for wealthy individuals to invest in Massachusetts.

The double taxation also hurts elderly persons on a fixed income derived mostly from dividends, McClain said.

On another matter, Community Affairs Secretary William Flynn announced that his office has received a $173,000 federal grant to remove obstacles to the rehabilitation of buildings in older cities.

Flynn said the Massachusetts Depatment of Community Affairs was one of 8 agencies selected for the neighborhood preservation grant.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, September 8 – Born today, you are one of those for whom money is more often than not a problem. There will be, in fact, times in your life when you will become obsessed with the notion of making money and doubly obsessed by a fear of losing it. Such times should fade as days, weeks and months pass without financial incident other than the earning of an adequate, if not luxurious, income -- but they will recur periodically, regardless of what you may do to persuade yourself that all is well financially and that all will continue to be well. Your wish for financial security will result in your taking many measures to tighten up the budget -- even when there is no need for it.

You are by nature a tidy person. You cannot happily move on from one project to the next, for instance, until the one is completed to your satisfaction -- even if such completion entails a failure of sorts. You cannot abide loose ends and will remain on any given job in order to tie them up, even if it means that you will lose out on the next project as a result.

With a slight tendency to look inward -- enough so that you can indulge in introspection and yet not lose sight of the outside world as you do so -- and a great tendency to move forward, you should be able to work and play in a state of almost complete mental and emotional balance. Only your you to fall short of your aims in the long run.

Thursday, September 9

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Unseen forces may have more of an influence on your work than you had thought possible. Make an effort to realize your goals through psychic issues.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Your need to get away, to be alone in order to come to terms with yourself and your new ambitions must be indulged today. Strive for truth.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Enjoy travel early in the day. You may not be able to go far – but you can certainly experience something new and different.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your deep appreciation of art makes this an exceptionally rewarding day for you. Beauty is, indeed, its own excuse for being.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Your devotion to a loved one does not go unnoted today. Your efforts to ease another's stress may, however, cause tension in itself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care that a fondness for rich food does not cause you to miss out on an important engagement in the evening. Indulge -- in moderation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Employ mental energy wisely; otherwise you will be unable to employ it well. Strength of a physical sort is uncalled for now.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Self-expression is essential if you are to get your views across to others. An all-important message is delivered at evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Impending events may keep you from being able to enjoy events of the moment. Try to relax and enjoy the present.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Your insight into human nature makes it possible for you to predict another's behavior when and where it will do the most good.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Another may be inspired with ideas -- but it is you who will be able to clarify them and translate them into profitable projects.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – If you feel unsure of yourself where romance is concerned, you would do well to wait a while before trying to express your feelings. Take your time.

'1776' auditions run thru Thursday

Auditions for parts in the forthcoming UMass Fine Arts Center production of "1776" will take place Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 7, 8, 9 from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. in the band room of the Old Chapel.

The hit Broadway musical "1776" will feature Broadway actor Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge.

The remaining 23 parts will be filled with actors-singers from the Pioneer Valley area. The parts to be filled include two women, Abigail Adams and Martha Jefferson, sopranos, and 21 men, mainly character parts who play members of the Continental Congress.

Musical Director for the production will be Fredrick Tillis.

All area actors-singers are invited to try out. Please by prepared to sing, and bring your own music. An accompanist will be provided. For further information, call (413) 545-0202.

'Kiss Me Kate' tryouts tonight

The UMass Music Theatre Guild will be holding auditions Monday and Tuesday for their fall production of Cole Porter's "Kiss Me Kate," to be performed Nov. 18-21 in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall.

Auditions, which will begin at 6:30 p.m. and are to be held in Campus Center 917, are open to all in the Five College Community.

"Kiss Me Kate" is a musical adaptation of Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" and features a play within a play plotline.

There are seven major roles to be cast and various smaller parts in addition to several chorus positions.

Those wishing to audition are suggested, but not required, to prepare a musical selection. An accompianist will be provided.

Anyone interested in working on one of the production crews, i.e. sets, costumes, lights, publicity, or playing in the orchestra should contact the Guild or sign up on the audition dates.

For more information, contact Karen White 546-5150, or Ricki Buckman 549-3905.

A's owner suffers setback in baseball antitrust suit

CHICAGO [UPI] — U.S. District Court Judge Frank J. McGarr Tuesday dismissed three of seven counts in Charles O. Finley's $10.5 million suit against baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn and organized baseball and set Nov. 8 for trial on the other four counts.

The judge dismissed the antitrust charges filed by Finley, who had sought triple damages bringing the total amount to $10.5 million, and two counts under which Finley charged he had been denied due process of legal treatment and given unequal protection by Kuhn.

McGarr's action left three counts in which the commissioner is involved and one count against the Boston Red Sox and the New York Yankees.

The suit by Finley, owner of the Oakland A's, stemmed from Kuhn's decision in June that Finley could not sell pitcher Vida Blue to the Yankees for $1.5 million and outfielder Joe Rudi and pitcher Rollie Fingers to the Red Sox for $2 million. Kuhn voided the sale on the grounds it was not in the best interest of baseball.

Kuhn's attorneys were pleased with the dismissal of the antitrust charge, pointing out it had reduced the total amount of damages which could be claimed as well as any chance of claiming attorneys' fees and court costs.

Kuhn's attorneys asked for a summary judgment throwing the entire case out of court on the basis Finley had no legal grounds, but McGarr refused.

"If it was accepted, it would entitle him (Kuhn) to render a decision on any question dealing with baseball no matter how unauthorized or arbitrary it might be," McGarr's decision said. "This is an untenable decision."

"It definitely is a question for the court to decide if Kuhn's action was arbitrary, a question which has to be decided in the courts."

Finley's attorneys, in conference in chambers with McGarr, withdrew Finley's request for preliminary injunctions which would have forced Kuhn to allow the sale of the players to be completed. Thus, the request for injunctions will be combined with the Nov. 8 trial on the merits of the case — whether Kuhn has the authority to void such sales.

Marchibroda back; but for how long?

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Several hours after Ted Marchibroda returned as head coach Tuesday, the Baltimore Colts cut five players, placed two others on injured reserve and activated wide receiver Freddie Scott for Sunday's season opener at New England.

The Colts said Marchibroda, who resigned Sunday following a dispute with the front office over the operations of the club, did not help make the final cuts.

The cuts, which brought the team to the required 43-man roster, were made Monday by General Manager Joe Thomas and the assistant coaches.

Placed on waivers were second year defensive end Glenn Robinson and four rookies — running backs Kim Jones and Ed Shuttlesworth, tight end Mide Fuhrman and guard John Roman.

Placed on injured reserve and lost for the season were linebacker Tom MacLeod, who underwent surgery for a torn achilles tendon suffered in last week's 24-9 loss to Detroit, and cornerback Doug Nettles, who is out with a separated shoulder.

Borg, Orantes advance

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Defending champion Manuel Orantes and Bjorn Borg, one of the men favored to succeed him as U.S. Open title-holder, both came back from two set deficits Tuesday to survive nerve-tingling five-set tennis matches and set up a quarter-final meeting at the $416,600 championship.

Orantes, who seems to reserve his very best for the center court at the West Side Tennis Club, beat Stan Smith, the 1971 champion, 3-6, 1-6, 6-2, 7-6, 6-1, and Borg, the reigning Wimbledon, WCT and U.S. pro champion, defeated Brian Gottfried, 6-7, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4, 6-2.

Earlier, Dick Stockton made the quarters for the first time in 10 attempts by defeating Colombia's Jairo Velasco, 6-3, 7-5, 6-4.

Stockton became the third U.S. player into the last eight of the men's bracket, joining top-seeded Jimmy Connors and Eddie Dibbs, the ninth seed, who qualified Monday in the top half of the draw.

Stockton meets the winner of the night match between Ilie Nastase and Roscoe Tanner.

In the women's bracket Zenda Liess of Daytona Beach, Calif., advanced to the quarters with a 6-3, 6-4 win over Wendy Overton, and sixth-seeded Rosie Casals defeated Terry Holladay of La Jolla, Calif., 7-5, 6-1, in an All-American matchups.

Defending champion Chris Evert was favored to take the last remaining quarter-final place over Britain's Sue Barker in the other featured night match.

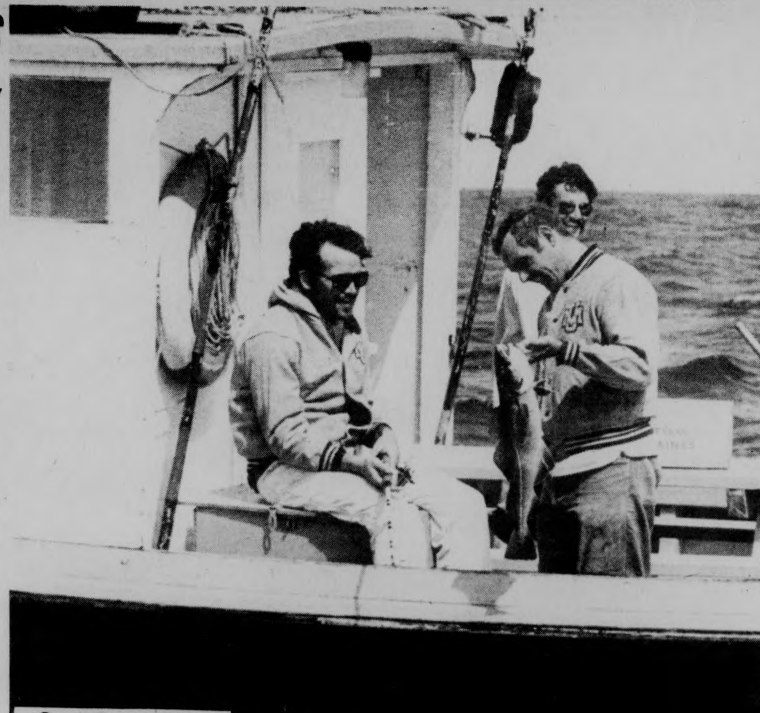
UMass anglers capture trophy

The 20th annual International University Sports Fishing Seminar and Competition has closed its doors for another year. Twelve teams (six Canadian and six American) participated in three days of deep sea fishing off Cape St. Mary and Wedgeport, on the south shore of Nova Scotia.

University of Massachusetts pulled well ahead on the first day with their catch of 610 pounds, adding 227 Tuesday and 105 Wednesday, giving them a total of 942 pounds to win the match. Second place Yale University was a distant second with 553 pounds, and a Canadian and American team tied for third place with 372 pounds each — University of New Brunswick and Princeton.

The University Cup (awarded to the team gathering the most points; scored by point per pound of fish) was captured by University of Massachusetts with their teams of Coach Tunner Brosky, Captain Dave Provost, Blake Keedy, Jim Budzinski, and John Nickerson.

Director of this fishing match, Bob Hayes, wrapped up the tournament with this comment, "University of Massachusetts has now won this award six times, while the 1976 second place Yale team has captured it five years. I'm pleased to have this friendly rivalry between the two schools since it adds more color and enjoyment to our seminar and competition."



Coach Tunner Brosky and two members of his fishing squad admire their catch in the recent University Sports Fishing Seminar Competition.

Ali faces divorce

CHICAGO [UPI] — A suit for divorce on grounds of mental cruelty and desertion has been filed in Cook County Circuit Court against world heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali by his second wife, Khalilah Ali.

Mrs. Ali's attorneys requested a court order forbidding Ali from disposing of any assets or property pending a divorce settlement. A hearing was ordered for Sept. 12. Judge Robert L. Hunter revealed the suit had been filed last week.

Ali was divorced by his first wife, Sonji Roi, in 1967. Recently he acknowledged paternity in court papers filed in Berrien County, Mich., of a child born to Veronica Porche, who has accompanied him to his most recent fights.

Yanks drop Sox; Tiant is shaky...

NEW YORK [UPI] — A two-run triple by Chris Chambliss and Oscar Gamble's two-run homer combined with Dick Tidrow's relief pitching to give the New York Yankees a 4-2 victory Tuesday night over the Boston Red Sox.

Chambliss's triple came in the first inning after a one-out walk to Roy White and Thurman Munson's bunt single. Gamble capped the scoring with his 15th homer of the year off loser Luis Tiant, 17-11, in the fourth inning.

Starter and winner Dock Ellis, 15-6, held Boston scoreless until Carlton Fisk's 14th homer of the year, a solo shot in the seventh inning. Ellis got into trouble in the eighth when he yielded a lead-off single to Jim Rice and walked Dwight Evans and pinch-hitter Rick Miller to load the bases with none out.

Tidrow got Rick Burleson to hit into a double play to wipe out the two lead runners and then got Denny Doyle to fly out earning his eighth save despite Carl Yastrzemski's homer in the ninth.

...so is the 'Bird'

DETROIT [UPI] — Tony Muser's sacrifice fly and a single by Doug Decinces with two out in the seventh inning Tuesday night brought in the tie-breaking runs that gave the Baltimore Orioles a 5-3 victory over Mark Fidrych and the Detroit Tigers.

Wayne Garland broke a personal three-game losing streak and raised his record to 16-6 by giving up only six hits while dropping Fidrych to 15-8 with his third loss in a row.

Detroit scored its three runs in the third on only one hit as Garland threw two wild pitches, walked two batters, hit one and gave up a sacrifice fly.

Four Tiger errors, giving them 146 in 136 games, made three of the Baltimore runs unearned. Lee May doubled home one in the third, while Muser doubled home one in the fifth after Ken Singleton's grounder to second had brought in a run. Muser's double bounced off the pipe at the top of the right field fence and back onto the playing field.

Canada blanks Sweden, 4-0

TORONTO [UPI] — Defensive specialist Bob Gainey scored two goals Tuesday night to lead Team Canada to a 4-0 victory over Sweden, leaving the Canadians the only unbeaten and untied team in the six-nation tournament.

The victory, added to wins over Finland and Team USA, gave Canada a 3-0 record while Sweden, with a victory over the USA and a tie with the Soviet Union, dropped to 1-1-1.

Gainey, of the Stanley Cup champion Montreal Canadiens who sat out the first two games of the series but was inserted against the Swedes because of his checking abilities, scored a goal midway through the second period to give Canada a 2-0 lead and tallied his other goal midway through the third period to close out the scoring.

Bobby Hull, the ageless 37-year-old left wing from the World Hockey Association champion Winnipeg Jets, scored the only goal of the opening period at 4:12 when he deflected a shot by linemate Phil Esposito past Swedish goaltender Hardy Aastrom. It was Hull's fourth goal of the tournament, giving him the team lead.

But, from there on, neither team appeared to want to take control of the contest as both missed numerous scoring opportunities with errant passes.

Judy Van Handle

Bosox, oh what a year!

By JUDY VAN HANDLE

The Boston Red Sox ain't what they used to be.

A simple, definitive statement. Yet true, when the statistics are examined, the games gone over, and the season looked at in retrospect.

Yes, 1976 has been a sad year for our Sox. Jim Willoughby 2-11; Carlton Fisk, at one point batting .225; Fred Lynn's shoes becoming unglued in the outfield; the fall of Rico Petrocelli at third. And, by the way, whatever happened to the 1975 manager of the year?

And now Ferguson Jenkins may never pitch again. Is that any way to treat a championship team?

But before 1976 becomes ancient history, let's review this utterly unsatisfying season. Yes, a blast from the past....

—Remember that now-famous game with Oakland last month, when the Sox led by six runs only to lose 8-7? Ah, the thrill of it all when the A's tied and eventually won the game with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning.

—Remember that game in June with Baltimore, when with two outs in extra innings, Tony Muser singled and Bobby Grich homered on the first pitch to give the Orioles a one-run, 3-2 victory.

—Ah, the memories just keep flooding back. A game with the A's again, when they scored five unearned runs on a Steve Dillard throwing error to take a come-from-behind win against the Sox.

—And, oh yes, the classic of them all. The late July game against New York, when Chris Chambliss hit the first pitch from Tom House for a three-run homer, enabling the Yankees to win the game by a run.

That contest, incidentally, caused manager Don Zimmer to say that House would never pitch another game for Boston. To show you the sad shape the Sox bullpen has been in all year, Tommy's back on the hill again.

The litany of nonaccomplishments is endless, but hasn't it been a wonderful year? Well, there are some small blessings to be somewhat thankful for. Butch Hosbon has been given an opportunity to show if he can play a major league type of third base, Rick Jones (when he isn't pitching for Rhode Island) has done a fairly good job, Cecil Cooper has established himself as a fine hitter, and Rick Miller is probably the best back-up outfielder in the American League.

And, at least the terrific trio (Lynn, Burleson, and Fisk) are once again safely in the fold. But what will probably happen now is that the Sox will go on a rampage, win a bunch of their remaining games, and finish second or third. Then they will trumpet about how they came up with a late spurt to forge a wonderful climax to an anticlimactic year.

Well, maybe it was wonderful for Mark "The Bird" Fidrych, the Kansas City Royals, and the New York Yankees, but not for the Boston Red Sox.

Guttenberg, Doyle, resign posts

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Annette Guttenberg, Speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, resigned last night because Student Government Association (SGA) co-Presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus "have been bought off" by the University Administration, she said.

Speaking before the Student Senate Guttenberg said Cronin and Martus had withheld prior information about Robert L. Woodbury's appointment as acting Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs.

Henry Doyle, Treasurer of the Student Senate, also resigned, because he said, he was "kicked out of school." Tommy Kerrins was appointed as acting Treasurer until SGA elections are held in two weeks.

Annette Guttenberg surprised the Senate when she said, "those men have made me fear for the student population, therefore I resign in two weeks. I almost didn't resign, but I can't take it anymore. I'm doing this because I want students to realize they are kept in the dark about most things on this campus".

In an interview after the meeting she explained, "It is the job of the co-presidents to tell students what they know. If students had known who the candidates were for acting Vice-Chancellor they could have given their opinion."

Cronin told the Senate he didn't think it was fair to the candidates if he revealed their names. He added that a more detailed explanation would be in the co-president's report to the Senate next week.

After the meeting Cronin said, "I thought she had access to the information on the Trustees if she wanted it. She never asked for it." Cronin said he was "sorry to see her go" but he called her accusations "rhetoric".

Martus said afterwards she has a different perspective... Her perception is clouded by her political beliefs." Cronin added "If you want to call her more radical go ahead."

Guttenberg, who has been the Speaker since last March, told the Senate she had hoped to change things but "we can't because we're not powerful enough... not the Senate, Jay and Paul, or me."

She added they don't have the information needed to fight the administration, and "it frightens me that it is being withheld."

Despite their presidential acceptance speeches, Cronin and Martus are not acting in the student's interests, said Guttenberg.

She said after the meeting that Cronin and Martus are interested in their own future careers, possibly with the University, so they don't want to jeopardize their standing with the administrators.

"There was no reason to keep information from me," she said. Guttenberg plans to attend next week's meeting to hear Cronin and Martus' report.

The Senate passed some motions prior to the two resignations. Anne Thorkelson was accepted as the Affirmative Action Officer for the Student Senate.

Her job involves seeing that SGA funded student groups hire more Third-World people and women until they are in direct proportion to the university population, according to a Senate report.

A move to recognize and endorse the Title IX Task Force of the Campus Center-Student Union Complex, designed to deal with sexism, was passed unanimously.

EASYRIDER, a computerized ride referral system, was passed unanimously at a cost of $1,150.

Nummo News, the Black community newspaper replacing Grassroots, was granted Recognized Student Organization (RSO) status, entitling it to funds for publishing.

The Senate also passed a motion to hold a election to fill undergraduate vacancies on the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors.

A motion to create the Office of Registrar of Student Organizations was passed.

The Registrar will determine whether RSO constitutions meet the guidelines set by the Senate for funding. Adam Auster was then appointed to the position.

Trustees may lose executive session rights

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

Pending a decision by State Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti, the UMass Board of Trustees may or may not in the future be able to close its doors to the public at times, and adjourn into executive session.

The board met yesterday for the first time this school year, at the UMass-Boston Harbor Campus and hear a report from the Executive Committee on a proposed amendment to the trustees by-laws which would spell-out provisions for convening in executive session.

Although the trustees have in the past met in executive session to discuss sensitive matters, such as the firing and hiring of University employees and certain issues with legal ramifications, there have never been guidelines specifying the nature of issues appropriate for the closed-door meetings.

With the advent of the "open-meeting law," the trustees now feel it is essential to spell-out a provision for executive session in their by-laws.

Before they can do that, however, Bellotti must agree to provide the trustees with an exemption from the open-meeting law, for certain purposes.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees has sent Bellotti a legal opinion stating its case on the matter, in conjunction with Bellotti's review of a similar test-case.

William Searson, chief legal counsel for the University, said he feels the trustees are entitled to some exemption from the open-meeting law because of the nature of their function.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, head of the University's Amherst campus, said he concurs with Searson's view, but is fearful that the public will misconstrue this request from the board as an open-ended request for closed-door meetings.

He said he personally favors, and feels that a majority of the trustees also favor, a "very limited" use of executive session.

Executive session would be appropriate, he said, only when matters of considerable sensitivity, about certain individuals or about circumstances with ramifications which might put the University in legal jeopardy, are discussed.

Student Trustee Paul M. Cronin said he is "very concerned" that the trustees meet openly, except in a narrowly-prescribed set of circumstances. He said he would favor only a very limited executive session provision. In some cases, Cronin said, executive session serves a valid and necessary funcation.

In other business, the trustees, routinely put their final approval on the once-controversial Fiscal Year 1977 Operating Budget. The $177.2 million budget, an object over which violent controversy raged last year when it was being drawn up, represents a seven per cent increase over the 1976 budget.

State Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks, speaking "as a trustee," said he wished to abstain from the budget vote because he would like "an opportunity to study changes in the budget". He reserved "the right to raise budget issues at a later date."

Trustee and Town of Amherst Selectperson Nancy Eddy said "The economy of the town of Amherst is closely tied to the University budget." Eddy asked Sec. Parks if there was any new word on cost of living increases for University faculty.

"Hopefully there will be a decision made very soon" said Parks.

UMass President Robert C. Wood noted that in order to facilitate smoother operation of the budget in the future, revisions have been made to strengthen the "common service" category, and in addition there are new categories of "expenditure by academic activity."

A spokesperson for the Committee on Budget and Fianance said, "This is a year for recovery from the ravages of Fiscal Year 1976".

Unions seek support of profs

AAUP files complaint...

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission will conduct hearings beginning Tuesday on "prohibited practice" charges brought against the University by the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

The AAUP alleges that the University violated Chapter 10 (2) (1) of the Labor Relations Act when it granted, in September of last year, a pay increase for new department heads and chairmen on the Amherst campus. The increase was described in a memorandum from Provost Dean Alfange.

In a written complaint, AAUP associate counsel Carolyn A. Polowy stated that the action "sought to separate department chairmen from faculty, in support of the employers' theory that department chairmen are supervisors of managers and also sought to confer a benefit on department chairmen, in violation of Section 10 (a) (1).

Polowy also stated to the state Labor Relations Commission, the issue was previously discussed in National Labor Relations Board vs. Exchange Parts C., 375 U.S. 405 at 409 (1964): "The danger inherent in well-timed increases and benefits is the suggestion of a fist inside a velvet glove. The employees are not likely to miss the inference that the source of benefits now conferred is also the source from which future benefits must follow and which may dry up if it is not obliged."

AAUP President Joseph S. Larsen said the University created these salary increases "in an attempt to strengthen their contention that department heads are not faculty."

The issue of representation of department heads and chairmen of the University for the purposes of collective bargaining is currently pending before the Commission. The University contends that chairmen are administration figures and should not be included in the collective bargaining agent. However, the two groups vying to represent faculty in collective bargaining, AAUP and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) said that chairmen should be included.

A recent poll taken by MSP shows that a majority of department chairmen did not consider themselves as "part of the administration." The poll also indicated that if a collective bargaining unit for faculty is affected, most department chairmen and heads said they would wish to be included.

Larsen said the University is not allowed under the commission laws to make changes in working conditions in order to reinforce their position.

According to the memorandum issued by Alfange entitled "Salary Increments for Department Heads or Chairmen," the following salary increments were authorized tor persons appointed as heads or chairmen (or acting heads or chairmen) of departments:

— with 45 or more FTE faculty positions assigned (up to $2000,

— with fewer than 45 FTE faculty positions assigned (up to $1500), and — for clusters in the School of Education (up to $1000). Such salary increment, however, may not carry a person above the top of academic salary scale.

The memorandum further states that persons accepting appointments as department heads may be made provided the dean certifies the department administrative workload in the summer justifies such an appointment. Persons given calendar-year appointments as heads or chairmen will not receive any other salary increment in conjunction with their appointments, and will not be eligible for any additional compensation in the summer for teaching or administration.

According to the memorandum, any salary increment awarded in conjunction with such an appointment is to be withdrawn immediately upon the conclusion of the person's service in that position.

...MSP president confident

By JAMES ODATO
and JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) expressed confidence that the faculty members of UMass-Amherst would accept his unit as their collective bargaining agent, at a press conference in the Campus Center, yesterday.

Larry S. Roberts, MSP-Amherst chapter president, said his unit "should defeat the American Association of University Professors (AAUP)" in the election tentatively scheduled for October.

The MSP is a local affiliate of the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) which represents all state community colleges in collective bargaining and an arm of the National Education Association (NEA).

At the press conference before about 40 faculty and MSP members, Prof. Thomas Shipka of NEA spoke of the collective bargaining movement. "Educators depend on one another," he said, "this is a moral revolution and all educators must recognize their responsibilities, obligations beyond mre university service."

"The organizing movement of collective bargaining is a frank realization of advancing the future of higher education." He said most educators do nothing to better the future of higher education.

Listing cheap labor tactics of college administration, powerless faculty senate, and the insecurity of a teaching positions, Shipka called for faculty involvement.

"Otherwise take the blame of the demise of higher education," he said.

"Faculty at the UMass do not get cost of living nor merit increases as do faculty of other state schools," said Robert Dyer, a faculty member by MSP.

He said MSP, if elected, will lobby, in the state legislature for faculty salary merit increases.

MTA won a 25 percent a year increase for faculty of Fitchburg State College, Dyer said. He said that it UMass faculty was granted such an increase, it would mean $14 million dollars in raises. "The state could not afford such pay increases," he said, "but some cost of living increase would be reached."

Roberts signed the full services of MSP at UMass would cost faculty $147 per member. "This is a realistic figure," he said, "unlike that of AAUP."

Roberts said if the election results in no majority vote against collective bargaining, and no majority vote for a collective bargaining agent, the two agents (AAUP and MSP) will be voted on by faculty in a second election.

AAUP PRes., Joseph Larson said he does not expect an agent to be elected in the first vote. "I don't think an agent will be chosen until the second vote," he said.

Larson said there are about 200 members in the Amherst Chapter of AAUP.

Dyer said there are about 350 MSP members from almost every university department. MSP initially petitioned the UMass faculty for collective barbaining rights in 1973. AAUP soon entered a petition, and in February 1973 and affiliation between AAUP and MSP was attempted.

The affiliation did not occur mainly because the two agents' national affiliations served different functions for the American academic community.

The Amherst AAUP is aligned with National AAUP.

The MSP platform pledges are:

—A legally-binding contract that will establish and maintain conditions of compensation, support facilities and services, self-governance, an accountable administration under which high quality professional performance can be achieved.

—Establishment of programs for information and persuasion of trustees and the general public, along with a full-time lobby on Beacon Hill, the improvement of funding levels and the general status of public education in Massachusetts.

Two candidates vie for Conte seat

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

For the two candidates vying for the Massachusetts' First District Congressional nomination, the campaign has been a bit like boxing a ghost.

Both Edward McColgan of Northampton and Edward O'Brien of Easthampton have carefully avoided attacking each other and concentrated on leveling charges at incumbent Republican Silvio Conte.

News Analysis

Conte is faced with no primary opposition, and he has not responded to any of the numerous charges. The winner of Tuesday's Democratic primary earns the dubious distinction of facing Conte in November. Conte has won election nine straight times in what otherwise is a decidedly Democratic district.

The district is the largest in the state, encompassing 88 cities and towns and more than 500,000 people. It has been hard hit by the recession, and the unemployment rates are among tehe highest in the nation.

The issues that have been raised too, are democratic — more jobs, law enforcement, and attacks on Republicans.

The rival camps both feel that this is the year that Conte can be beaten. They cite the anti-government feeling that is a result of Watergate and congressional scandals.

O'Brien has called on Conte to reveal all of his sources of income, which he did not do. It can be expected that the finance issue will be a hot one when the November election rolls around.

Many observers of the primary campaign have complained that there is not much to choose between the two — that espouse the same principles and propose the same policies. Backers of the two candidates, however, dispute that notion.

In a special campaign to register all bicycles, campus police have added evening and weekend hours until September 25.

In addition to daily hours from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., bicycles can be registered Monday through Sunday between 5:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m., at the UMass police station behind Dickinson Hall.

Police are providing an engraver, decal, and registration form. A guard will assist in registering bicycles. Be sure to bring your bicycle. According to police, some persons have attempted to register without them.

Since the program began in August, 1973, the recovery rate of stolen bicycles has increased, according to a spokesperson.

Decals on bicycles deter theives and it is less likely that your bicycle will be stolen if you have one, police said.

Nuclear power dangers focus of meeting

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

The spiralling number of accidents occurring in nuclear power plants was the main focus at a meeting last night in the Campus Center to organize an anti-nuclear teach-in.

Seventy people heard Diane Woolf of the Mass. Public Interest Research Group and J. Kevin Crocker and Sharon Tracy of the Alternative Energy Coalition speak about nuclear plant dangers, such as faculty design and the neglect of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to thoroughly inspect the plants.

There is essentially no place for waste, said Tracy, so it is stored on the plant. Woolf said plutonium, the major waste ingredient, is also the main ingredient in nuclear weaponry, a fact she said, that has obvious international implications.

The teach-in, planned for Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 5 and 6, is aimed to educate people in the Amherst area about the dangers of nuclear power.

Activities tentatively planned are talks by speakers, both local and national, music, an anti-nuclear puppet theater, films, and workshops on numerous aspects of nuclear energy protest, from alternative energy forms to civil disobedience.

Crocker, who was present at both the rally and site occupation in Seabrook, N.H. on Aug. 22, was one of 170 people who were fined $100 and received 30-day suspended sentences following their arrests.

Crocker said he is convinced that the evidence against Seabrook's plant construction is substantial. Included is the fact that the building permit is illegal because the environmental impact sheet had not been received before construction was begun.

"We've stopped Seabrook as far as I'm concerned... we've got to get the people and the support to prove it."

The plan for the October 23 Seabrook rally is to hold the site for a couple of days.

Crocker said Seabrook police claim that they will continue to make arrests, this time in a slower, more methodical manner.

There is a state holiday in Massachusetts the following Monday (Veteran's Day) so people from Massachusetts who attend will be able to occupy without having to return right away for jobs and other activities, said Crocker.

Protesters receive six months for contempt

EXETER, N. H. [UPI] — Eleven anti-nuclear demonstrators were sentenced to six months in jail yesterday after being convicted of contempt of court for occupying the site of a planned nuclear power plant in Seabrook.

Rockingham County Superior Court Judge Maurice Bois sentenced the protestors to six months in Rockingham County Jail with three months suspended.

"I think the overwhelming principle in this case is that when a court order is issued it is not flaunted and contemptuously disobeyed," Bois said in sentencing the demonstrators.

The protestors were among 179 persons arrested Aug. 22 during the mass occupation at the planned Seabrook Station site. The judge had issued a court order two days prior to the occupation, banning entry onto the grounds.

Bois has since asked that all the demonstrators be charged with contempt of court for violating his court order.

"If the group was that patriotic and dedicated they should have given thought to rights other than their own," he said. "I'm convinced they knew of the injunction and flaunted it."

Bois denied a motion by the protestors to delay sentencing while they appealed to the state Supreme Court.

"There are no reasonable grounds for appeal," the judge said. "The presumption of innocence no longer applies."

Parents learn about child care programs

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

Representatives of area child care systems combined forces last night to introduce parents and babysitters to the service and programs offered for local children of working or student parents.

Staff members from the Hampshire Community Action Commission (HCAC), Family Day Care Team, The UMass Laboratory School, the Infant Toddler Playgroup, and the University Day Care System outlined available resources to parents operating day care service in their homes.

They emphasized the advantages in joining affiliated Day Care homes to parents seeking quality day care for their children.

Havi Stander of HCAC said the staff of the Day Care Team, which includes a Social Worker, Educational Coordinator and Health Coordinator, work with individuals providing day care to the children of working or student parents.

Team members advise on activities for the children, and assist in such various duties as recruiting toys, examining the home for safety conditions, and aiding in any medical problem.

Under contract to the State department of Welfare, the Day Care Team interviews prospective day care operators (those who care for children in their own home) on attitudes toward child-rearing and inspect the home or apartment for safety before any decision is made to incorporate the operator into the HCAC program.

Once the operator is accepted into HCAC's program, the operator gains access to the professional staff who regularly visit the home and sponsor yearly workshops on health, educational and child-guardian relationship.

Stander said independent Day Care operators (unconnected to the HCAC Team) must still be licensed by the State Office for Children if more than two unrelated children are being cared for.

Mark Segar, Child Care Coordinator of the Community Development Center, oversees the University's five child care centers and the toy lending library.

Segar said the center is formulating a student referral list for parents who wish to obtain occasional babysitting services.

Speaker to discuss role of Blacks in America

By GREG PARISH

The Black community at UMass will not be sitting back this year and allowing the racist, immoral and unjust treatment of our brothers and sisters to continue.

The historical duty of the Black student is to study, to get a better understanding of the forces, both psychological and physical, that oppress Black people in particular and that plague America in general.

This academic year, a great deal of emphasis shall be placed on assuring that the type of education that we receive is relevant addresses itself to provide the University community with a clearer understanding of exactly what America and its fellow racists and capitalists are all about.

Prof. Playthell Benjamin will conduct a workshop tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the New Africa House. The topic of the workshop will be "On Being Black in American Civilization: Reflections of the Bicentennial.

Tonight at 7:30, New Africa House is presenting the first of a series of political education workshops. Speaking will be Prof. Playthell Benjamin, and the topic of the workshop is, "On Being Black in American Civilization: Reflections of the Bicentennial."

Prof. Benjamin, one of the founding members of our own W.E.B. DuBois Dept. of Afro-American Studies, is an astute, historical analyst with a brilliant mind. He was very much involved in the revolutionary movement of the 1960's and continues his work now as a scholar and as activist.

This year we must not sit back and talk about how bad it is about Craemen and Southern Africa, but must gain more knowledge and a better understanding of the system that supports and is responsible for political prisoners and Southern Africa.

New Africa House, as the center of Black and progressive activity on campus, invites all serious students and faculty to come out and participate in this workshop.

We must all take a stand.

In other action, the Board unanimously approved the interim appointment of Acting Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury. Chancellor Bromery said, "We look forward to Mr. Woodbury's participation...and survival".

President Wood spoke to the trustees briefly about his recent appointment by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity, as Chairman of Boston's City-wide Coordinating Council.

"The Council's function," he said, "is to monitor, evaluate, observe, and report on changes in the school system as they take place, and to see that the court-ordered busing is being followed".

Wood said that in an initial discussion with Garrity, about the position, he made clear three considerations which would be critical to his decision whether or not to accept the offer.

Wood said he told Garrity that it was essential that it be made clear the appointment was an "individual" one, and that it "have no adverse impact to the University of Massachusetts."

He said the second consideration was that he be able "to carry out his University duties."

The third factor Wood said he was concerned about, was his "effectiveness in the post."

Satisfied that the three criteria would be met, Wood said he accepted the appointment.

He pointed out that trustees Clark and Shearer had previously served on the Council, without controversy, and saw no reason why he should not be able to also.

There was also a presentation to the trustees, made by a representative of the Kennedy Library Corporation, of the plans for the library that will be built on land adjoining the Harbor campus.

The presentation included an explanation of plans for the 99,000 square-foot library and theatre facility along with aerial photographs of the campus and the location for the library, and a table-sized scale model of the building.

The building will be divided, with 60 per cent of the space designated as "public," and the remaining 40 per cent going to the Kennedy "title."

The spokesperson said the building "represents an integrated long-range construction plan that takes advantage of the library's purpose and the University's function."

News in Brief

VFW questioned on all male status

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The Connecticut Commission on Human Rights and Opportunities has ordered the all-male Veterans of Foreign Wars to explain why it has denied membership to a woman.

Dorothy Warrender complained the VFW's chapter in Willimantic will only let her join its woman's auxiliary, even though she met the VFW requirement of having been in the military overseas during World War II.

Mrs. Warrender served in the Army in the Pacific from October, 1942 to December, 1945.

Commission examiner Jerome A. Scoler Tuesday ordered lawyers for the VFW and Mrs. Warrender to present their arguments at a hearing. The date of the hearing was not set.

Ford passes abortion issue to states

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford said yesterday he favors a constitutional amendment permitting individual states to decide whether to allow abortions.

Ford told a news conference on the South Lawn of the White House that his position on abortion was not similar to Jimmy Carter's, as the Democratic nominee said Tuesday in Pennsylvania.

Ford also charged that Carter had demonstrated a "lack of compassion" in saying he would have fired FBI Director Clarence Kelley for accepting gifts and services from subordinates.

Ford said he was "disappointed to say the least" in the statement that if Carter had been president he would have ousted Kelley for accepting gifts and services from subordinates.

He said that Carter "showed a lack of compassion" in failing to take into consideration that Kelley's wife was dying of cancer when work was done at government expense on his apartment in 1973.

Kelley has said the work was done without his knowledge, and Ford Saturday said he was satisfied with that explanation and Kelley would stay.

Ford took exception to Carter's remarks that both men had similar views on abortion.

Expert says cold medicines no good

WASHINGTON [AP] — Grandma's remedy for colds and hayfever was as good as any of the $735 million worth of nonprescription cough and cold medicines sold last year, a Harvard allergist said yesterday.

Dr. Francis C. Lowell, who headed a scientific panel's three-year study of the industry for the Food and Drug Administration, said neither the drugs nor grandma's prescription of bed rest, plenty of liquids and chicken soup will cure the common cold.

But grandma's advice was "as good as any," he said, and "there is no need for your ultimate welfare to take any medicine at all" for a cold.

Most of the nonprescription pills, potions and syrups provide temporary relief from the symptoms but some medicines are so weak that they "might not do very much," said Lowell, associate professor-emeritus of medicine at Harvard Medical School.

LAFAYETTE, Ore: Yamhill County Sheriff looks at a school bus that crashed into a railroad engine at a crossing early yesterday. There were 38 children and the driver aboard the bus when the crash took place. Two children were killed. The bus was on its way to McMinnville, Ore., to take the children to their second day of school when the tragedy occurred. (UPI)

Crash kills three

LAFAYETTE, Ore. [UPI] — A railroad engine pulling a caboose collided with a school bus yesterday, killing at least three youngsters and injuring scores of others.

Witnesses said the driver of the bus may have been blinded by the morning sun as he drove onto the railroad crossing and did not see the oncoming engine.

Yamhill County Sheriff W.L. Mekkers said first reports indicated between 30 and 35 children, mostly elementary school students, were on the bus. One of the confirmed deaths was that of a 7-year-old boy, but the ages and sexes of the others was not immediately known.

"They've all got some sort of injuries, ranging from real serious to not so serious," Mekkers said. A police officer at the scene described the crash as "the worst school bus accident I've ever seen."

The bus was struck on the right front side and was knocked about 100 yards from the track.

Hospitals in nearby McMinnville and Newberg were filled with the injured students. Some of the youngsters had to be taken to hospitals in Salem and Portland, about 35 miles from the crash site. Passenger cars were pressed into service when not enough ambulances were available to transport the injured.

A spokesman for Southern Pacific railroad said the engineer of the train, which included only an engine and a caboose, reported that the school bus approached the crossing from the engineer's side of the train. The engineer said he saw the sun shining off the side of the bus and theorized that the driver might have been blinded.

The crossing is in a clear area and under normal circumstances visibility extends to about 150 yards.

Riot squads open gunfire into demonstrating crowd

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — At least three persons were killed yesterday in a resurgence of violence between rival blacks in Soweto. In Cape Town, police charged into some 100 hymn-singing demonstrators and in a nearby township riot squads opened shotgun fire on rioters.

The violence flared hours before Prime Minister John Vorster was to go before the annual congress of his National Party to deliver a speech expected to broach the racial unrest that has left at least 306 dead since mid-June.

In the black Soweto township outside Johannesburg rival black groups battled and fire bombs touched off flames that killed three persons.

UPI correspondent Eric Van Ess, in a report from white-owned downtown Cape Town, said police rushed into a crowd of about 100 colored mixed race demonstrators who, watched by about 1,000 onlookers, sang hymns on the steps of a statue dominating a public square.

A senior police officer yelled at the crowd: "Break this up or I'll use violence to do it." Some of the demonstrators in the group scattered but others stayed put, singing, "Nearer My God to Thee," and "Onward Christian Soldiers". Soon, the entire crowd was back on the steps.

About 20 minutes later some 30 regular uniformed policemen and riot police clad in camouflage fatigues charged into the group with black rubber truncheons.

They chased the demonstrators through the downtown traffic and made several arrests, including two whites who had mingled with the colored children and teenagers.

No serious injuries were reported.

After the Grand Parade square was cleared, one angry bystander complained: "Why chase them away, they were only singing hymns."

In the colored township of Ravensmead, near Cape Town, crowds blocked traffic with flaming barricades of stones, concrete slabs, rusty gasoline drums and burning car tires.

Witnesses said the rioters smashed car windows with hails of rocks and when teargas and billy clubs failed to scatter them, police opened up with birdshot.

The new outbreaks followed a day of violence Tuesday in which four persons were shot to death by police in the Cape Town area during demonstrations by thousands of colored persons and a fifth was killed in Soweto.

Soviets call for settlement in Lebanon

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Soviet Union criticized the Moslem and Palestinian leftists in Lebanon for the first time yesterday in a major policy statement calling for a negotiated political solution to the Lebanese civil war.

"The only way to restore peaceful life is a political solution on the basis of a reasonable compromise," the Communist party newspaper Pravda said.

"All sides, in the interests of peace, must now exert efforts to remove differences through a dialogue."

A Western diplomat who recently described the Soviets' statements on Lebanon as "strident," said the Pravda article was very important and "a major, reasoned assessment of the situation from the Kremlin point of view."

Pravda's story, signed by "Observer" — understood as the pseudonym of a high Communist official who makes important international policy statements — was the first public criticism of the Lebanese leftists who have rejected peace proposals.

The customary Soviet attitude has been condemnation of the Christians, who are called "the forces of reaction," plus muted criticism of Syria's military intervention and support for the Palestinian and left-win groups.

Lobbyist clears Dole

WASHINGTON [AP] — Claude Wild Jr., the former Gulf Corp. lobbyist who is central figure in a federal investigation of illegal campaign contributions, said yesterday he erred in claiming he gave $2,000 in 1970 to Sen. Bob Dole, the Republican vice-presidential candidate.

Wild apologized to Dole and repudiated his earlier statement that he had given Dole the money from a legal Gulf "good government" fund in 1970 to pass on to other GOP Senate candidates.

I have been in error and consequently have done a serious disservice to Sen. Dole," Wild said.

Dole accepted Wild's explanation, calling the matter "an unfortunate incident." And, he added, "We're moving ahead with the campaign."

Wild's statement did not mention a second, potentially more serious allegation concerning the question of whether Dole received illegal Gulf funds in 1973 through Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania.

Dole claims he did not, but acknowledges he was questioned on the matter last March 8 by a federal grand jury convened by the special Watergate prosecutor.

Ever since the story about his grand jury appearance broke last Saturday the Kansas senator repeatedly has denied that he ever received Gulf contributions, either in 1973 when he was preparing for a re-election campaign, or in 1970.

Dole served as chairman of the GOP National Committee from 1971 to early 1973, and never has been implicated in any of the Watergate scandals that plagued Republicans during those years.

Wild told reporters earlier in the week he gave Dole $2,000 in 1970 to pass on to other candidates. He also said he could prove it because he had a letter from one of those candidates thanking him for the funds.

There never was any question about the legality of the supposed 1970 funds, since they came not from Gulf corporate money but from a legal "good government" fund.

However, had Dole received them and passed them on to others he might have violated other laws requiring such transfers to be reported in some manner.

In any case, Dole had denied the 1970 transaction, claiming he was "mystified" by Wild's allegations.

Referring to his earlier statement linking Dole to the 1970 transaction, Wild said, "I was questioned unexpectedly and before I had time to review my records of a meeting that allegedly happened six years earlier.

First campaign debate set for Philadelphia theater

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The first campaign "debate" on domestic and economic issues between President Ford and Jimmy Carter will be held Sept. 23 in Philadelphia, starting at 9:30 p.m. EDT and running for an hour and a half, it was announced today.

The League of Women Voters, which is sponsoring three joint appearances of the Republican and Democratic presidential candidates and a single meeting of the vice presidential candidates, announced the first confrontation will be at the Walnut Street Theater, the oldest theater in continuous use in the English-speaking world.

The debates will be carried by the three major commercial networks and one public television network. Radio coverage will be by one commercial and one public network.

The sites and dates of the other debates agreed to by the candidates have not yet been determined. The second presidential debate will focus on foreign and defense policy and tehe third will be open to any issues.

The joint appearance will not be an actual debate, but a question-and-answer session with both candidates present. A panel of reporters will ask the questions and be permitted a follow-up question after the first response. The opposing candidate also will be allowed to make a comment on each question. The league hopes to restrict replies to two minutes each.

The journalists and the debate moderator will be chosen by the league which, in sponsoring and arranging the debates as news events, has relieved the broadcasting networks of the necessity of giving all candidates equal air time.

However, the American Party filed suit today in U.S. District Court here to stop the Ford-Carter debates. Tom Anderson of Pigeon Forge, Tenn., the American Party presidential candidate, emphasized his group is separate from the American Independent Party, which has nominated former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox for president and also is considering legal action against the debate proposals. Independent presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy also has raised the possibility of going to court on the issue.

Kickback probe ends without indictments

BOSTON [UPI] — A grand jury investigation into alleged irregularities in the awarding of contracts by former Boston Redevelopment Authority Director John Warner concluded yesterday without indictments, according to state Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti.

The investigation by a Suffolk County Grand Jury reviewed allegations that Warner had received kickbacks from companies doing business with the agency.

The jury has been investigating the circumstances surrounding Warner's 1971 resignation.

It has been alleged Warner accepted $15,000 from a now deceased Wellesley contractor in exchange for an alteration in a city contract.

Mayor Kevin H. White testified before the grand jury during its five month probe, reportedly concerning reports White forced Warner's resignation after learning about the alleged kickbacks but did not inform law enforcement authorities.

Bellotti said 24 witnesses appeared before the grand jury. He said in a statement the grand jury authorized him to say the evidence "did not warrant the return of indictments."

Reacting to the grand jury's decision, White told reporters in his office he would not comment on the case "simply because I was a witness, not a defendant."

Maine Gov. cautions use of flu vaccine

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — Gov. James B. Longley complained yesterday about attempts to sell or scare the public to participate in a national flu immunization program and advised citizens to consult with a doctor before being vaccinated.

Longley said Maine government would continue to administer the program that is scheduled to begin next month, but he added that he could not fully endorse the mass vaccinations based on the available information on the threat of an epidemic and the risks associated with immunization.

"I do not feel that this is a program which should be 'sold' to the public like toothpaste or soapflakes," Longley said in a policy statement released at a State House news conference.

"I feel the government's responsibility is to alert the public and provide alternative solutions but not to scare or sell or pressure the public on problems of this nature."

Longley said it was important that persons most susceptible to a flu epidemic should consult with doctors at once about getting the vaccination. He included the elderly and persons with chronic respiratory problems in that category.

Longley noted that a committee he established on the flu immunization program has reported there is no indication that the swine flu will reappear in the United States or that it would spread to Maine.

The governor's immunization panel had earlier estimated that up to 800,000 Mainers, about 80 per cent of the state's population, would participate in the immunization program.

"There are dangers inherent in any mass program of this nature and the public should be aware of them," he said.

Longley asked doctors and public health officials to make themselves available to advise Maine residents on a case-by-case basis whether to participate in the immunization program. Longley urged the elderly and those with respiratory problems to seek such medical advice as soon as possible.

He also said he has asked the commissioner of Human Services to keep the public informed on the program and to advise the governor of developments and problems with the program.

"The governor does not pretend to be a doctor," he told reporters.

Bottle throwing resumes as Boston schools open

BOSTON [AP] — An outburst of stoning and bottle throwing near racially tense Charlestown High School marred the otherwise peaceful opening of Boston schools yesterday for their third year of court-ordered integration.

A crowd of about 200 teenagers and adults clustered in a low-income housing project in the largely Irish Charlestown section, occasionally heaving stones and bottles and dodging police.

One white boy who allegedly hit a policeman with a rock was charged with disorderly conduct.

South Boston, another white neighborhood with frequent racial trouble, was relatively quiet on the first day of school, though teenaged gangs clashed there with police Tuesday night.

In other parts of Boston, too, classes at the other 149 schools proceeded calmly, with only the usual opening day confusion.

Throughout the city, attendance was about 60 to 75 per cent of capacity, school officials said. About 64,000 students were scheduled to report yesterday. When schools with delayed openings begin classes Monday, the projected enrollment will be 75,000.

Charlestown was the scene of frequent disturbances on the first day of school last year.

This time, a crowd began gathering on the edge of the housing project just after the high school opened for the day. As police watched, youngsters started heaving empty bottles.

The crowd roared approval when a bottle struck a black U.S. marshal on the ankle. Then helmeted police moved into the crowd, pushing it down Bunker Hill Street away from the project, which is one block from the high school.

Women with their hair in pink rollers hurried along the sidewalks clutching the hands of small children.

One mother and father scanned the crowd looking for the 16-year-old son, who had stayed out of school.

"He wanted to go to school but he didn't want to go alone," said the woman. "He said half of them wanted to go and half of them didn't. Tomorrow he'll be there. We'll walk him up to school."

The school that is the object of the protest sits at the crest of the rise where the Battle of Bunker Hill was fought. It is in the middle of a clannish, working class neighborhood of narrow streets and wooden tenements.

Charlestown's 15,000 residents are cut off from the rest of Boston by railroad yards.

BOSTON, Mass.: Classes finished for the day, Black and White students leave Charlestown High School yesterday finishing their first day back in school for the fall semester and the start of the third year of court-ordered desegregation in Boston schools. (UPI)

Cabbies slash out at buses

BOSTON [AP] — As tire slashings apparently intended to promote a wildcat citywide taxi strike continued for the second night, cab owners announced plans to take legal action to settle the dispute that started the trouble.

Isaac Prager, attorney for the Independent Taxi Operators Association (ITOA) said the City of Boston Cab Association, which represents owners of ITOA, Checker Taxi Co., Town Taxi Inc. and several other firms, would take legal action today but would not say what action.

But ITOA Treasurer Felix Testa said the group would seek either a restraining order or an injunction in Suffolk Superior Court against Regal Bus Lines, whose new shuttle service from Logan International Airport to Cambridge sparked a dispute between airport officials and cabbies.

Police reported a number of cab tires swashed, mainly in downtown Boston, and were seeking several groups of men believed responsible for the damage who were cruising the city in taxis.

A rally of 200 cab drivers with Boston city councillors Louise Day Hicks and Frederick Langone ended peacefully last night, police said.

The rally occurred in East Boston, where the airport is, near the end of the Sumner and Callahan tunnels, the main link between the airport and down town Boston.

A rally on the same spot Tuesday night resulted in a call to extend a cab boycott of the airport, which began Monday, into a citywide taxi strike. But no strike has materialized.

Last night's rally followed a decision by the Massachusetts Port Authority not to suspend Regal's operating authority and a meeting of cabbies with Boston Mayor Kevin H. White.

A spokesman for White said later the mayor had met with a dozen representatives of the hundreds of drivers who came to City Hall to protest Regal's limousine service at the airport.

White told the group he suported their position on home rule for private carriers, the spokesman said.

Exiled Solzhenitsyn settles in neighboring Vermont

MONTPELIER, VT. [AP] — Exiled Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn is making his home in Vermont, after secretly moving from Zurich, Switzerland, to the United States last month, sources close to the family reported yesterday.

A friend of the Nobel Prize winner, Dr. Nichols Pervushin of McGill University in Montreal, confirmed the report but would not say where in the state Solzhenitsyn is living.

"That is for him to tell, if he decides," said Pervushin. "He has his reasons for keeping it to himself." He did not elaborate.

Solzhenitsyn was in Vermont last summer for a weeklong Russian seminar at Norwich University in Northfield. There were reports then that he was looking for property to buy in Vermont.

Sources in Zurich said Solzhenitsyn left there because of alleged harassment by Soviet secret police. They said he felt he was under constant surveillance by Soviet KGBX agents and several times asked for police protection after receiving threatening letters.

In the past year, however, Solzhenitsyn has spent much of his time in the United States and has been doing his major research at Stanford University in California. A move to the United States was regarded as likely even without harassment.

The Zurich registration office confirmed Solzhenitsyn left with his family in early August but said it had no information on his present whereabouts.

Solzhenitsyn came to Zurich in February 1974 after being expelled from the Soviet Union. In an interview then he said he had no plans to go to the United States, expected to stay "a long time" in Switzerland where his family had joined him, and eventually intended to return to the Soviet Union.

He rented an apartment in an unconspicuous hillside villa in Zurich, where the family lived in almost total seclusion.

The Zurich newspaper Tages-Anzeiger, which first reported his departure, said the most recent threatening letter prompted Solzhenitsyn to leave the country. Citing informed sources, the newspaper said the letter was written in Russian and mailed from Bern, the Swiss capital, earlier this summer while the writer was away in the United States. The sources said it threatened his family would be harmed unless he stopped speaking out against the Soviet regime.

Considered a traitor by the Soviet regime, the outspoken writer has been sharply critical of East-West detente.

He stirred controversy last March in an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp. when he described the West as a world without will, seeking only pleasure, while more and more countries are taken over by totalitarian communism. He complained the West had become a society for the protection of terrorists in which "no one can be sure that he'll get to the end of the street safe and sound."

Wallace admits wife tapped telephone

MONTGOMERY, Ala. [UPI] — Gov. George C. Wallace Wednesday admitted his wife had secretly ordered his bedroom telephone tapped. He called it "a purely domestic matter" and refused to explain it.

"There were some tapes and a device" found in the governor's mansion, Wallace told a hastily-called news conference. He said the tapes had been destroyed.

"There were no politics involved at all," Wallace said. "No one has been hurt; no one has been harmed."

Wallace's attractive wife, Cornelia, who has said she may run for governor when Wallace steps down, was not at the news conference.

Wallace refused to explain the "domestic matter" that brought the taping, and said the press should drop the matter because it "remains the business of me and my wife" and did not involve his duties as governor.

Wallace is 57; his wife is 37.

Wallace, looking drawn and tired, began by saying, "Being in politics is very difficult...Of course, it's been more difficult since I was shot in 1972."

"I appreciate very much what she (Mrs. Wallace) did for me" after the assassination attempt, he said, adding that she was more responsible than the doctors for his recovering from the wounds, which left him paralyzed from the waist down.

Published and broadcast reports in the last two days said security personnel last month found a tape recorder and a tap on the telephone in Wallace's bedroom at the mansion.

The reports said hundreds of tapes were found dating from last September until early August of this year.

Wallace's office had declined comment and referred reporters to Col. E.C. Dothard, the state public safety director, who insisted the reports were false.

Mrs. Wallace has said she is considering running for governor in 1978. Wallace said he did not expect her to run, but added, "If she does, I will be for her as strong as I was for my first wife."

Lurleen Wallace was elected governor in 1966, when Wallace was constitutionally barred from seeking re-election. She died of cancer in 1968 while still in office.

"There ain't any questions for you to ask," Wallace said, ending the news conference abruptly when reporters tried to question him. "If you folks in the press would leave us alone in our domestic matters, we'll solve it a lot quicker," he said.

★ Candidates

Curiously, both candidates say that their particular experience is an advantage in the election. O'Brien, a lawyer, is a former governor's Councillor and a Hampshire County Commissioner. He says that these two offices have allowed him to represent 84 of the 88 communities in the district, and thus better know the problems and concerns of his potential constituency.

McColgan formerly was a selectman in Northampton and a state representative. His most recent post was that of director of the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission, which he left in June to run ofor Congress. He says that his administrative and legislative experience make him the better candidate.

Both say that their approach to government and to the campaign make them the better candidate.

Ken Mosakowski, press aide for O'Brien, said that his candidate is more "bread and butter" on the issues. He supports a constitution and amendment to prohibit abortion, favors a prohibition on forced busing, and is against gun control.

Matthew Pitoniak, an aide to McColgan, said that his candidate is the more liberal of the two. McColgan takes the Carteresque position of being morally against abortion, but he is not in favor of a constitutional abortion prohibiting it. He states that the kind of action would put abortion "back into the alleyways."

McColgan also favors school busing for the purpose of intergration as a "judical tool of last resort" — precisely what is stated in the Democratic national platform.

The two candidates have taken decidedly different approaches to the campaign itself. McColgan has budgeted no money for television, preferring a door-to-door campaign. Pitoniak said that McColgan has visited every town in the vast district.

Mosakowski said that there is no physical way for O'Brien to "shake every hand in the 88 towns" and O'Brien has been a regular visitor to First District living rooms through television advertisements.

But the candidates do agree on many issues. Both have expressed support for the Humphrey-Hawkins jobs bill, both have stressed the need for more stringent punishment for perpetrators of violent crimes.

It is unlikely that the student vote will make a emarked difference in the final tabulation, and they have pretty much been ignored. More important has been the industrial areas like Pittsfield and the large number of farmers in the district.

There has been a bit of bad blood between the candidates. Both sincerely feel that they are the better choice. It does not appear, however, that the candidates will damage each other enough to hurt in the November effort against the favored Conte.

House staff testifies they did not leak spy report

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Twelve House Intelligence Committee staff members testified Wednesday they did not leak the panel's secret spy agency report to CBS reporter Daniel Schorr and do not know who did.

The House Ethics Committee, working toward a showdown with Schorr himself that could raise classic constitutional questions, then went into closed session for further testimony in its five-month, $135,000 probe of the intelligence report leak.

Five of the 18 persons called to testify Wednesday did not appear. All were staff members of the intelligence panel which went out of business earlier this year after a long investigation of covert U.S. intelligence operations.

The intelligence committee produced a report highly critical of CIA covert operations and full of classified information. The full House, prodded by President Ford, voted to suppress the report until Ford could censor it.

Much of the report, however, was printed verbatim in New York's Village Voice newspaper. Schorr, since temporarily suspended by CBS, admitted he passed the report to the newspaper and the House ordered the Ethics Committee to determine who gave it to him.

During open hearings Wednesday, 12 witnesses testified they had not given Schorr the report and did not know how he got it.

All previous witnesses from the intelligence committee, Congress, the executive branch and the CIA itself have said essentially the same thing.

On Aug. 25, the committee voted to subpoena Schorr for testimony next week — setting up direct clash between the legal principles of freedom of the press and Congress' right to investigate.

Schorr has said he will honor the subpoena but will not disclose the source of the leak under any circumstances.

The ethics panel has spent $134,456 of the $150,000 it was budgeted for the Schorr probe.

It recently voted to request another $100,000 to complete the investigation, but the House might refuse that request.

Agnew successor faces dual counts

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Gov. Marvin Mandel, who succeeded Spiro T. Agnew eight years ago and became one of the most powerful chief executives in Maryland history, went on trial Wednesday on racketeering and mail fraud charges. He said he felt confident of vindication.

Jury selection was expected to last through Friday. Judge John H. Pratt, presiding over the same courtroom in which Agnew resigned the vice presidency, predicted the trial would last several months.

Mandel told a crowd outside the federal courthouse, "I feel good. I feel confident."

W. Dale Hess, a co-defendant and long-time associate of Mandel who served with the governor in the House of Delegates, said there was "no question we're going to win. No question about it."

Mandel and four co-defendants are accused of violating mail fraud and anti-racketeering laws in connection with race track legislation.

The governor, whose control over the legislature and state government has been unrivaled in modern Maryland history, is accused of accepting business interests in exchange for supporting the legislation that benefited some friends.

The charges stem from a five year federal investigation of political corruption in Maryland that decimated the leadership of both political parties. That investigation resulted in Agnew's resignation as vice president and the imprisonment of the chief executives of two of state's four largest counties.

Pratt read a list of potential witnesses that included a state court of special appeals judge, the state racing commissioner and the chief fundraiser for the Roman Catholic missionary order, the Pallotine Fathers, who lent the governor $54,000 that helped finance his 1974 divorce.

The witness list included Father Guido John Carcich, the former chief of fund-raising for the Pallottine missionary order.

The Pallottines' fund-raising activities became controversial after it was revealed that most of the money they collected for overseas charities was spent on business ventures and investments.

Cadets rescue trio from burning house

LEXTINGTON, Va. [UPI] — Two Virginia Military Institute cadets rescued two women and an infant from a burning house and then ran back to school without explanation because they were afraid of getting demerits for being late, school authorities said Wednesday.

Police said 82-year-old Mattie Massey, who was on the second floor of the cinder block home, died in the blaze Tuesday.

VMI information officer Col. Edwin Dooley said the two cadets, 20-year-old Samuel Murphy of Norfolk and 17-year-old George Walsh of McLean, were practicing soccer nearby when they heard screams.

The two ran to the front door of the house, but were unable to get in because of heavy smoke, Dooley said. Walsh and Murphy pushed their way in the back door and found two women and an infant huddled inside.

As the victims were led to safety they told the two cadets there was an elderly woman on the second floor of the house. Dooley said Walsh, who worked for the local volunteer fire department during the summer, ran back into the house but was unable to get up the back stairs.

As Lextington firefighters arrived on the scene, the cadets handed the women and child and ran off without identifying themselves. "They were afraid they would get demerits for being late," Dooley said.

Dooley said the two made it back to school in time and their identity was not learned until authorities contacted the school about the rescue.

FCC finds CBS in violation

WASHINGTON [AP] — A national organization that campaigns for stronger U.S. military defenses complained to the Federal Communications Commission Wednesday that CBS television news refuses to air its views.

The American Security Council Education Foundation asked the FCC to find that CBS and its owned and operated TV stations have violated the fairness doctrine and require that contrasting views be presented.

John Fisher, president of the foundation, told a news conference "we don't want equal time but reasonable opportunities" for presentation of views he said are held by a majority of Americans. "We're being blanked out" now, he said.

CBS had no immediate comment.

Fisher said the foundation is going to the FCC because CBS has not changed its "pattern of advocacy journalism" since the foundation presented a 37-month study of CBS two years ago.

The foundation focused on CBS because it has the most member stations and it was too big an undertaking to tackle all three networks, Fisher said. He said it was his personal opinion that "NBC is not all that different" and "ABC is better mainly because of Howard K. Smith.

Specifically, the foundation asked the FCC to require CBS to "begin providing reasonable opportunities for responsible persons to express the following contrasting views:

"The Soviet Union is militarily superior to the United States.

"The United States should be militarily superior to the Soviet Union.

"The United States should have the objective of winning the conflict between the two systems."

Parents proud of nude beauty

BOSTON [UPI] — Just what does one do after being crowned the new Ms. International Nude for 1976?

"The first thing I did was call my father," said Corinne Alphen, of Arlington, who won the title in Atlantic City last Saturday. "He couldn't believe it and wasn't sure what to make of it. My mother told everybody."

Corinne, 21, is a dancer at the Two O'Clock Lounge in Boston's Adult Entertainment District, fondly known as the "Combat Zone." She and seven other dancers working the Zone entered the contest at the last moment.

According to Ms. Alphen, the contest is as professional and legitimate as any other beauty pageant. "There was no vulgarity, no obscenities, lots of couples and lots of women," she said of the audience of 1,500 persons.

Only 700 people showed in Boston last month for the Miss World-USA pageant.

The Ms. International Nude contest followed the usual format. The 19 contestants competed in evening gown, swimsuit and nude events and of course a dramatic question for the finalists.

When emcee Debbie Boon asked Corinne what being Ms. International Nude meant to her she was ready. "I would sincerely consider it a privilege to hold the title of Ms. International Nude and also for the fun and glory of achievement in competing."

The contest winner receives a cash prize of $1,000 and $4,000 in contracts including the possibility of posing for magazines. Corinne, a divorcee, said she will use some of the money for her son's school clothes.

Alphen appeared on television several years ago in a minor role on a local station's game show. She has been dancing at the lounge for three and a half years.

Calley favors blanket amnesty

MACON, Ga. [UPI] — Former Army Lt. Willaim L. Calley, who was convicted of murdering 22 Vietnamese civilians, said today he favors blanket amnesty for those who dodged military service during the Vietnam war.

"I am for blanket amnesty," said Calley in a radio interview WCRY. "Let me come right out and say that."

The former officer, who served about three years of a 10-year prison term for the massacre of civilians at My Lai in 1963, appeared on a one-hour show with host former Macron Mayor Ronnie Thompson.

Calley was asked his views on amnesty and how they compared with Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter who has said he is for pardoning those who evaded the military draft.

"I as an American and you as an American have never been told what the war was all about," he said. "They have never come up with a reason for fighting that war...other than the fact I was following the orders of my commander in chief. Without any more explanation than that I can't come up and say those people were wrong."

Triplets no trouble together

GLASTONBURY, Conn. [AP] — It was a relatively quiet day for Pat Callahan and it was a unique day for the kindergarten at the Hebron School. The Callahan triplets began school.

Michael, Mark and Laurie Callahan occupied one third of the school van that took them to their half-day at school. The Callahans asked that the children be separated in school, but Hebron School has only two kindergartens, so Michael and Laurie will be together, while Mark will be on his own.

Michael and Laurie are the quieter members of the trio, but Mrs. Callahan says Mark's mischievous personality can spark things with no trouble..

As for Mrs. Callahan, minus her three almost 6-year-old children, she said she will "bask in the solitude."

She said the children are friends. "Even though they love having other children to play with, if they get interested in something together — that's it — they can shut off everybody around them," Mrs. Callahan said.

The Callahans moved to Glastonbury from Marlborough last June and already they are considered somewhat of a novelty. They have on other child, Cheryl, 11.

The triplets were born in St. Francis Hospital in Hartford, just one year after another set of triplets had been born there, which she said is a rare occurrence.

You're an artist

Tonite's inspiration comes to you through the Classical composer — Antonio Vivaldi, a book called "The Concerned Photographer"; and would probably be better read by candle light, however the dining commons will probably have to do. Via the winding road, I've come to the conclusion that we are all artists — yes even you "I can't draw a straight line"-ers.

It seems that humans have this absurd compulsion to classify and define themselves and their world. When all the classifications are compiled, the pull-out centerfold always seems to be "culture", with artists being the most attractive. They are the ones that have wielded their expressions through the various tools of what have come to be "art forms". For them it is the "art form" that gives the "raison d'etre" which literally translated means the "reason for being". Hah, my looser translation is just another "excuse for existing."

There was a chronicler of the artistic life and times of Paris in the 20's & 30's. He was a photographer named Andre Kertesz: "The camera is my tool through which I try to give a reason to everything and to every happening around me. Everything is a subject." Don't get me wrong, I love his work, it's just that I think that we can apply the use of his definition to an art that needs no tools.

Why does expression have to be limited to "art forms"? Just think of yourself as the tool of your expression. Aren't we constantly coloring our worlds with our interpretations? Our bodies are sculptures that are carving space and time with a rhythm all our own. I like to think of Woolworths as our best Museum of Modern Art.

I'm the first to admit that I'm bending those definitions of "art" that have taken many greater minds than mine to come up with but I'm bothered by the selectivity of the ones that are considered "artists". One of the grandaddys of Modern Art — Wassily Kandinsky said that it's color and form that have a basic communications with the soul (like music); not the completed object d'art. So why can't I twist that around, or rather make the addition that movement and vision as well can communicate to that thing we call our soul.

I always liked Piet Hein's little poem — ARS BREVIS:

There is one art,
no more,
no less:
to do all things with art-
lessness.

Art like everything else must have its little bastards and I wouldn't expect for everyone to be a Kertisz or Van Gogh; some folks are just lucky I guess.

Sharing, not fearing, at 'Liberation'

To the Editor:

On September 7th a Collegian reporter named Michael Simons visited us on the Liberation Corridor in Dickinson House and wrote a news story entitled, "Hidden 'liberation corridor' — harmony, unity, and fear."

We were enthusiastic about this article because of the publicity value to us, since we are in the middle of a membership drive to invite more people to move on the corridor.

Unfortunately, Mr. Simons assumed we had "an overwhelming fear of being found out," and compounded this by refusing to tell where we live. Ironically, there was a notice about the corridor on the notice page of the same Collegian issue. Mr. Simons failed to help us in our membership drive by misquoting the people interviewed and making unfounded assumptions.

The Liberation Corridor is a community devoted to political, personal, and group growth and action. The corridor is a place where we can share our ideas, learn from each other, and work together.

Mr. Simons said a climate of "fear" permeates our corridor, and said that only one person he interviewed allowed her name to be used in the piece. It turns out that everyone withdrew permission to use their names when they discovered what sort of a lurid story Mr. Simons was planning on writing.

When Simons was confronted about his tendency to sensationalize the facts, he shrugged and replied, "that's what sells newspapers."

In this same vein, when corridor member Fatima Moitoza told Mr. Simons her nick name, he, reported it as an "alias"! In fact, Mr. Simons seemed more interested in creating a story than reporting one. He neglected to mention that the president of the Orchard Hill Area Government, Deborah Love, and the parliamentarian of the Student Senate, Adam Auster, both live on the Liberation Corridor, and that many of us are into personal, spiritual, and political growth. He did devote a lot of time to speculation about the sexual preference of corridor members, and was visibly disappointed during the interview when he discovered corridor members who are not gay. In fact, as Mr. Simons left corridor counselor David Markman's room he asked, "do you know where i can find a lesbian?"

. We feel that an individual's sexual preference is his or her own business, and that our community exists regardless of our personal sexualty. Mr. Simons would have the student community believe the corridor exists because of our sexuality. This is unfair to both the gay and non-gay members of our community.

Had Mr. Simons decided to write an honest story about the Liberation Corridor, he could have found many things — both good and bad — worthy of his attention.

Instead, he chose to misquote corridor members, write misleading statements, and manufacture untruths so that his story could , as he put it, "sell newspapers."

Far from being a hidden place where everyone fears being found out, the liberation corridor is an open, growing community of people. In fact, we cordially invite all members of the student community to visit us any time and decide for themselves how hidden we are.

Incidentally, we still have spaces for one or two more people on the corridor. Anyone interested should telephone Dave at 6-6622.

Best wishes from the "corridor of fear."

Dave Markman
and 14 signatures

[Editor's note: A resident of Liberation Corridor, Adam Auster, who is also a Collegian reporter is writing a story, clarifying the aims and lifestyles existing at the corridor.]

The midnight caller

It was 2 AM and Ma Bell almost rang herself off the cradle as I jumped up from a sound sleep to answer.

"Yea..."

"Bosso Ostonado?"

"You got it, pal."

"This is Ralph."

'"So?"

"Suckapie."

"Look buddy, I don't need you to call me at 2 AM just to tell me to suck on a pie!"

"No, Ralph Suckapie. That's my name."

I took a second to clear my head and figure out what was going on. It seemed that the phone rang and I answered it, and now I was talking.

"So?"

"Can we talk?"

"We seem to be doing pretty well so far."

"I've got to see you about President Ford."

"I don't sell insurance anymore."

"No, I've got him."

"You've got him where?"

"Here, at my place."

"You kidnapped the president?"

"That's right."

I took a second to clear my head and figure out what was going on. It seemed that the phone rang and I answered it and now I was talking to a man who kidnapped the president.

"So?"

"I thought you might like to know."

"Why would I like to know."

"You're a great private-eye, right?"

"Right!"

"Well you'd probably catch me sooner or later, right?"

"What makes you think I'd want to even look for you?"

"Cause I have the president."

"That's not a real good reason."

"Well anyway, if you did look for me you'd probably find me."

"So?"

"So let's make a deal."

"You've got Monty Hall there too?"

"No, but I'll sell you the president."

"How 'bout a trade. I'll give you Park Place, the electric company and B&O Railroad."

"Come on, get serious."

"I'm talking to a man who's selling me the president and tell me to be serious."

"It'll make you famous."

"How much do you want for him?"

"Ten million dollars."

I put the phone back in the cradle and pulled the covers over my head figuring it was all a bad dream. It was only a minute later that the phone rang again.

"Yea?"

"How about five million?"

"How about you never calling me again."

"How about a million and I'll let you keep Air Force one."

"Look Mac, I don't even want president Ford I'm sure as hell not going to pay for him."

"Even if he promises to read more?"

"Good-night Turkey."

"All right, I'll give him to you for nothing."

"I don't want him!"

"Nobody else wants him!"

"I can't help that, just let me get some sleep."

"Look Bosso, give me a break, I've been calling for weeks and nobody wants this guy."

"How long have you had him?"

"Since last April."

"Who's the guy I've been seeing on TV?"

"Oh that's him but he promised me he'd come back after every speech."

"And he did?"

"He's a man of his word."

"I think the two of you are crazy, now who is this, really?"

"Promise not to tell?"

"Come on!"

"Dole, Robert Dole."

"Dole?! What are you kidnapping the president for you're the nominee for vice-president."

"I'm trying to get rid of him so I can be president."

"Don't you think it would be better to wait and see if you're elected first?"

"You think so?"

"Good-night Dole."

I hung up the phone and stumbled back to bed but I remembered thinking just before falling asleep, "This is going to be one hell of an election year."

polemic poles

A candidate's rise

By GEORGE SOMMERS

It seems to be trendy on campus these days to be distrustful of Democratic nominee Jimmy Carter. One possible explanation is a kind of underlying prejudice against his "redneck" origins and his unabashed espousal of born-again Christianism. More importantly, some take the attitude that it is a cop-out to support Carter because he is not a liberal in the tradition of Ted Kennedy or Morris Udall or even Hubert Humphrey. Those who take this position are more often than not supporters of former Sen. Gene McCarthy, whose record for unsuccessful attempts for the presidency comes close to rivalling Harold Stassen's, and whose current quixotic bid for the presidency on the third party ticket will serve only to drain away votes from Carter to the benefit of Gerald Ford.

Carter may not be as liberal as George McGovern, but Carter's chances of winning are greater than McGovern's ever were, especially if liberals are above insisting upon ideological purity. Jimmy Carter has repeatedly been accused of being fuzzy on the issues. In truth, his strategy is to appeal to everyone and offend nobody by keeping to the center. Carter's popularity extends from inner-city blacks to southern rednecks. If he is to win the election, he cannot afford to offend any of these groups by taking stands to far from the center of the spectrum.

Actually, Carter has made important concessions to both the right — his proposal for a stream lined budget and his opposition to forced busing — and the left — his selection of Sen. Walter Mondale as running mate and his idea of a pardon for Vietnam war resisters.

Carter is thought by some to be an unknown outsider — in contrast to good ol' Gerry Ford — an insister of Washington politics for decades on end. But examination of the record of Nixon's pardoner should be enough to convince anyone to take a gamble on the Georgia governor.

Ford has the dubious distinction of being the most veto prone president in history and the most non-progressive since Herbert Hoover. The Ford-Nixon administration have failed miserable in combatting inflation and unemployment. It is high time to elect a leader who will work with rather than against Congress, and get some sound Democratic policies to stimulate the economy. A rubber-stamp approval of Richard Nixon's appointed choice would be a rubber-stamp approval of Richard Nixon's stagnant economic policies.

Of course, there is the old tired out excuse always given by non-voters tht there is no difference between the two candidates. The campaign styles of Ford and Carter prove the total inaccuracy of that claim. Ford is dull, uninspired, and somewhat deficient in intelligence, his speeches are less than passionate. Only his accidental incumbency kept him from handing the GOP nomination to the articulate and charismatic Ronald Reagan. Ford's advisers had to plead with him to keep a low profile during the pre-election months to prevent him from making a total klutz of himself. The man cannot even get off an airplane without bashing his head.

Carter, by contrast, has conducted one of the shrewdest and most brilliant campaigns since Jack Kennedy. True, his talk of Christian fundamentalism borders on corniness — but when he gets down to issues of substances, he is reasonable and knowledgeable.

Carter's rise came about without the help of any big organized special interest groups — not even big labor. Ford is a hack who couldn't operate without the help of his backroom, cloakroom buddies. Hopefully, voters in the upcoming election will scrutinize Ford better than they did with the last incumbent president who was up for re-election.

Carter's contradictions

By JAMES A. NOLLET

Jesus said, "You have heard it said, 'an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth', but what I say unto you is: offer no resistance to injury. When a person strikes you on the right cheek, turn and offer him the other." — Matt. 5, 38-39.

In light of Jimmy Carter's avowed religious persuasion, could he order the Strategic Air Command to retaliate in the event of a Soviet first strike? More generally, if elected, could Mr. Carter function as Commander-in-Chief?

I base the question upon the above quote from the New Testament, a passage which has troubled Christianity ever since Constantine legitimatized the religion. In extremis, the quote appears to sanction self-destruction. While your friendly neighborhood heretic can assure you the passage has had little effect on the sometimes bloody history of Nicean Christianity, there have been Christian sects which have led totally pacific and non-retaliatory lives.

Two such groups in modern times have been the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Society of Friends, or Quakers. The former have suffered much for their beliefs, especially since their studied non-allegiance to any human government has incurred the wrath of this century's leading totalitarian states. To this day, Jehovah's Witnesses are imprisoned, robbed, and raped in such places as the Soviet Union, and in none of these places do they offer any resistance. In Nazi camps, Witnesses were the one group of prisoners Nazis allowed to perform barbering and shaving activities, because they knew Witnesses would not attack Nazis with barbering utensils.

As for the Quakers, it is enough to recall that Richard Nixon is a Quaker, and according to Woodward and Bernstein, once persuaded Henry Kissinger to prayer with the plea, "Well, you're not a very orthodox Jew, and I'm not a very good Quaker, but we need to pray." During Mr. Nixon's first term, the American Society of Friends considered excommunicating Nixon because, as Commander-in-Chief, he controlled the winding down of the Vietnam War.

In light of the fact that mainstream Christianity, as epitomized by Aquinas, defends the concept of a "just war" and a Christian's participation in it, what does this have to do with Jimmy Carter, a former naval officer? Just this: by his own admission, or witnessing, if you will, Jimmy Carter is not your ordinary christian. He is "born again." He is a preacher, an evangelizer. As a daily student of The Bible, he professes literal interpretation and belief. He is exactly the sort of Christian who should be troubled by participation in the U.S. Armed Forces.

Since Mr. Carter is a Baptist, I asked a friend of mine who is entering the Baptist ministry the same question this column publically poses. After much thought, he answered, "Even if it did clash with his religious beliefs, I think Carter could function as Commander-in-Chief, because as president, he will be the leader of people who do not share his persuasions, and he will have to represent their desires as well as his own."

I'm not satisfied with this answer, for the original question sums up the problem many people have about Carter, which is namely a questioning of philosophy and action. Mr. Carter recently tried to sneak a fastball past the Catholic Bishops. He told them that while he personally opposed abortion, he would not support a constitutional amendment banning abortion. Well, the bishops sneaked his pitch out of the ballpark. They rightly said it was not enough to oppose abortion personally while not fighting it legislatively. In effect, they said, "Who cares what you personally believe? For practical purposes, the only thing that matters is, what will you do?" It is at best hypocritical, and at worst dishonest, for a public figure at once to hold a view and yet refrain from acting accordingly.

Since the topic is Jimmy Carter's inconsistencies, another fair question is: How can Jimmy Carter simultaneously call for less government and for new social and labor bills which have the potential to bloat the federal government by 50 per cent?

Personally, I think the man is a faker.

Getting involved

By PAUL LOGUE, JR.

"What experience do you have?"

"Well, I've been in college for the past four years and it was pretty hard to hold a job while going to school."

"How well do you work with people, since this job brings you into contact with somebody from just about every different background?"

"I lived in a Co-ed dormitory for a while but it was too hectic for me so I moved off-campus."

"Did you become involved in the community where you lived?"

"Not exactly, most everybody kept to themselves."

"Well, I can't say that you aren't qualified for the job since you have much of the basic material needed in your transcript, but I really need somebody who can work under pressure and is able to deal with the various personalities encountered in a job like this."

"Well if you give me a chance I know I can do it."

"We will give you a call if we need you, Good-bye."

So the old coin rolls out of your fingers. Damn, how are you supposed to gain experience in human relations and behavior if you're not enrolled in the dept.?

The idea is to get involved with your community now. Your domitory needs the helping hand you can give. The newspaper is alway looking for new blood. The Student Center for Educational Research provides students with in depth studies in the University at large. Boltwood-Belchertown Project puts you in touch with some very needed human beings searching for love and understanding, guidance and direction.

There are over 600 Recognized Student Organizations which will give you the experience of deadlines, personnel skills, patience control, legwork and basic human democracy. The Student Government Association will earn you this and much more.

I urge you all to take an active role in the area of your choice this semester. It will be both for your own good and for the overall good of the community. Stand up and be counted.

The Seabrook struggle

The state of New Hampshire has long been noted for its ultra-right-wing political climate.

So last night's news of the conviction and sentencing of the Seabrook 11 (see the story on page 3 of this issue), can only sharpen the fascist image connoted with that state's name.

The Seabrook 11 were charged with contempt of court when they violated a court injunction against their participation in the massive August 22 occupation of the Public Service Company (despite its name, it is a private corporation) nuke site.

Because presiding N.H. Judge Maurice Bois — the same judge who issued the injunction — agreed to give a sentence of six months or less, the defendants were purposely put on trial without a jury.

Judge Bois, it should be pointed out, was annointed a judge by N.H. Governor Meldrim Thomson, who is openly pro-nuke. (The tyrant governor has gained notoriety recently for advocating supplying the National Guard with nuclear weapons and threatening to fly the state flag at half mast if Amnesty is ever declared.) After the Seabrook occupation, Thomson visited the site personally to congratulate the arresting officers.

From the start of the legal actions against the defendants, Judge Bois showed his hostility to them by imposing a $500 bail, with no personal recognizance releases.

Then, when pre-trial motions were filed by the defense, Judge Bois denied motions to back down from the case because of prejudice, that he delay the trial to allow the defense to adequately prepare, and that he discover important evidence.

But Bois, the judge and the jury, seemed determined to reach his guilty verdict as soon as possible and put the Seabrook 11 where he, Thomson and the Public Service Company wanted them — the the slammer. And to cap off his repressive performance on the bench, Judge Bois disallowed any appeal possibilities for the defendants.

Judge Bois and his colleagues should begin to prepare for a log jam in their police state courts; the demonstrations and occupations and arrests have only begun.

As local anti-nuke activist Harvey Wasserman told the throng at the August 22 Seabrook rally, "This is the shot heard 'round the world for the anti-nuclear movement!"

Some 70 people from the UMass community attended an organizational meeting last night to prepare a nuclear power teach-in next month. MassPIRG, coordinating the effort, is joining with the Clamshell Alliance in N.H. and other anti-nuke groups in educating people throughout New England on the technology that puts profits before people. The next Seabrook mass-action is slated for October 23.

So hold off making plans for that weekend. And maybe the grandchildren you tell how you helped stop a nuke won't be mutants.

'Coked out'

AUSTIN, Tex. [UPI] – A woman in labor with her first child was forced to pose for pictures with a package of cocaine before Mexican police would allow her to see a doctor, according to an affidavit given a University of Texas law student by the woman's husband.

Paul Davis Parsons, a second year law student, visited four federal prisons near Mexico City last month and talked with American inmates, most of whom are held on drug charges.

Parsons said the woman was arrested because her husband had received a package in the mail and delivered it to a motel room. An affidavit given the law student by the husband said the wife was unaware the package contained cocaine.

"Clearly Maria (not her real name) was being unjustly implicated in something in which she had no part, but the police told her that if she did not pose she could not be taken to the doctor who could authorize her transfer to the hospital, and would be left there to give birth on the floor, alone in the room," the affidavit said.

The husband, an American citizen, was sentenced to 12 years and 7 months in prison, and his wife, a Bolivian, was sentenced to 9½ years.

SPECIAL SR-56 $10.00 Rebate Fill out coupon

The SR-56 is a tremendously powerful slide rule calculator. Yet you can program it whenever you're ready.

There are 74 preprogrammed functions and operations. You can do arithmetic within all 10 memories†. It has AOS – a unique algebraic operating system that lets you handle problems with up to 9 levels of parentheses. There's also polar to rectangular conversion – built in. Mean. Standard deviation. Degrees, radians, grads. And, it works with TI's new printer – the PC-100.

Chances are, you'll be programming. That's what professionals in your field are doing – right now. And with an SR-56 you're ready. It has 100-merged prefix program steps. 6 logical decision functions. 4 levels of subroutines. You can decrement and skip on zero to iterate a loop as many times as you specify. There are 4 levels of subroutine to let you use your program steps to maximum advantage. And, you can even compare a test register with the display to make a conditional branch. So you can check an intermediate result for convergence, or a maximum.

The edge you need. Now. And in your career.

Is Social Security in danger?

SACRAMENTO, Cal., [Pacific News Service] – "Without Social Security I wouldn't be able to survive," says Hilda Creque, a 64-year-old widow from El Cerrito, Ca., who recently retited after 20 years as a state clerical worker. Her California state pension provides only $200 a month, while her Social Security adds $280 more and goes up with the cost of living.

But thousands of current state and local employes across the country – especially lower-paid and shorter-term workers – face a more hazardous financial future.

Their security – and perhaps the solvency of the social security system itself – is threatened by the possible withdrawal from the system of hundreds of state and local governments caught in budgetary squeezes.

Most publicized of the pending pull-outs is New York City, where Mayor Abraham Beame claims a city-wide withdrawal from Social Security could save his cash-starved city as much as $250 million a year.

Now, the state of California has just held hearings to investigate whether to withdraw from Social Security coverage for its employes.

Social Security – which now insures nine out of 10 U.S. workers for retirement, disability or death – is mandatory only for employes in private industry. State and local employes were at first excluded from the system; now nearly nine million – or 70 per cent of the total – are covered.

But while most public employes get to choose whether they want Social Security, their employers – legislatures, city councils, boards of supervisors – have unilateral and irrevocable power to terminate that coverage. Workers – if polled – do sometimes opt to leave the system for private pension plans, but employers are not required to take such polls.

Since 1959, 346 states, counties, cities and special districts have dropped out.

And as of June 30 this year, 283 more governmental jurisdictions had requested to leave the system and were waiting out the required two-year period. They comprised 44 per cent of all such requests ever received by the Social Security system.

Pullouts will not affect the Social Security benefits of already retired public employes like Hilda Creque.

But current employes – especially short-term employes and women in low-paying clerical jobs – are the ones who stand to lose the most if state and local governments do leave the system.

In general, long-term employes and high-salaried administrators with job security are in the best position to weather the loss of benefits and gain from a private pension plan. Many such employes have either already worked enough quarters to be eligible for full Social Security benefits or will work long enough to be covered by a private plan.

In fact, one of the main groups lobbying for California to withdraw from the system is the 86,000-member California State Employes Assoc. (CSEA), which represents most of the state management and administrative personnel.

Lower paid workers, however, if not covered by a private plan, would have only small state pensions to fall back on. And many women – especially those with family responsibilities – often do not stay on a particular job long enough to qualify for a pension at all – whether private or state. (Under new federal regulations, an employe needs five years in one job to qualify.)

Sixty-two per cent of California's women employes with Social Security coverage have worked less than five years – compared to less than half the men, according to Carl Blechinger of the California Public Employes' Retirement System.

Without private or state pension benefits, such short-term workers can rely only on Social Security for coverage that continues from one job to another.

The Social Security system has been criticized as inefficient because it violates traditional insurance principles, under which everyone pays in but not everyone collects. Some critics have suggested replacing it with an optional program of private insurance that could involve substantial savings for some employes.

But at a mid-August hearing in San Francisco of the Commission on State Government Organization and Economy, Robert Kalman, health and pension specialist for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes (AFSCME), argued that without Social Security "workers would lose more in benefits than what they would appear to save in Social Security contributions."

These benefits would include: carrying credits from one employer to another, unlike employe-sponsored pension plans; permanent and total disability benefits, not automatically part of most other pension plans; non-taxable retirement benefits, unlike most pensions; and cost-of-living adjustments, unlike most other plans.

Just how much state and local governments actually will save by withdrawing from Social Security is debatable.

Vietnamese mother dies after losing two children

[PNS] – The body of Huynh Thi O lies in an unmarked grave in Yuma, Ariz.

Linh, as her friends knew her, fled her native Vietnam 15 months ago because she feared for the lives of her two half-American children in a communist country. She died last month because an American family had taken away her children for adoption.

Linh died of a gunshot wound in the home of Deputy Sheriff John Goldthorpe, her former sponsor who had rejected her pleas for return of the five-year-old-girl, Mai Hang, and her three-year-old boy, Hung.

The roots of Linh's dispute with the Goldthorpes date back to June 1975, shortly after she and her children moved into their temporary American home.

Deputy Sheriff Goldthorpe took Linh to the courthouse to sign papers releasing her children to him for adoption. Linh, who had little or no written knowledge of English, later told friends she understood the papers to be a merely technical temporary transfer of custody of her children to the Goldthorpes.

She said the Goldthorpes told her she could regain legal custody as soon as she married or became self-supporting.

Two months ago Linh found work as a seamstress and asked the Goldthorpes for return of the children. When the Goldthorpes told her they intended to adopt the children permanently, Linh flew into a rage.

Goldthorpe and another deputy sheriff took Linh to Desert Manor, a private mental hospital in Yuma, where she was involuntarily committed under the name of Lynn Marie Goldthorpe.

Linh's Vietnamese friends say that when they tried to locate her, Goldthorpe told them she had moved to Tucson without her children. After 10 days under lock and key Linh was traced down by her friends and released.

Once freed, Linh went to Carlos Flores, a resettlement officer for the U.S. Catholic Conference in Tucson, for assistance in regaining custody of Mai Hang and Hung. Flores notes, "I read the release, and there were no indications of any mental disorder."

With the help of Flores and others, Linh began to prepare a legal challenge to the Goldthorpes' adoption proceedings. The Goldthorpes made it clear they would continue to oppose returning the children.

Two gypsy women face burglary charges

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] – An effort will be made Friday to dismiss burglary charges against two gypsy women arrested in West Hartford, their attorney said Wednesday.

Attorney Ira Grudberg said his clients, Maria Kovalska, 18, and Katrina Lucas, 32, both of Newark, N.J., faced third-degree burglary charges for an incident in which no money was taken.

He said they were arrested without warrants so it was unclear on what basis the charge was made.

A third charge, third-degree larceny, was lodged against Miss Kovalska in connection with the alleged theft of $120 in July.

Bond for the woman was lowered from $10,000 to $2,000 at a hearing Tuesday and was posted for both of them by Wednesday, Grudberg said. They were held in the Niantic Correctional Center for Women after their arrest Saturday.

Police said they were still looking for a man, a woman and a 13-year-old boy in connection with a series of bizarre burglaries involving "gypsies" which stretches back to July.

In one incident, which the pair are not charged with participation in, gypsies entered the home of an unidentified 88-year-old woman, stole $7,000 and smeared her with fudge.

While arguing to have bail lowered, Grudberg said "To punish these women for being gypsies if unfair."

He said Wednesday, "I don't think the charges have anything to do with the series of burglaries."

According to Grudberg "To my knowledge there are no further charges pending" against his clients. He said we would seek dismissal of the charges.

Hewlett-Packard wrote the book on advanced pocket calculators.
And it's yours free!

Hewlett-Packard built the world's first advanced pocket calculator back in 1972. And led the way ever since.

If you're about to invest in your first pocket calculator—one that will serve you through college and beyond—you'll need all the information you can get to make a wise decision. That's why Hewlett-Packard's put together an objective, informative 24-page guide entitled, "What To Look For Before You Buy An Advanced Calculator." And it's yours—Free!

In it you will find such helpful information as: A survey of types of calculators available; Programming; Logic systems; Applications; Functions; Features; Construction; Accessories; Memory; Service and much, much more.

Get your free copy of "What To Look For Before You Buy An Advanced Calculator," at your campus bookstore or telephone 800-538-7922 (in Calif. 800-662-9862) toll-free for the name of your nearest dealer.

HEWLETT-PACKARD PRESENTS THE FIRST FAMILY OF ADVANCED CALCULATORS.

HP-21 Scientific.
New low price. $80.00*

The HP-21 makes short work of the technical calculations even so-called "non-technical" courses require. If you need a calculator for more than simple arithmetic—this is it—especially at its new low price.
- 32 built-in functions and operations.
- Addressable memory.
- Performs all standard log and trig functions (in radians or degrees).
- Performs rectangular/polar conversion, register arithmetic and more.
- Two selectable display modes: Fixed point and scientific.
- Lowest-priced HP Scientific calculator.

HP-22 Business Management
$165.00*

The HP-22 easily handles the kinds of calculations you face in business courses today, in management tomorrow. Breeze through business math calculations. Build existing statistical data into reliable forecasts. If you're going into business administration, this is the calculator for you.
- Combines financial, mathematical and statistical capabilities.
- Performs complex time-value-of-money computations including interest rates.
- Performs rates of return and discounted cash flows for investment analysis.
- Performs extended percent calculations, accumulated interest, amortization, etc.
- Ten addressable memories.
- Full decimal display control.

HP-25C Scientific Programmable with Continuous Memory.
$200.00*

The HP-25C is our keystroke programmable. It can solve automatically the repetitive problems every science and engineering student faces. What's more, its Continuous Memory capability lets you retain programs and data even when it's turned off.
- Continuous memory capability.
- 72 built-in functions and operations.
- Keystroke programmability.
- Branching, conditional test and full editing capability.
- Eight addressable memories.
- We also offer the HP-25, (without the Continuous Memory feature) for $145.00*

HP-27 Scientific/Plus
$200.00*

The HP-27 is for the science or engineering student—whose course work extends into business administration. The reason: It features every pre-programmed scientific function we've ever offered, plus comprehensive stat and financial functions. That's why we've dubbed it our Scientific/Plus.
- 28 pre-programmed exponential, log and trig functions, 15 statistical functions, 10 financial functions—53 in all.
- 10 addressable memories—20 memories in all.
- 6 selective clearing options give you flexible use of memories.
- Fixed decimal, scientific or engineering display formats.

"TEACHING CRITICAL READING AND DISCUSSION AS SKILLS" — Linda S. Slakey, Assistant Professor of Bio-Chemistry

This session will present some techniques for showing students what critical reading of published work is; and teaching them how to carry on a productive discussion in a classroom setting. These techniques have been applied in small groups on advanced students, and with some modification in discussion groups with students in the 100 level courses.

Monday, Sept. 20, CC Rm 804

"LARGE CLASS LECTURES" — T.O. Wilkinson, Acting Dean, Social and Behavioral Sciences

This will be an informal session, essentially of a "cookbook" variety. The presenter has been teaching large introductory sections for some twenty years. As a consequence, he has discovered that some things work for him and that others do not. The session is designed to discuss, compare, and evaluate a number of possible techniques in the large lecture.

Monday, Sept. 20, CC Rm 808

"ASKING QUESTIONS IN THE CLASSROOM, (PART II): GETTING THE ANSWER YOU WANT" — Christine Sullivan, CIRI Teaching Improvement Specialist — Jon Anastasio, CIRI Teaching Improvement Specialist

Participants from Part I will report in "buzz groups" of their use and-or success using question-asking techniques in their classrooms. Discussion of higher-order and probing questions will follow. Pitching classroom questions at the appropriate knowledge level will also be considered.

Monday, Sept. 27, CC Rm 804

"INTEGRATING A LECTURE" — A. Eliot Carlisle, Professor of Management, School of Business Administration

The necessity of combining your own thinking and experience with theoretical material in a lecture presentation will be discussed. An outline of a sample of theoretical material will be given to the participants to illustrate this technique. Lecturing in this way is designed by: a) persuade students to remember the material better; and b) help students incorporate the material with prior knowledge.

Monday, Oct. 4, CC Rm 804

"OPTIONS FOR STUDENT PARTICIPATION (PART II)" — Dan McCarthy, CIRI-Clinic Assistant to the Director for Departmental Projects

This workshop will focus on the role of communication in student participation and on problem-solving around increasing student participation. Participants will work on planning for and evaluating student participation in their classes. Individual follow-up to this workshop may be negotiated.

Monday, Oct. 4. CC Rm 808

"INTRODUCING VARIETY IN THE CLASSROOM" — Leevon Conner, CIRI Teaching Improvement Specialist

The presenter will familiarize participants with alternative methods and materials available for classroom use. Activities by the participants will focus on direct application to their own classrooms.

Kennedy ready for primary

BOSTON [AP] — U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, loved and hated by his Massachusetts constituency, stands poised for his first popularity-ballot test since court-ordered school busing began three years ago.

Busing and abortion — two highly emotional issues which arouse passion in many people — are figuring in the campaign. At a recent appearance, Kennedy was grim-faced when he was confronted by a group of anti-abortionists.

But later in the day, he was lighthearted and jovial when he ventured into the friendly arena of East Cambridge.

His two Democratic opponents in Tuesday's primary election are hoping more of Kennedy's detractors than supporters decide to vote. That's not likely, despite the challenges of attorney Robert Emmet Dinsmore of Milton and Boston City Councilor Frederick C. Langone.

There were three opponents until last week, when Bernard V. Shannon of Stoughton dropped out to merge his anti-busing campaign with Dinsmore's. Shannon said he did not want to split the anti-Kennedy vote.

Both Dinsmore and Langone are against abortion, gun control and court-ordered busing of school children, a controversial issue in Boston since it began three years ago.

But Langone, whose Italian name has been in Boston politics for years, is making a more general campaign pitch. "There's a tremendous amount of discontent in this state," he said recently. "And this is the year they are going to blame Washington."

The red-haired Dinsmore, 45, has represented several persons in busing cases and has the support of groups organized against gun control, abortion and busing.

Against that backdrop, Kennedy, 44, is seeking his third full term with a campaign approach in which he appears "senatorial."

Song title worries execs

NASHVILLE, Tenn. [UPI] — RCA record company officials are worried about the reaction to country music singer Bobby Bare's new single "Dropkick Me, Jesus Through the Goal Posts of Life."

"We're sweating this one," said RCA's Ed Mascolo. "There's no telling what reaction it will bring. But the song's too good not to release."

Nashville songwriter Paul Craft wrote the song several years ago and Bare recorded it in July.

"I think it's a great song," said Bare, who is on tour in New England. "That's why I recorded it."

"I don't feel it's offensive in anyway. It's a straight song and I recorded it straight."

The song, published by Black Sheep Music, is laced with football terminology and references to being "a lowly benchwarmer" who goes on to the big "Super Bowl" in the sky.

Some radio stations are reluctant to play the song because they think it is in questionable taste."

"I won't play it," said Larry Vaugh, WSIX-FM program director. "I think the song is in bad taste. When you start messing with the name of Jesus, well, I don't like it at all.

Environment center announces program

Gordon Schimmel, Director of the Hitchcock Center for the Environment (formerly the Long Plain Nature Center), announced today that the Center will be offering four special mini-courses and three programs for children this fall.

Tim Baroni, of the University of Massachusetts Botany Department will offer 5 sessions on local mushrooms and fungi, beginning Thursday evening, September 16th and continuing through four Saturday morning field trips. Steven Stanne, a naturalist and experienced birder will offer four birding excursions for advanced birders, beginning Saturday September 18th.

Susan Thurber, an experienced weather observer will offer a weather course for beginners for six weeks starting Thursday, September 23rd.

John Green of the U.S. Forest Service, will offer another birding course especially for beginners on Wednesday evenings, starting October 6th.

Alice Ward Kuc and Mary Higgins will also be offering two after-school programs for children on Wednesdays at 1:30 p.m. Alice's program for first, second and third graders will take place at Larch Hill and Mary's program for fourth, fifth and sixth graders will be held at the Fort River Elementary School. Both programs begin on Wednesday, September 29th.

A fee will be charged for all of these mini-courses and programs, with reduced rates for Hitchcock Center members. Courses are filling fast, so call 256-6006 now to reserve a place.

Amherst Democrats hold annual picnic

The Amherst Town Democratic Committee will hold their annual picnic this Sunday, Sept. 12, from 1 to 6 p.m. at the Hadley Young Mens Club.

Tickets for this event can be obtained from Jon Hite at 549-4548 or at the door. A chicken dinner will be served.

Revolution Brigade to convene tonight

There will be an introductory meeting of the Revolutionary Student Brigade tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center 915. The Brigade is a national Communist student organization active on over 50 campuses.

The meeting will contain a brief speech by a member of the Brigade outlining the situation in the United States today.

There will also be a slide presentation on the Rich Off Our Backs — July 4th Demonstration in Philadelphia this summer. Everyone is welcome.

Appeals possible within seven days

The Parking Appeals Board would like to remind the University community of the appeals procedure for parking violations. One may pick up an appeal form at the Dept. of Public Safety at Dickinson Hall (between the hours of 8 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday). This form must be filled out properly and returned to Public Safety within seven calendar days of the violation or it will not be accepted. The parking ticket (or a xerox copy) must accompany the form; if you are appealing a tow, the tow receipt must also be attached.

A personal appearance before the board is not necessary, but if desired one should tell the officer who accepts the form. He will schedule the person for an appearance before the board at one of its regular meetings.

Parking regulations are in affect from 7 a.m. until 6 p.m. Monday through Friday (tow zones, fire lanes and reserved spaces i.e. Handicapped parking spaces, Head of Residence spaces, etc. are always under enforcement). Most parking violations are towable. One should advise one's visitors to use the spaces provided for cars without University parking decals (the Campus Center garage and parking meters) during the enforcement hours.

Movie to examine rigid male sex roles

The film "Men's Lives" will be shown Thurs. Sept. 9th at 9:00 p.m. in room 905-09 of the Campus Center.

The film examines several rigid sex roles that men find themselves trapped into. It is being sponsored by the People's Gay Alliance. Everyone welcome!

Chile Committee sponsors TV show

On Saturday, September 11, 1976 the Western Massachusetts Chile Solidarity Committee will present "Chile Three Years Later: A Refuge for Runaway Shops" at 7:30 p.m. on "Open Door", Channel 57, Springfield.

The program will feature an interview with a worker from the Monsanto chemical plant in Springfield. He will discuss the effects runaway shops have locally and internationally.

The program will also include a history and documentary of the coup and a section on the activities of people who are opposed to the Pinochet regime and U.S. involvement in Chile.

OH course offered on helping the aged

A course is being offered through the Orchard Hill Residential College Program in Community Services and the Aging. Class meetings are Tuesday evenings from 7-8:30 p.m. in Grayson 104.

Contact Dena Shenk at 5-0998 days and 665-4868 evenings.

Parts still available in FAC production

Singing-acting parts for the Fine Arts Center production of "1776" are still open.

The hit Broadway musical will feature actor Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton, Darrell Sandeen and Barry Busse.

The production at the Concert Hall of the Fine Arts Center of the University of Massachusetts will perform five nights, October 15, 16, 17, 23 and 24. All interested actors-actresses should call 545-0202 for more information.

ECOLOGY-MINDED UPenn administrators have mounted a campaign to condition the campus to think in terms of saving energy, according to an AP dispatch appearing in The New York Times, recently.

Bright red posters carry a succinct message: "Do it in the Dark ... Save Energy Now."

Which is almost as contradictory as the slogan imposed on many a campus elevator door: "Save Energy ... Walk!"

MONEY CRUNCH on campuses is driving faculty and staff alike to greener pastures. Recent intelligence includes a Univ. of New Hampshire report that Athletic Director Andy Mooradian says he is "... aggressive in looking for another position," after the Athletic Commission there recommended cutbacks in his program. And at Ohio U., The Post has reported that Director Jose Barrio-Garay resigned, citing "Budgetary limitations and lack of autonomy."

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, September 9 – Born today, you are one of those for whom hard physical labor is essential. Nothing makes you more restless, more irritable, ultimately more bored than to be without something of a physical nature to challenge your will, your muscle, your determination. This does not mean that you are incapable of dealing with an intellectual challenge or that you would fail in any but physical effort, however; it merely means that you take your greatest immediate joy from using your body well. You possess a passionate, even a fiery temperament -- but you also possess the kind of self-control that keeps you from being ruled by your emotions. Indeed, what you are constantly searching for is the perfect combination of reason and emotion in the performance of your work.

A warm heart and an affectionate manner endear you to most who know you. Only those who misinterpret sympathy, kindness and generosity as signs of weakness find any fault with your approach to life and it's problems. Your changeable nature may lead some to think of you as an unpredictable and, therefore, an unstable person; in truth, however, your flexibility is merely a manifestation of your multi-faceted personality. With many interests and many talents, you cannot appear the same all the time; change reflects differences.

Friday, September 10

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Help another in your own quiet way. Don't be too sure of your success; work at it right up to the end.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – If you are unable to see another's point of view, you may well trigger the kind of argument that causes rifts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Love is all-important today in the realization of personal relationships. Don't expect to gain what you refuse to give.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – The Sagittarius considering marriage would do well to look into the background of his or her future partner. Surprises are pleasant.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Conditions must not be idealized; you must be willing to work with things as they are, not as you might wish them to be.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – This may be a day when you realize that the bloom is off the rose, romantically speaking. Adapt to things as they are.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Education figures strongly in today's success. If you are not well-prepared to absorb new knowledge, you may well fail in the afternoon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – A feeling of disappointment regarding personal matters may cause you to overlook a favorable situation on the employment scene. Look around.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Don't allow your friendship with a member of the opposition to influence your decision regarding your stand. Stick to your principles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Share with another any rewards for joint efforts, whether or not he or she is present when benefits begin to appear on the horizon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – You can gain a better understanding of the problems surrounding the launching of a new project if you attempt to gain some personal experience.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – Seek companions who can complement you where character is concerned. What you lack, a partner can provide, and thus insure success.

Study reveals gambling soaking in U.S. dollars

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Members of a special White House Gambling Study Commission told a congressional hearing Wednesday a survey shows at least $5.1 billion was illegally bet on sports in 1974 and that it may have been eight times as much.

"The real figure might approach the Department of Justice estimate of $40 million annually," Charles H. Morin, chairman of the commission on the review of the national policy toward gambling, told a special house committee on professional sports.

"No one can make an accurate estimate of the amount Americans spend on illegal betting."

Morin testified that the survey conducted by the University of Michigan showed that 60 per cent of all adults gambled in one way or another in 1974 and wagered more than $24 million.

But James E. Ritchie, executive director of the commission, which is to submit a final report to President Ford next month, said that members of the nation's gambling elite tend to lie about their volume of business to avoid tax crackdowns.

He noted that one illegal bookmaker reported handling $30,000 a year in bets for the survey and said: "I'm aware of some who do that much easily in a weekend and one told me his business amounted to a half a million dollars a year."

The Commission, in an interim report earlier this year, advocated that the individual states be allowed to set their own gambling policies with the federal government role confined mainly to enforcement.

But Morin and Ritchie said that state legalized gambling operations cannot compete against illegal ones unless federal taxation of winnings is eased.

Morin said: "We expect to recommend to Congress that the gambling tax laws be modified because they don't raise enough revenue to justify themselves and make it impossible for legal sports betting to compete with an illegal gambling game where the winner doesn't pay taxes."

Ritchie predicted the new Delaware football lottery will prove successful if it wins court approval. But he pointed out that it is a lottery pool rather than an actual betting operation on individual games as allowed in Nevada and Montana.

"Parlays are just the icing on the cake for a professional bookmaker," he said. "The pool operation is so insignificant they don't even count it in the profits."

But of legalized, state-sponsored gambling casinos and betting on individual sports events, he said: "We see a great number of problems of why it wouldn't work because of the complexities involved."

Morin pointed out that legalized betting might lead to state interference with professional sports such as dope tests for players, licensing for athletes and even official stewards at games.

Both also said the survey shows that where gambling has been legalized, illegal betting activity also increases. They noted that Nevada has three times as many problem gamblers — "Those who gamble beyond their means" — than any other state.

Confident Evert records 99th straight on clay

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — Defending champion Chris Evert, conceding she expects to win each time she steps on court, recorded her 99th straight clay-court victory Wednesday in defeating up-and-coming Russian Natasha Chmyreva, 6-1, 6-2, to reach the semifinals of the U.S. Open Tennis Championship.

"I hate to lose," said Chris, whose last loss on the surface was to Evonne Goolagong at the Western Open in 1973. "I try to get it over as fast as I can."

Evert, who is also the reigning Wimbledon title-holder, has been getting things over fast. She has lost but four games in four matches at this year's Open in her drive to retain the title she won for the first time last year by defeating Goolagong in three sets.

Goolagong, who has dropped 17 games in three matches, faced Rosie Casals in the night feature.

Also through to the semis were Italian Open champion Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia, 6-2, 6-1, over her doubles partner , Virginia Ruzici of Romania, and Dianne Fromholtz of Australia. 6-1, 6-3, against Zenda Liess of Daytona Beach, Fla.

Evert meets Jausovec in the semis.

The 20-year-old Yugoslav, who won the Canadian Open en route to Forest Hills, is still uptight at not being seeded.

"I called my parents in Maribor (an alpine resort close to the Austrian border) to complain about the draw, but they told me, 'Play tennis, show them they were wrong'."

"Chris is playing very well, but I want to meet her. Everyone says there are only two girls to bother with, Chris and Evonne, but a lot of us young players are getting ready to challenge them."

Feuding Connors conquers Kodes

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] — If the center court at the West Side Tennis Club had been a boxing ring, Jimmy Connors and Jan Kodes would have spilt a lot of blood Wednesday, but they had to settle for racquet and ball and when it was over, the top-seeded Connors was in the semifinals of the U.S. Open.

Few players have shown their dislike for each other the way Connors and Kodes did before a capacity crowd of 16,223. They mocked each other openly, mimicked one another when serving or receiving service, and both wasted time when the other was ready to play.

The match was a slugfest full of unforced errors. There were few memorable shots. Connors won, 7-5, 6-3, 6-1, to set up a semifinal meeting with third-seeded Guillermo Vilas, a 6-1, 2-6, 7-6, 7-6, winner over Eddie Dibbs.

The bottom half of the draw, which will be completed today, pits Bjorn Borg against defending champion Manuel Orantes, and Dick Stockton, the last of the unseeded players, against Ilie Nastase.

Neither Connors nor Kodes served well and the Czechoslovak, the 1973 Wimbledon champion who twice finished runnerup here during the last six years, served doublefaults on crucial points. Connors made unforced errors on his approach shots, especially on the forehand.

In the long first set, Kodes ended up in a courtside box after chasing down a Connors overhead. He seemed to be hurt, so Connors hurried over to see if he could help. Kodes got up and walked away without a word.

Canada Cup continues

U.S. sets sights on Soviets...

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — The Soviet Union, regaining form in its quest for the Canada Cup Hockey Championship, faces a "Cinderella" Team USA squad Thursday night in a game it cannot take lightly.

The Russians, encouraged by their 11-3 rout of Finland Thursday, could have been accused of looking past Team USA toward their game Saturday against the favored Canada team that may decide if they will qualify for the two-team playoffs.

But now the Americans, still giddy from their 4-4 tie with Czechoslovakia Tuesday night, have everything going their way — confidence, momentum and a noisy spectrum crowd that gave them repeated standing ovations in their last game.

"The United States team was not considered very strongly in this tournament, but we have played well," coach Bob Pulford said. "The next time they have a tournament, the United States will be a force to be reckoned with. We have young players and they're bound to improve."

Pulford said he thought his team should have won Tuesday's game. "I feel bad for the 20 or so guys who really busted out there," he said.

The Soviet Union has taken notice of the upset possibilities of the game, according to Alexander Maltsev, the veteran of six Soviet world champion clubs and two Olympic gold medal winning teams, and is trying to forget the Canada game for the time being.

"It (the game with Canada) is a long way off and we still have to face the United States," said Maltsev, who tallied two goals against Finland. "This game in Philadelphia will be very tough."

However, Maltsev and his teammates still hope to be one of the two clubs advancing to the finals even though Canada and Czechoslovakia are ahead of them in the standings. The feeling was encouraged by Victor Zhulktov's four goals and two assists against Finland.

The Russians are 1-1-1 in the tournament, losing 5-3 to Czechoslovakia and playing to a 3-3 tie with Sweden. The Americans have lost to Sweden and Canada and tied the Czechs.

Team USA showed a lot of muscle against the Czechs and Pulford guaranteed more of the same against Russia.

"We got hurt against Sweden on four power play goals," he said. "Against Canada, we gave up two power play goals, otherwise we could have tied them."

...while Canada aims for top spot

MONTREAL [UPI] — When Canada and Czechoslovakia meet in tonight's showdown, coach Scotty Bowman said Wednesday he's looking for his big guns to get the win needed to put Canada into the finals of the six-nation Canada Cup tournament.

Canada — with wins over Finland (11-2), the United States (4-2) and Sweden (4-0) — will clinch first place in the tourney with a win over Czechoslovakia. The Czechs (2-0-1) need a victory, or at least a tie, to avoid a possible three-way tie for second place with Sweden and Russia going into the final day of roundrobin play.

"We don't know too much about the Czechs or the Soviets, but the attention is focused now on the Czechs because they haven't had a loss and we're going into this game knowing a win would put us into the finals," Bowman said.

"But while we don't know too much about them, we know what we have to do."

Bowman said his game plan will be basically the same as that used in Tuesday night's shutout of the Swedes, with the emphasis on the scoring ability and forechecking on his all-star blueliners.

"There will be no change on the five defensemen," he said. "We've been happy with the defense and we've needed the goaltending we got it. The Czechs are a high-scoring team and we'll need it for the next game."

He said Rogie Vachon of the Los Angeles Kings would be the starting goaltender for his fourth straight game.

Up front, Bowman said, "I'm looking for (Bobby) Clarke to take a regular turn." Clarke sat out the Canada-U.S. game but returned for the match with Sweden. Bowman said Clarke would go back with regular Philadelphia linemates Reggie Leach and Bill Barber, the NHL's most productive line last season.

With Bob Gainey's two goals against Sweden, Bowman said the Montreal wing has earned the right to suit up and will probably be paired again with Toronto's Darryl Sittler and Lanny MacDonald.

Bobby Hull, Phil Esposito and Marcel Dionne will form another line, Bowman said, leaving room for one more line "and I think we would probably guard ourselves with the extra centreman."

The center would likely be Peter Mahovlich, who, Bowman noted, can also play right wing.

Bills fail to deal Simpson to Rams

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] — An 11th hour bid between the Buffalo Bills and the Los Angeles Rams failed Wednesday and the inter-conference trading deadline passed without a deal being made for premier running back O.J. Simpson.

Simpson had told the Bills last June that he wanted to be traded to a national football league club on the west coast, preferably the Rams. Both clubs have held talks regarding the trade for the past few months and final talks were held just prior to the 4 p.m. (EDT) trading deadline between the National and American Football Conference.

"O.J. Simpson is not coming to Los Angeles as a Ram," a Rams spokesman said in Los Angeles. "The trading deadline came and went and we made no deals with any clubs."

The spokesman said Los Angeles general manager Don Klosterman had telephoned Bills owner Ralph C. Wilson Jr. just 20 minutes before the trading deadline.

The spokesman said Klosterman "made several offers which included players, draft choices and a combination of the two, but there was no acceptance."

A spokesman for the Bills, however, said he had not heard any word about trade talks concerning Simpson.

U.S. Judge strikes down NFL draft

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A federal judge struck down the National Football League's annual draft of college players Wednesday on grounds it violated federal antitrust laws.

The thunderbolt decision by U.S. District Judge William B. Bryant upheld the claim by Jim "Yazoo" Smith, a first round selection by the Washington Redskins in 1967, that the draft illegally restrained his right to bargain effectively because it bound him to only one NFL team.

Bryant's ruling was expected to be appealed to higher federal courts by the NFL but his decision in the case heard without a jury was a severe shock to pro football's hierarchy on the eve of its regular season.

The black federal jurist awarded Smith treble damages totaling $276,600 plus costs and attorney fees.

In striking down the NFL annual draft, Bryant declared: "The owners of the teams have agreed among themselves that the right to negotiate with each top quality graduating college athlete will be allocated to one team, and that no other team will deal with that person.

"This outright, undisguised refusal to deal constitutes a group boycott in its classic and most pernicious form, a device which has long been condemned as a per se violation of the antitrust laws," the judge said.

The antitrust suit seeking damages against the NFL and the Redskins was initiated by Smith after a broken neck in the final game of his 1967 rookie year ended his playing career.

The former Oregon star claimed the draft was an illegal restraint of trade because it denied him opportunity to bargain effectively with the Redskins, who held sole right to his services.

Smith, who made the starting lineup as a defensive back, argued through Attorney Stewart H. Johnson Jr. that he was particularly restricted in obtaining contract provisions which would safeguard him financially if he suffered a disabling injury.

He collected $28,000 as a bonus for signing and $22,000 for his first year as a Redskin. Washington paid him $22,000 for what would have been his option year had he not been injured. What he would have been paid for a third year with the Redskins is in legal limbo because of possible workmen's compensation stemming from the injury.

At the four-week trial, three of Smith's former Washington teammates — Jerry Smith, Roy Jefferson and Brig Owens — testified on his behalf along with Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL players association.

Arizona State set for UCLA opener

TEMPE, Ariz. [UPI] — Arizona State, figuring to have its first legitimate chance at the National Championship, faces its first test Thursday against UCLA in a game that features two upset Bowl winners.

The Sun Devils, consistent winners in 18 years under Coach Frank Kush but constantly struggling for national recognition, made their biggest move last December with a victory over Nebraska in the Fiesta Bowl that gave them a no. 2 national ranking. UCLA climaxed its season with a Rose Bow victory over Ohio State, but enters this year under rookie coach Terry Donahue and without quarterback John Sciarra.

Arizona State is ranked seventh and UCLA 14th beginning this season.

The nationally-televised game, with a temperature of near 100 expected at kickoff, has all the makings of an offensive battle with both teams featuring a strong running back.

Wendell Tyler figures to be the workhorse for the Bruins after gaining 1,388 yards as a junior. He needs only 317 yards for a UCLA career rushing mark.

The ASU ground attack centers around Freddie Williams, who has gained more than 1,000 yards each of the past two seasons and plans on being just as active this time around.

"I usually carry about 20 or 25 times a game, and I don't think that will change," said Williams.

Arizona State is loaded offensively with nine starters returning, including split end John Jefferson called by Kush "the best receiver I ever coached." The Sun Devils also return Dennis Sproul and Fred Mortensen, who split starting duties at quarterback last season. Sproul has emerged as the no. 1 signal caller this year.

Jeff Dankworth, Sciarra's backup in 1975, is given the edge for the Bruins' starting berth although he is being pushed by sophomore Steve Bukich.

Both Kush and Donahue expressed concern about defense as the game approached.

"On defense, we have to execute our fundamentals and stop their individual trapping and option passing game," said Donahue. He said he believed turnovers would be the key to the game.

"Our defense worries me," said Kush. "Although we have good people on offense, they shouldn't have dominated the defense like they have in practice.

Injury hex strikes gridders as opener with Toledo nears

By MICHAEL WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

Although it was just a scrimmage, the varsity soccer team played an enthusiastic brand of ball yesterday at Boyden Field. They were rewarded with a 3-1 victory in a game which coach Russ Kidd labeled, "an important confidence builder.

In his first game as varsity head coach, Kidd acted like a seasoned leader. His comments from the sideline were voiced to his players with clarity and confidence. The rapport on the team seemed super.

Coach Kidd invited 39 men to take part in pre-season practice. Workouts started last week and the current roster size has diminished for one reason or another down to 28. Among the most noticeable absentees is goaltender Buddy Butler.

However, several starters are returning. They include: halfbacks Andy Moore and Tim O'Brien, fullbacks Michael Parsons and Larry Aronson, plus forward Bob McChesney and goaltender Mark Hanks. The three newcomers to watch according to Kidd are: a transfer goaltender from New Jersey by the name of Mark Hodgdon and also freshmen Mark Vasington and Mike Shannon.

In the scrimmage yesterday, Vasington had a fine debut in a game that UMass showed both its depth and stamina. The Minutemen came on as the game progressed. Although they controlled the ball against a well-disciplined Eastern Connecticut team for much of the first half, they came up on the short end of a 1-0 halftime score. At the 18-minute mark Eastern scored, and a short time later nearly made it 2-0 but some fine goaltending by Hodgdon stifled that. He held his ground well on a breadaway and the shot went wide.

In the second half UMass came on like gangbusters. Andy Moore seemed to be all over the field. He ran around the field with reckless abandon, tiring the different coverages that made an attempt to control him.

A fatigued Eastern Connecticut defense could not hold up under the constant pressure. The bubble popped like a sudden flash of lightening. Joel Mascolo dribbled through the defense and fired a quick shot into the net. Before it was over both Raffi Donoyan and Tony Biladeau had tasted the juices of goal scoring. Mark Hanks played shutout goal the entire second half although he was only severely tested once or twice.

Coach Kidd was pleased that the team came up with a victory. He had some reservations about his decision not to play all his players.

"I stayed with the same guys so they could have an ample chance to work on their offense and once we got the lead, I was intent on keeping it," Kidd commented.

He did say that in future scrimmages he will be more conscious of using more of his players.

The next scrimmage will be on Sunday against a team from the Southern England Amateur League. This team is coming to the U.S. for the purpose of playing soccer exhibitions. The game is at 3:30 and will be played once again at Boyden Field. The first regular season game is at home against the University of Bridgeport on Wednesday, September 22nd.

Booters display confidence in scrimmage

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

As zero hour nears for the 1976 UMass football team, the latest report from the coaching staff is, "all systems go." With only three days to go before the initial kickoff of the season, the Minutemen are busily preparing for Saturday's joust with the University of Toledo.

From the coaching offices in Boyden, we have some good news and some bad news to report.

First the bad news...

As the countdown to kickoff moves on, the Minutemen have run into a sticky problem. Once again, the injury hex has struck. As of now, co-captain John Toner and Steve Telender are doubtful starters as rovers in the Minutemen's defensive alignment.

"Toner did not practice Monday or Tuesday, and right now we are putting him in a holding pattern as to his availability for Saturday's game," said defensive-rover coach Tom Hoffman.

Toner was examined by the team doctor yesterday, and Hoffman is hopeful that Tonner can come through with a clean bill of health.

Telander, who was an All-Yankee Conference linebacker last year, is listed as a very doubtful starter. He suffered a serious injury in practice a couple of weeks ago, and he has not practiced since.

Now the Minutemen have two important vacancies which have to be filled with inexperienced people.

"We have eight men fighting it out for the two vacated spots," Hoffman said. "Junior Joe Bingham, sophomore John McDonald, and senior Pat Grant are battling it out for the quick-rover position, while Craig Creamer and Jack Tucker vie for the strong-rover spot.

"Bingham saw some action last year, while the rest of the players are relatively inexperienced at that position. Creamer was an offensive guard last year, and Tucker, a transfer student from West Point, had to sit out all of last season. We may be inexperienced, but we have the men who can jump in and do the job," Hoffman pointed out.

So much for the bad news, now for the good news...

Linebacker Peter McCarthy and cornerback Todd Holt have been given medical clearance to play. Both players had to spend the summer recuperating from knee surgery.

"We are extremely pleased that McCarthy and Holt have been medically cleared. That will give us that much more experience in our defensive unit," Hoffman said.

Also, John VanBuren has been moved back to his defensive backfield position, after starting the practice season at split end.

Hoffman, a graduate student at UMass and a member of the football coaching staff, doesn't believe that Toledo's high-powered offense will pose many serious problems to the UMass defensive unit.

"Toledo basically runs out of the same offensive pattern as Dartmouth did in last Saturday's scrimmage. They'll most likely be attacking our defensive ends and rovers, and the only way we can shut off their offense, is with good, strong rover play on our part," he said.

Coach MacPherson and his staff may have to improvise a little if some of the key players are not ready by game time. It is a tough assignment in drawing Toledo as your opening game. Even though with some players doubtful starters for Saturday's game, everyone is getting excited about it.

"We are picking up momentum for the game as the week winds down, and will be ready, no doubt about it," Hoffman concluded.

Even though only a scrimmage, the action was fierce and competitive as UMass topped Eastern Connecticut 3-1 yesterday. (Staff photo by Dale Griswold)

Sox nip Tigers; Yaz belts No. 20

BOSTON [UPI] — Carl Yaztrzemski had two hits and knocked in two runs, Butch Hobson had three hits and scored twice and Fred Lynn drove in two runs, including the winner with a seventh inning sacrifice fly, Wednesday night to lead the Boston Red Sox to a 4-3 triumph over the Detroit Tigers.

Yastrzemski hit his 20th homer of the year in the fourth inning for his highest season total since he hit 40 homers in 1970. The Red Sox scored two more runs in the fifth on consecutive singles by Hobson and Rick Burleson, a fielder's choice, a run-scoring single by Lynn and a towering popup by Yastrzemski that fell for a single near the pitcher's mound.

Lynn followed a double by Hobson and singles by Burleson and Dillard with a sacrifice fly to left off incoming reliever John Hiller for what proved to be the winning run in the seventh.

Bill Lee went 6 2-3 innings to gain his third win in nine decisions with Jim Willoughby picking up his seventh save, hurling 2 1-3 innings of two-hit ball.

Detroit scored twice in the seventh on a run-scoring single by Jason Thompson and a fielder's choice and once in the eighth on Alex Johnson fielder's choice.

Last night's victory snapped a three-game losing string for the slumping Red Sox. At this time last year, the Red Sox were playing over .600 baseball and on their way to an American League pennant. This year, Boston is desperately struggling to reach the .500 mark.

Yastrzemski's two runs batted in now gives him 86 on the year as he zeros in on his personal goal of 100 RBI's by the end of the season. The Red Sox have less than 30 games for him to do so.

Trustees to return here

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees, which had stated its intention not to meet on the Amherst campus as a result of a student demonstration last April, has announced that its November 3 meeting will be held on campus, reportedly in Memorial Hall.

The Board decided at its August meeting to return to the Amherst campus, reversing a position voiced shortly after the demonstration last April where two students were arrested and two policemen were hurt. The trustees had been meeting at the Government Center in Boston while the regular rotation of locations were suspended.

Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healy had stated in April that the trustees would not meet on campus until there was a better atmosphere for more cordial meetings between students and trustees.

Trustee Gavin D. Robertson said in a telephone interview last night "that it never was the intention of the trustees" to permantly refrain from meeting in Amherst.

Chairman Healy said last night, in a telephone interview, there "wasn't a long term resistence to meeting on the Amherst Campus. The trustees felt there should be a cooling off period."

About 800 students demonstrated outside of the library last April while the trustees met inside the 26th floor. The students were protesting a controversial transfer of funds from Residential Hall Trust Fund for the purchase of 8.8 acres of land near Fraternity-Sorority Park. Two UMass students were arrested and two policemen hurt in scuffling outside the library.

Robertson said "there was no question raised" about the decision to meet in Amherst, "we have a responsibility to meet on all three campuses."

Healy expressed hope that the meetings could be conducted in a friendly atmosphere. He added that he did not expect students to agree with the Board on all counts, but said we expected a "meeting under normal circumstances. We just want civility."

Trustee Alan Shaler said that he was "delighted" that the meeting was returning to the Amherst campus. He also expressed hope that the meetings would not be disrupted.

"I was not pleased about the last Amherst meeting," he said. "The feeling of the board is that the meetings should be informative to the listeners and the trustees, but they should not be some kind of soap box where people use the media that is present to espouse their own views."

Shaler also said that he felt it was a small minority of students who have adverse and angry feelings toward the trustees. He also said that he believed that a small number of students were responsible for the anti-trustee demonstrators.

Trustees contacted last night all said that the meeting would be an open one. It was also a general feeling that the trustees could, by law, close all meetings to the public, but that it has long been a matter of policy to get as much as possible.

Workshop speaker stresses Black view

By WILLIAM MILLS
Collegian Staff

Blacks in America are experiencing the same problems their grandparents faced years ago, according to a former UMass professor and Black activist.

Playthell Benjamin, called a "profound scholar of our time and a real revolutionary" by his counterparts, said priorities facing Blacks today are the same that faced the race 100 years ago.

About 100 UMass students, staff and faculty persons gathered last night in the Patrice Lumumba Room of New Africa House for Benjamin's presentation. His topic was 'Being Black in American Civilization — Reflections on the Bicentennial."

Benjamin said his presentation was a "working report" and should not be considered a "final report."

Playthel Benjamin, former UMass professor and Black activist, speaking in the first of a series of cultural and political educational workshops at the New Africa House last night. (Staff Photo by Dave Rosenthal)

Reading from a multi-page transcript on his personal observations of the Bicentennial, Benjamin said to the mainly Black audience, "Let the white folk talk about how great America is — we must continue to be critical."

He said although his views differ radically from the majority of American citizens, he said he will "refuse to equivocate."

Benjamin's presentation here was the first activity of the New Africa House cultural and political educational workshops to be offered regularly throughout the academic year by the UMass black community.

Speaking on the Black struggle in America, he said, "We must run just to stay where we are." He called America's early so-called leaders, such as Thomas Jefferson, "consummate hypocrites." He said that while Jefferson said everybody was created equal, Jefferson himself was a slave-owner.

On the American Revolution, Benjamin said, "Sometimes I think Black folk would be better off if the British won. He said the British have no tradition of killing Blacks for the amusement of whites.

His essay, spotted with satire, quipped present-day leaders. He said many Black leaders of the 19th Century with little formal education could deliver more intelligent speeches than President Ford.

Benjamin, cigar in hand and moving freely about the podium, said Black history is cyclical.

"Right now it is in a downward spiral. We have traitors among us...I am convinced that Shirley Chisolm (D-N.Y.) is an idiot," he said.

Benjamin rattled off a few "bad years" for America's Black. He said 1661 and 1664 were very bad because they were the years the first slave laws were passed in the states of Maryland and Virginia. "1777 was also a bad year when the Constitutional Congress assembled — a body of people made up of bankers and lawyers."

He called Frederick Douglas, a slave for the kirst 20 years of his life, and later prominent editor in the 19th century a "very important Black figure during the 1800's."

He said whenever Blacks and whites have formed an alliance, a struggle has ensued over leadership, with Blacks usually losing.

Tonight at 9:00 in New Africa House, the Neil Clarke International African-American Percussion Ensemble will perform in the Lumumba Room. There is no admission charge.

Outing Club events cover all seasons

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Although the last few days have been ideal weather for being outdoors, one group of students has elected to remain inside to talk to people about their club, concerned with...the outdoors.

Members of the UMass Outing Club have been busy the last three days stationed behind a table on the Campus Center Concourse informing passers-by about their club and encouraging them to attend their introductory meeting next Monday night.

According to club Vice-President Geoff Baum, the club offers "everything in all seasons" to outdoors enthusiasts of all competence levels. Activities include everything from hiking and canoeing to mountaineering and snowshoeing.

Sitting at the information table with kayak, backpack, and snowshoes dangling above their heads, club officers Baum, President Robert Keating, and Treasurer Heidi Krantz said the club sponsors a trip to somewhere in New England almost every weekend.

They said in the past it has not been unusual for there to be four trips going on during a single weekend.

Every spring break there is a trip to West Virginia and during the summer there is usually one big summer trip. This summer there was one 8-week and one 4-week trip to Alaska.

Another activity the club is involved in is renting equipment. Equipment rented includes sleeping bags, kayaks, climbing gear, stoves and cross-country skis.

The Outing Club has equipment lockers in the access way between the Campus Center Concourse and the garage. There is also a canoe barn on the corner of Campus Center Way and Commonwealth Avenue. Keating said the club has about ten canoes and seven kayaks.

The officers said that rental policies will be discussed at the introductory meeting, next Monday night at 7 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. The meeting will also include a slide show. In addition, memberships for the club will be sold at the meeting. The club had 600 members last semester according to the officers.

Baum said that the club is presently looking for volunteers to help organize trips and club activities.

The Outing Club has a bulletin board on the main floor of the Student Union that it keeps up to date regarding club activities.

The Outing Club is a Recognized Student Organization and has its office in the second floor of the Student Union room 428 B.

Profs get labor hearing on pay raises

By LISA MILILLI
Collegian Staff

Because the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission has decided to conduct hearings to determine whether a pay raise, granted last September to department heads is legal, one UMass official claims the commission clearly favors including department heads in a collective bargaining unit for faculty.

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) has brought charges against the University, claiming that UMass violated Labor Relations General Laws by making a change in working conditions during hearings for collective bargaining in order to reinforce their position.

The issue of representation of department heads and chairpersons of the University for the purposes of collective bargaining is currently pending before the commission. The University contends that chairpersons are administration figures and should not be included in the collective bargaining unit. However, the two groups vying to represent faculty in collective bargaining, AAUP and the Massachusetts Society of Professors said that chairpersons should be included.

"It's logical," the campus official who wished to remain anonymous said. "It's logical. By holding the hearings, the commission is saying that they see ground in the AAUP charges against the University."

"By this, the commission must see some evidence that the University is tampering with those who would be included in a collective bargaining unit — namely the department chairmen and heads," said the official.

"Therefore, it is obvious that the commission considers department heads and chairmen as members of faculty to be represented by a collective bargaining unit," the official said.

The commission conducted hearings from November, 1975 to March, 1976 to decide on unit determination, all those employees who would be included in a collective bargaining unit.

The commission's decision on unit determination was expected in early August, however no official announcement has yet been made.

Northeast slates concert

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Finalization of plans for the Northeast Area fall concert took place at the first meeting of Northeast Area Government (NEAG) last night in Thatcher House.

"Deerfield" and "Midnight Shift" are scheduled to play in the Quad on Sept. 18, according to John Weisse, president of NEAG.

No liquor will be sold at the concert because the liquor license for the Northeast Area was revoked. The Amherst Board of Selectmen revoked the license from the area for allegedly serving liquor to intoxicated persons at the Fate concert in Northeast last semester.

Music for this fall's concert will run from noon to 5 p.m. There is no rain date, organizers said.

In other action, Weisse said a NEAG news letter will be started at the end of the month to inform Northeast residents of the area government and the services they provide.

He said, "It would be an informal letter to let people know who we are and to ask for new ideas."

Newsletters would be distributed by the dorm representatives he said.

Weisse introduced the Northeast revenuing-sharing program to the new members of the government. NEAG allots a certain amount of the area budget to each dorm to spend as it wishes. He asked for ideas from NEAG representatives for spending of the funds.

NEAG will meet every Thursday evening at 6 p.m. in Thatcher House, Weisse said. Meetings are open to those interested in the area government, he said.

Feister resigns BOG post

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night heard the resignation of Chairperson Joann Feister and voted to allow the Amherst Tenants Union (ATU) to set up a permanent table on the Campus Center Concourse this semester.

The Board of Governors advises Campus Center management on policy decisions, allocates space in the building, and reviews and approves the Campus Center budget.

Chairperson Feister apparently resigned her position for personal reasons.

"I am no longer a student here," she said. Feister said she will be taking part in a committee designed to see that the University lives up to its responsibilities under Title IX.

She asked the board pass a motion of support for the committee. That motion was passed unanimously.

Malcolm Quint will act as chairperson until elections are held in a few weeks.

Vince O'Connor, who proposed the motion for the tenants stated that although the group is not a Recognized Student Organization (RSO), it should be allowed that status for the purpose of operating a table in the concourse.

"We are not solely a student organization. While a large number of our members are students, we feel it would be against our aims to be listed as such," he said. "We are a community based organization."

Previously, the union had to compete with all other Five College community groups for a single table allocated three times a week on the concourse. The new "priority 1 status" allows them the same privileges as RSO groups, permitting them a table daily and the privilege of fund-raising from that table.

O'Connor had argued that although the membership of the union was limited to tenants and not dorm residents, its success was in the best interest of all students since most will life off campus at some time.

In response to questions, O'Connor said that the tenant union membership had grown from 50 to about 200 in the last two weeks.

"The union was formed last May after the rent control legislation was defeated," he said. "We anticipate an eventual student membership of about 2000."

After the motion had passed O'Connor stated that the union would be ready to man the table "in about a week."

A large part of the meeting was also spent in discussion about the eventual fate of the Cashier's Office, now located in the Student Union.

Dean of Students William F. Field said there is a great probability that the office will be moved in the near future. Several possible new locations were mentioned in the Campus Center including the music-reading room and the Campus Center Barbershop.

"The Bursar is now responsible for all cash transactions on campus," said Field. "He has the final decision on any and all changes."

He also said that the present location was unsatisfactory for several reasons and that some major decisions on the subject would be made by the end of next week.

Corporations funding bottle bill blitz

By JAMIE RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Proponents of the Bottle Bill yesterday announced their discovery of a group of large corporations based outside of Massachusetts who are funding a massive media campaign against the bill.

The bottle bill will appear on the November ballot as a referendum advocating a five-cent deposit on bottles and cans which will be refunded on the return of the reusable containers.

Proponents of the bill indicate that the Massachusetts public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) has raised a total of $7,000 for use in their drive to solicit support for the bill.

Mass. PIRG representative Jonathon Souweine said the "Committee to Stop Forced Deposits" has at its disposal half-a-million dollars which will be used in the anit-Bottle Bill campaign.

Some of the major contributors to the committee include the Can Manufacturing Institute of Washington, D.C., which gave $15,000; Anheuser Busch, $33,300; Pepsi-Cola of New York, $35,000; and the Glass Container Company of California, $62,000 said Souweine.

PIRG figures indicate that 80 per cent of the contributors to the committee are from outside of Massachusetts, he said.

Proponents of the bottle bill also asked yesterday that the public be alert for anti-bottle bill advertising, and that the puulic inform PIRG when they see such advertising.

Advertisements by the committee can be recognized by their inferences that the bottle bill did not save tax dollars nor decrease pollution in Oregon or Vermont, the two states who have passed the bill into law, Sauweine said.

Souweine said yesterday that the statistics compiled in Vermont and Oregon indicate that the bottle bill did decrease pollution and taxes once it had become law. He also said the bill would create new jobs in the state, and that the committee's advertising to the contrary is erroneous.

PIRG is a student-based public interest group started by Ralph Nader whose volunteers collected signatures from the voting public of Massachusetts in order to have the bottle bill brought before the Mass State Senate, and later to have the bill on November's ballot as a referendum.

Souweine said students from the UMass area have spearheaded the drive to put the bill on the ballot, and that more help is needed to assure passage of the bill in November.

Souweine said the committee's actions had "overtones of Watergate" due to the large amounts of money given by a small group of large corporations based out-of-state to a cause which was bankrolled to kill a referendum initiated and support by the people of this state.

He said PIRG is attempting to draft legislation to prevent large corporations from buying referendum collection.

UMass plunges into state car pool

By GERRY GRENIER
Collegian Staff

The Parking Office has announced that the University is participating in the Massachusetts state-wide carpooling program, called "Masspool", whose goals are to reduce fuel consumption, unnecessary commuting expenses, traffic congestion and air pollution.

The program is currently being utilized by thousands of Massachusetts motorists.

A matching system will be used to sort home locations, work and school schedules of University employees and students. All interested persons will be asked to fill out a data card denoting their home location and schedule.

A grid map of the Amherst area will be provided at the Parking Office.

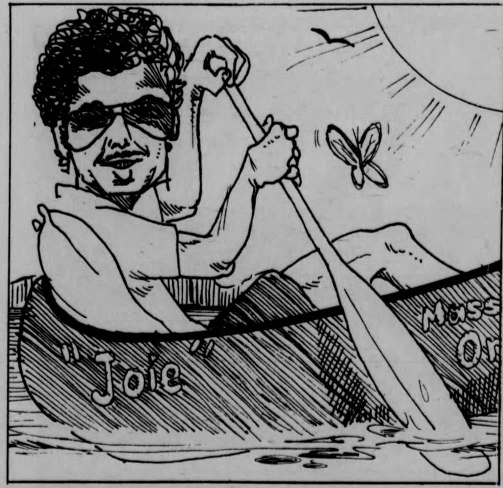
Once the Parking Office has received all data cards, all of the information will be fed into a computer, which will then produce the matching lists. This process would take about three weeks.

A list of people who live in your 'grid area', and who share your needs and schedule will then be mailed to you. After receiving the list it will be up to the individuals to make further arrangements. Another feature of the carpool is the fact that the Parking Office has a policy of parking fee reductions for those involved.

"Masspool" information, data cards, and instructions are available at the Campus Center Assistance Center on the Campus Center Concourse; Personnel Office, room 335 Whitmore; and at the Parking Office, room 1, Munson Hall.

Originally there was a Sept. 17 application deadline, but as a result of poor response it is now indefinite.

If there are any questions, persons are asked to contact the Parking Office by calling 545-0065.



Poison herb landlocks Ohio River canoe party

[Editor's Note] Duke Simoneau, 22, is a UMass junior [Journalism-Natural Resources] on internship for a year. He and Stan Sroka, a 23-year-old Chicopee Falls man, are canoeing across the United State as part of Duke's internship.

They left Springfield on May 26, and expect to reach Portland, Oregon in the summer of 1977. Old Town Canoe Company donated the use of a 17-foot ABS plastic canoe for the expedition.

From its source at old Fort Pitt to its mouth, the Ohio River remains an important channel of commerce, history and hospitality.

We arrived in Madison, Indiana with a major problem. Stan had developed poison ivy. Sroka doesn't get your run-of-the-mill itchy nuisance poison ivy. He develops a hideous rash of blisters that can easily become infected, hospitalizing him for weeks. Since poison ivy and riverbanks go so well together, we were probably lucky he didn't come down with it long before the Cincinatti shore.

After hitchhiking to the Carrol County (Kentucky) hospital for medication, we thumbed to the Salvation Army (SA) in Madison for a clean place to spend the night. The major and his cadet (SA's equivalent to a minister and a seminarian) called every motel in Madison (pop. 14,000) looking for a room for us, at their expense but none were to be had. We were finally put up in an old house that serves as office and church for their "corps" (parish).

Since Stan was markedly improved the next morning, we hitched back to "Joie" where Stan crashed until sunset (due to a combinaton of cortisone and benadryl).

News in Brief

'Back to work' budget

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday approved a $412.8 billion federal budget for next year which Democrats claimed would put 1.5 million Americans back to work.

The House was to vote later today on its version of the budget for fiscal 1977, which begins Oct. 1.

Before the vote, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Maine), chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, called the current unemployment rate of 7.9 per cent "unconscionable" and said the budget prepared by his panel would put 1.5 million Americans back to work next year.

He called it a "step" toward meeting twin goals of balancing the federal budget and achieving "full employment" by 1980.

Reactions to Mao death

BOSTON [UPI] — Reaction in Boston's Chinatown yesterday to the death of Chairman Mao was mixed.

Restaurant owner W. Yuu, a native of the Chinese Mainland and later of Taiwan, said his family had fled rather than live in China under Mao's rule. "I do not like what has happened to China."

Richard Wong, a student, said, "Well, I was born in Paterson, N.J., so I don't know much about Mao. But my mother and father, who are from Hong Kong and the mainland, never had anything good to say about him."

Y.T. Woo said "He did not represent the people of China."

Henry Lee said Mao's death was a "great loss. I think he had done much to help the people."

More pipeline gas

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Northeastern states can expect more pipeline natural gas than a year ago but the weather will determine if the supply is adequate this winter, the chairman of the Federal Power Commission said yesterday.

"At least for this winter the pipeline companies are predicting increased supplies for the northeast heating season, but if it is a cold winter there could very well be problems," Richard L. Dunham said.

The last three winters were exceptionally mild.

FPC officials said 143 billion cubic feet would be available from November through March for New England compared to 136 b.c.u. last winter. Figures for New York State were 367 b.c.u. compared to 360 last year.

Dunham defended the FPC's controversial July 27 order that nearly tripled the price maximum for new natural gas put into interstate pipelines. The ruling is being challenged in federal courts.

He said pipeline supplies are already showing a substantial increase because of a price that is more attractive to drillers. If new gas is not provided, users must choose more costly alternate fuels, Dunham said.

Utility regulators from eight states gathered to question the federal regulatory process with many voicing complaints that the FPC relies too strongly on industry estimates of natural gas reserves.

Communist party appeal

PORTLAND, Maine [UPI] — The Maine Communist party yesterday appealed the Maine Supreme Court's decision to uphold Secretary of State Mark Gartley's order which barred their presidential candidate from the Maine ballot.

The state's high court will take up the question of a hearing on the appeal when it actually receives the motion.

The notice of the appeal was filed with the Superior Court.

A statement issued by the campaign committee for Communist presidential candidate Gus Hall said the ruling last week by a Superior Court judge upholding Gartley's ruling would not deter them.

"We will continue to fight for ballot status and for the right of Maine voters to freedom of choice," the committee said.

"In making the decision, the court has upheld the Democratic and Republican monopoly over the electoral process," it said.

Exile Solzhenitsyn may live in Vt.

CAVENDISH, Vt. [AP] — A close friend of exiled Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn has purchased property and renovated a house here, prompting speculaton that the writer is living in this rural town.

Alexander Vinogradov bought 50 acres of land last fall and took out building permits for extensive renovations, said Quentin Phelan, Cavendish town manager.

Sources close to the Nobel Prize winner confirmed that Solzhenitsyn and Vinogradov are good friends.

Solzhenitsyn left his home in Zurich, Switzerland, last month to come to the United States, where family friends said he planned to settle in Vermont.

The Rutland Herald reported today that Solzhenitsyn listed Cavendish as his intended destination on an Immigration Department visa filed June 22. Immigration officials would not comment on the report, but cautioned that the destination named by persons entering the country often is not the same as their permanent residence.

Phelan said a dozen carpenters have been working on the Vinogradov residence this summer. "We've never seen him Solzhenitsyn around the place, but we heard rumors he might be living there," he said.

Sources in Switzerland said Solzhenitsyn left the country because of alleged harassment by the Soviet secret police. They said he felt he was under constant surveillance by Soviet KGB agents.

Appeal hearing scheduled on Seabrook nuke charges

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — An appeal hearing for 11 persons convicted of contempt of court for violating an order banning them from the construction site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant was scheduled yeeterday afternoon in the New Hampshire Supreme Court.

The 11, including a lawyer, were handed three-month sentences Wednesday in Rockingham County Superior Court for violating the injunction issued by Judge Maurice Bois. They were ordered to jail immediately.

George Pappagianis, clerk of the high court, said the appeals had not formally been filed at mid-morning but that the justices have gone ahead and scheduled the hearing.

He said he did not expect the hearing to take much time.

All that must be proved to deny the appeals is that the defendants did set foot on the nuclear power plant site during an Aug. 22 demonstration.

Each of the defendants has already admitted in court they did enter the plant site to take part in the demonstration against the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which is building the $1.6 billion facility.

State Medicaid program deficit a certainty this year

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday a series of management improvements being implemented in human services programs could save the state $104 million a year, but a deficit is still expected in the current year.

The projected savings to be achieved within three years were announced by Dukakis and Human Services Secretary Jerald Stevens during a news conference pegged by his aides as a major announcement.

About a half dozen of the businessmen who recommended the management improvement programs were on hand for the announcement.

Several state offícals contacted following the meeting said that a signigicant portion of the "savings" will not result in reduced expenditures.

"We're still spending the money," one welfare official explained, "but now we're spending it correctly."

During the news conference both Dukakis and Stevens acknowledged that a deficit in the state's Medicaid program is all but a certainty this year. Stevens indicated the final Medicaid budget could hit $600 million producing a $70 million deficit.

In his prepared statement, Dukakis said the savings were inspired by a task force of private businessmen he appointed to review all aspects of state government.

He said 84 per cent or 161 of the task force recommendations had been accepted and would be implemented resulting in a total annual savings of $104.6 million by 1979. Since some of the reductions are in federally subsidized programs, the actual state savings would be $64.9 million.

Dukakis said savings of $56 million already have been achieved, but he said this would not eliminate the projected deficit or reduce the $1.7 billion appropriated this year for Human Services programs.

The major savings, a little more than $46 million, was attributed to a drop in the Error rate for the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program. Dukakis and Stevens, however, were unable to answer specific questions on just how the savings would be achieved.

Welfare officials contacted later said the reduction in the percentage of errors in payment resulted largely from a change in the system of giving out grants.

Assistant Commissioner Sumner Holsington said the acutal payments to recipients will not be reduced by $46 million. Instead, he said, the percentage of money paid out in error has been reduced.

The error rate dropped largely due to a new consolidated grant system implemented in November of 1975.

Other savings mentioned by Dukakis include establishment of a Medicaid Management Information projected to save $12 million. The system was recommended by the Task Force but planning had begun before Dukakis even took office by former Commissioner Steven A. Minter.

Other savings include increased fees to state employes eating or living in state facilities, closing of two state mental hospitals, increasing nursing home occupancy and elimination of increases in nursing home rates due to real estate transfers.

The savings on nursing homes were planned and published as proposed regulations several months prior to the task force recommendations.

Mao Tse-tung dies in Peking

HONG KONG [UPI] — Chinese Communist party Chairman Mao Tse-tung died yesterday in Peking, ending a tumultuous 82 years of life that saw him rise from simple peasant to leader of the world's largest mass revolution and ruler of one-fourth of mankind.

His death sent the nation of 800 million Chinese into mourning, many pouring into the streets of Peking with tears streaming down their cheeks. It raised the prospect of a long period of the political turmoil that marked his own career from the time he assumed leadership of the Chinese Communists in the 1930s.

NEW YORK: Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung is shown in this 1969 photo at the opening of the party's Ninth National Congress in which he announced his "Cultural revolution" had won a great victory. During that period from late 1965 Mao used the "Red Guards" to destroy the party and state structure and then turned to the army to solidify his position — taken from only by his death yesterday. (UPI)

The armed forces went on alert, according to intelligence sources in Hong Kong. However, the sources said this appeared to be a routine precautionary move.

A titanic struggle for power seemed certain with Premier Hua Kuo-feng seeking to hold his role of leadership against the Politburo's determined conservatives who argue that Mao's doctrinaire policies adopted by Hua undermined the country's economic development.

Authorities set a week-long period of official mourning and announced that an unprecedented mass memorial service would be held on Sept. 18 in the capital's huge Tien An Men Gate of Heavenly Peace Square where Mao celebrated his greatest triumphs.

World leaders hailed Mao as "the last giant of the century" and one of the "world's immortals." But in Taiwan radio stations interrupted regular broadcasts to announce: "We have very good news to report to you. Mao Tse-tung the bandit leader is dead."

President Ford hailed Mao's "vision and imagination" which led to improved Sino-U.S. relations and said his death was "tragic." Secretary of State Henry Kissinger expressed hope the two nations would continue a parallel course of cautious friendship "but the methods and the details are bound to be mysterious at this time."

The Soviet Union, which has villified Mao through the long years of their bitter ideological quarrel, announced the death but made no comment.

He died of a lingering, undisclosed illness at 10 minutes past midnight Peking time 11:10 EDT Wednesday — the 15th day of the 8th moon, one of China's oldest and most traditional holidays.

The cause of death was not announced but it came as no surprise. Mao has suffered a series of strokes and was reported suffering from Parkinson's disease. it was announced in Mid-June that Mao would no longer receive foreign visitors.

The Chinese had shouted many choruses of "May Chairman Mao live 10,000 years" but as early as the mid-1960s Mao told foreigners he was "preparing to see God soon."

The Chinese announced that Mao's body would lie in state in the Great Hall of the People for a week beginning Saturday and that on a national day of mourning on Sept. 18 the nation's millions would stand in silence for three minutes of meditation while sirens, whistles and bells sounded throughout the country at factories and on trains.

Crowds in Peking poured into Tien An Men Square, scene of serious rioting just five months ago, and began paying tribute to the man who was the only leader they had known since the Peoples Republic of China came into being on Oct. 1, 1949, after Mao's forces drove Chiang Kai-shek from the mainland.

Peking reports said great throngs of young people, many of them in tears, entered the square and stood in front of a huge portrait of the chairman shere they raised their clenched fists and took oaths: "Beloved Chairman Mao, we commit ourselves to continue the struggle, always according to your teachings."

A single green, flowered wreath was placed on the Martyrs Monument in the center of the square, which bears an inscription in Mao's calligraphy reading, "The People's Heroes are Immortal."

A single soldier kept the crowd moving and was joined later by other soldiers with fixed bayonets.

Mass. voters 'misled' by bottle bill opponents

BOSTON [UPI] — Supporters of a November referendum question banning non-returnable cans and bottles yesterday warned Massachusetts voters of "misleading" ads by opponents of the Bottle Bill.

Norman Stein, coordinator of the Bottle Bill Committee, accused the beverage and container industry of advertising "abuses" because of billboard ads throughout the state claiming passage of the bill could cost each family an extra $100 a year.

"There's no way it will cost that much," Stein said. "It's misleading. They know that about three-fourths of that will be returned as the deposit."

Bottle Bill Committee Treasurer, Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, said "the most disturbing thing is the amount of money coming in from out of state.

"I've never seen out of state industries terribly interested in jobs in Massachusetts. I didn't see Budweiser being terribly interested in jobs for Massachusetts when they built their plant in New Hampshire," he added.

According to reports filed last week with the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance, the Committee for Jobs and Convenience Containers reported it had raised more than $667,000 for the anti-bottle bill crusade. The Bottle Bill Committee had raised less than $8,000.

Stein and Kelly said the anti-returnable bottles forces were adopting an advertising strategy modeled after the successful campaign waged against a bottle-ban question in Dade County, Fla.

The Jobs and Convenience Containers Committee has claimed passage of the bill would cost several hundred jobs and increase costs to consumers.

"We're paying between $3.5 million and $4.5 million a year in this state just to clean up their litter," Stein said. He added that Massachusetts has lost approximately 3,300 jobs in the bottling and beverage industry since 1948 without a non-returnable bottle law.

Supporters of the bill claim passage would result in some job displacement and transfers but not in net jobs loss.

Boston schools calm on second class day

BOSTON [UPI] — Boston schools went through the second day of classes easily yesterday with attendance rising and buses rolling without incident under federal court desegregation orders.

"I think we've demonstrated that children can go to school safely and at the end of the bus ride is an education," said School Superintendent Marion Fahey, commenting on the first quiet opening of school in the three years of desegregation.

Attendance continued to run ahead of opening days last year.

At South Boston High School, attendance improved from 27 per cent on opening day to 31 per cent for the freshmen and sophomore classes. The juniors and seniors report for their first day tomorrow. Charlestown High School, with a full student body, reported attendance blossomed from 34 per cent Wednesday to 47 per cent.

Thousands of students still evaded classes, however, to enjoy a crisp, September day.

Police dispersed a small group of white youths outside Charlestown High, not far from historic Bunker Hill. But the action did not result the bottle and stone throwing of opening day, which was the only incident Wednesday during an otherwise quiet school day.

The calm yesterday indicated much of the antibusing militancy which ignited racial violence for the two previous Septembers has been dampered.

The number of white spectators outside schools in antibusing neighborhoods appeared smaller yesterday than on opening day.

Soviet pilot defects, gets asylum in U.S.

HONOLULU [UPI] — Defecting Soviet fighter pilot Viktor Ivanovich Belenko yesterday arrived in the United States, which has offered him asylum.

The 29-year-old jet pilot, who landed his top secret MIG25 in Japan Monday, stayed aboard a Northwest Orient flight from Tokyo during its two-hour refueling stop in Honolulu.

Chief customs inspector Edward Gilbert said Belenko was aboard the flight, but had been permitted to remain inside the 747 after the other passengers disembarked for customs and immigration clearance.

None of the passengers aboard the flight saw Belenko, who stayed in the first class lounge by himself. A Japanese cameraman said no one was allowed into the upstairs lounge, but that two bodyguards made several trips downstairs to get food and refreshments for Belenko.

The flight was to continue to Los Angeles.

Belenko was wearing a broad-striped suit and dark glasses when he boarded the flight in Tokyo. Prior to his departure he told Japanese authorities he was coming to the United States of his "own free will" and repeatedly refused appeals from Soviet officials for a face-to-face confrontation during which they had hoped to convince him to return.

Still at Hakodate City in northern Japan was Belenko's MIG25 Foxbat which he flew to Japan Monday. Japanese diplomats insisted the plane had not been touched by anyone since it landed at the airport 500 miles north of Tokyo. But American military sources in Hawaii said "you can bet your paycheck that we'll know just about everything there is to know about that plane before the Russians get it back."

Another Hawaii source said Belenko was believed to have left a wife and family in Russia.

A State Department spokesman in Washington, Frederick Z. Brown, said Belenko told both Russian and American diplomats in Japan that "he wished to travel to the United States of his own free will in order to live in this country."

What, no more bone in hot dogs?

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Consumer attorneys yesterday asked a federal judge to continue a temporary ban on the use of ground up bone and simmered fat scraps by food processors in hot dogs, pizzas and other foods.

They threatened further legal action if the Agriculture Department does not halt use of the controversial meat by-products.

District judge William Bryant promised a ruling Friday after hearing consumer and government lawyers argue the issue.

Justice Department attorney Vincent B. Terlep denied consumer claims that the Agriculture Department regulation allowing use of the by-products was illegal because it was issued without advance public consultation. He said the government earlier decided that "mechanically deboned meat" and other products involved are not harmful or adulterated.

If the regulation remains barred, Terlep warned, meat processors would be legally free to use the controversial products with fewer restraints than the regulation provides.

Consumer attorney Daniel Efroymson, asserting the bone and fat products are legally adulterated, said consumers will take further steps to force Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz to ban the products.

Efroysom said if the judge continues the temporary ban, consumer groups will ask Butz to end use of the by-products.

"If he turns us down then, we'll go back to court and ask that he be forced to act," Leonard said.

The products include mechanically deboned meat, which is made by crushing bones with attached meat scraps to rescue meat which would be lost under traditional hand deboning methods.

Dirty flick

WREXHAM, England [UPI] — Pauline Roberts, 19, pleaded guilty yesterday to committing criminal damage to a cream cake.

A court heard that Miss Roberts became irritated at the overtures of a pastry chef, scooped up the cream on top of one of his cakes and flicked it at him.

By the time police arrived, the prosecutor said, there was cream all over the dining room.

Maine gas pains

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — A Newport, Maine, service station operator told a state legislative committee yesterday that Maine's independent gasoline stations are being forced out of business by large oil companies.

The Energy Committee said it will seek a state attorney general's opinion on ways to prevent monopoly control of the gasoline business from developing in Maine.

Michael McNally told the committee that a large oil distributing company which owns numerous gas stations around the state is able to sell gasoline for less than he is even able to buy the fuel for from his suppliers.

"If this trend continues, there will be no place in the state for independent businessmen," McNally said.

The testimony came as the Energy Committee pondered how to determine whether there is proof that a monopoly is developing in Maine's gasoline business.

Ford 'provoked Panmumjom'

TOKYO [UPI] — North Korean Vice President Kim Dong Gyu accused President Ford of provoking the Aug. 18 incident that led to the slaying of two U.S. Army officers at Panmunjom to win votes in the November election, the government controlled news agency said yesterday.

In a National Day speech in the capitol of Pyongyang, Kim, one of four North Korean vice presidents, said Ford provoked the fight between American and North Korean troops at the truce village "to boost his sagging prestige... and remain in the presidency."

Kim, 61, did not mention in his speech that the two officers were hacked to death by North Koreans in a dispute over trimming the branches of a tree.

Nor did he mention the expression of regret sent to the United States by North Korean President Kim Il Sung or the negotiations after the killings that led to a new arrangement to separate soldiers of the two countries at Panmunjom.

"Ford, chieftan of U.S. imperialism, provoked the incident to justify his insidious policy in seeking in aggression and war a way out of the ever deepening crisis," Kim said.

"He was trying to boost his prestige, that has fallen to the ground, and amass enough votes to win the election and remain in the presidency," the official North Korean Central News Agency KONA quoted Kim as saying.

Kim is not related to North Korean President Kim Il Sung, who has ruled the country since North Korea was occupied by the Soviet Union at the end of World War II.

The official ceremony where Kim spoke was attended by most of North Korea's top officials, but not by the president himself. KCNA has issued no reports of public appearances or other official acts by Kim Il Sung since Aug. 24, six days after the Panmunjom killings.

KCNA said foreign diplomats in North Korea also attended the celebration marking the 28th anniversary of the founding of the country's present government,

Doll clothes are gift, sent back to Mattel

HAWTHORNE, Calif. [UPI] — Barbie doll clothes are on the list of forbidden gifts to the family of Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter.

Amy Carter, the 8-year-old daughter of the former governor from Georgia, has often been seen clutching her doll, and when she was at the Democratic National Convention in New York, she told interviewers she hoped her family's schedule would include a shopping spree for doll clothes.

Mattel Toys heard about Amy's wish and sent her an assortment of Barbie doll clothes and accessories, but the items, valued at less than $25, were returned, said Joel K. Rubenstein, spokesman for Mattel.

Rubenstein said the returned clothes were accompanied by a typed letter from Amy on Jimmy Carter campaign letter-head and a hand-scrawled note from Carter himself.

"Thank you very much for your kind letter and gift of Barbie clothes," wrote Amy. "I do appreciate your kindness, but I must return the clothes because I cannot accept any gifts of great value."

The letter was signed "Amy" and was typed by a secretary.

"We were disappointed but not surprised that the clothes were returned," said Rubenstein with a laugh. "We were aware of his policy of value, but we thought it would be an exception.

"We did not seek to curry any favors and we don't represent any special interest groups. We sent them because Amy had indicated she wanted to get some Barbie doll clothes."

Rubenstein said he respects Carter's policy banning all personal gifts and does not think presents to chidren should be excepted.

Carter's handwritten note also mentioned his policy of "not accepting either gifts or campaign contributions for me, my family, or my staff" and ended with: "I need your strong support in the fall campaign.

It was signed "Jimmy Carter."

DuPont condition critical after bizarre airplane accident

NEW LONDON, Conn. [UPI] — Henry B. DuPont III was in critical condition yesterday after his plane went out of control on the ground as he climbed from the cockpit.

Police said his father-in-law, Daniel Wheeler Jr., apparently accidentally brushed the controls, causing the plane to careen crazily down the air strip at Block Island, R.I., with DuPont clinging to the wing.

DuPont, a Bridgeport business executive and an heir to the vast DuPont chemical fortune, was hurled from the wing as the small aircraft began to take off before Wheeler could bring it under control, police said.

DuPont, 44, was in the intensive care unit of the Lawrence and Memorial Hospital after Wednesday's bizarre accident.

DuPont flew the single-engine Beechcraft Bonanza from Bridgeport to Block Island, 13 miles off the Rhode Island coast, to meet his yacht, being sailed in from Newport, R.I.

Police said Wheeler, of Stepney Depot, Conn., served as co-pilot on the trip in order to immediately fly the plane back to Bridgeport. They landed about 4 p.m. and DuPont left the engine running as he moved from the cabin to the wing. Wheeler began to crawl into the pilot's seat, but must have bumped the controls, police said.

"He was going to get out himself and his father-in-law was going to fly it back," police said. "He didn't stop the engine upon getting out of the plane so the prop was still going.

"When Wheeler hit the controls, the plane started spinning crazily out of control. He hung on the wing. Finally the plane started taking off on him, and he fell to the ground," according to police.

They said Wheeler later flew the plane back to the mainland. A Southport resident, DuPont has been manager of new business development at Remington Arms in Bridgeport for a decade. E.I. DuPont deNemours & Co., of which his father was an officer, owns 70 per cent of Remington.

Actress says 'idiot' doctors discourage Vitamin C use

BOSTON [UPI] — Naura Hayden — actress, singer and author of two books on health and nutrition — yesterday said federal agencies and doctors who reject the effectiveness of Vitamin C in preventing or treating the common cold are "idiots" motivated by money rather than concern for preventive medicine.

She was reacting to a comment earlier this week by the Food and Drug Administration which said claims by Nobel Laureate Linus Pauling that Vitamin C is effective in preventing or treating the common cold "are not justified" and "need further study."

"These people are such idiots it makes my blood turn," said Hayden, who gives most of the credit to her present state of good health to Vitamin C, as well as other vitamins.

That story is told in her current book, "Everything You've Always Wanted to Know about ENERGY but Were Too Weak to Ask," published by Hawthorn.

Hayden, who has appeared on stage, screen and television as well as having cut two albums, said she was a sickly child, and experienced a dozen colds a year, as well as other ailments such as bleeding gums, easily raised bruises, and what she now believes was at one time a case of scurvy the doctor failed to recognize the symptoms and hence, failed to treat it properly, she said.

"I got into vitamins because I used to get very sick. I grew up with colds and I had no energy." It was about eight years ago she learned of Vitamin C and decided to give it a try.

"I haven't had a cold in seven years."

As for the FDA position, she said there is "no question as to the effectiveness of Vitamin C" in combating colds and other ailments.

The problem most times is that people don't take enough of it, she said.

"Most people need more than they take, if they don't find it effective. If it doesn't seem to work, take more," she advised.

"Doctors are reluctant to prescribe vitamins," she said. Instead they push unnecessary drugs upon their patients. "You don't need drugs, you don't need all of the expensive drugs they try to push on you. Vitamin C is so much less expensive.

"There is a big profit in pushing drugs. Doctors don't want to get people on Vitamin C. If they did, they would lose a hell of a lot of money." She said there are some younger doctors who admit the value of vitamins, but "these old guys with the FDA, it's really a crime how they are turning people off of vitamins."

Hayden said doctors and drug companies don't want a healthy population based on preventive medicine. "There's no question in my mind profits are the motive," she said.

The drug companies "know nothing about preventive medicine, and the older guys — doctors are anti-preventive medicine because it detracts from the money they are making. They are drug happy, and there's no profit in health."

"I want people to be aware they have to try this, it's really cheap, and their children would never get sick if they took enough Vitamin C.

Ford Motor chief bargainer warns of 'wrenching' strike

DETROIT [UPI] — The United Auto Workers' chief bargainer at Ford Motor Co. warned yesterday the company's delay in making a second contract offer may not leave negotiators enough time to avoid an economy-wrenching strike by 170,000 workers next Tuesday.

"It's getting awfully, awfully close," said Ken Bannon, UAW vice president who heads the negotiating team at the No.2 auto company.

With the strike deadline less than six days away, bargainers failed to meet yesterday for the second straight day, and Bannon left Ford World Headquarters in suburban Dearborn at noon.

Bannon said he hoped company negotiators were using the time constructively to completely revise their initial wage offer which the union quickly rejected.

Bannon said Ford will have to make a completely new proposal, not change the original one piece by piece, if both sides are to have enough time to avoid a strike at the "target" firm. Ford was last the target to set the pattern in 1967 and was shut down for 66 days in a nationwide strike.

A small group of about 35 union dissidents marched outside the Ford headquarters for almost two hours demanding that there be no union sellout as the deadline approached.

The group, Auto Workers United to Fight in '76, claimed the union leadership's "expression of shock and indignation over the company's take-away offers are just a cover." The group said the union is seeking more paid days off but is not concentrating on demands for more control over overtime and working conditions.

The shorter work time demand has been labeled a top priority item by the union to insure job security and to create even more jobs. Ford Chairman Henry Ford II has said he is opposed to the idea in principle.

"You can't pay people for not working and have the economy grow," Ford told newsmen Wednesday.

Bannon, who termed Ford's remarks "the same old story," said the union has no intention of changing any demands to spark movement in the negotiations.

Asked what changes the union might make, Bannon said, "We're flexible to the extent we're not going to give up any of our principles."

Pessimism offset—

Many American families still deep in recession

NEW YORK [AP] — If the political candidates paid more attention to the surveys of consumer sentiment they would find a revelation that almost screams out for their attention.

It is this: A good many American families, perhaps majority, are still deep in the recession, often unable to obtain necessities and pay their bills. And they lack confidence in the government's economic policy.

How then do surveys sometimes show Americans are becoming more confident? Simply because the views of low-income families are sometimes offset by the optimism of upper-income families.

This distinct split in the fortunes of upper-and lower-income families is often disguised by generalizations about personal income, car sales, bank savings accounts, tourist revenues and the like. But it is there.

News Analysis

It is only when the generalizations are examined that the evidence of two economies emerges one of which is strong, the other weak.

Researchers at the University of Michigan report, for example, that for upper-income families the recession is over and confidence is rising, but that for those with incomes below $12,500 confidence continues to drop.

For those of incomes of $15,000 or more, they report, there is an increase in the proportion of people who feel better off financially than in 1975. They feel favorably disposed toward new cars, houses and other big-ticket items.

Among those with incomes below $12,500, the same researchers say, there has been very little satisfaction reported concerning individual financial situations.

Jay Schmiedeskapm, who directs the Survey Research Center at the university, comments that at this stage of the business cycle it isn't highly unusual for attitudes of upper-income families to recover more swiftly.

"However, at present, the difference is unusably large," he states in a report on the center's activities.

Sindlinger & Co., which conducts daily surveys on consumer attitudes, recently headlined its report to clients:

"Consumers Remain Economically Split. Upper-income consumers continue to fare well but lower-income majority is hit hard by inflation and unemployment."

Sindlinger arrives at the conclusion that 70 per cent of Americans are still battling inflation, recession and unemployment on replies to his survey of Household Money Supply.

Four questions are asked of families contacted by the company's telephone interviewers: What is your current income compared with six months ago?

How students have lost out

[Editor's note: The following editorial, received by the Collegian yesterday, is Student Senate Speaker Annette Guttenberg's explanation for resigning from her post in the Senate Wednesday night.]

By ANNETTE GUTTENBERG

I believe that students are human beings and citizens. I believe we have rights and these rights are denied at the University. I am willing to gain our rights to control our educational, living and eating situations by both the institutional means available and by creating our own means.

This means I am willing and wanting to gain information and exchange views with administrators, but I maintain that our roles are adversarial. Administrators do not cooperate with students or faculty. This means that I am willing and wanting to prove trust with students of differing political views.

I have tried to share information with other students and with Co-Presidents Jay Martus and Paul Cronin and Bryan Harvey. But information these people have access to, has been denied to me.

An example is the Board of Trustee's advance notice that they were considering not collecting the Student Activity Tax Fund. I learned of this the night before the Student Affairs Committee of the trustees was to meet. All of us once we were given the memos and understood their importance, then had to work for 24 hours straight documenting our organization. We did a good presentation, though we were all zombied out.

My hopes in unified student leadership have been totally destroyed as the summer wore on. Whether this in-fighting crap is a natural part of sandbox politics, whether my feminism alienates the men I work with, there is for whatever reasons a total lack of honesty.

I believe we can more easily create situations wherein communications and control become realities. The Senate's Women's Caucus is a good example of creating an environment for change. Small groups of people discussing issues and creating solutions is more democratic and is humane. This is the idea of a STUDENT UNION with councils directing their own concerns whether it be a Senate to oversee expenditures, an economics council to gain more courses or a nurses' council to save a department.

The Administration sees quite clearly that if they keep students fighting one another, we will stay off their backs. They have put new toys in our sandbox. They created or recreated a Program Council, they've founded students over the summer to research why students are inactive, why the Senate does not work, and is part of their continuing effort to destroy student's organizing, the Student Senate and students acting for ourselves.

The Co-presidents' have been quoted as saying they and the administration are cooperating with one another. We can all remember the speeches given on April 1 when the officers then were "sworn in". "We will not be bought off," they solemnly stated. They have been bought off. No longer do they advocate students' positions — but understand the administrations positions and advocate that to us.

Knowledge is power. Access to knowledge which others do not have — in a humane sandbox, means sharing that information, discussing it, and acting on it: unified and strong. Students kept in ignorance concerning our lives: economically, academically and socially; are powerless and passive. Is it any wonder that the administration keeps silent until we research their decisions? Is it any wonder that they are very pleased with the politics of our co-presidents?

A most upsetting example of the great leaps our co-presidents have made is our lawsuit against the Board of Trustees. Many of you might wonder just what happened with that. With Jay Martus' name on the top of the suit, we might assume that he's had the necessary research for the suit completed. To the contrary, he suggested that we settle on the suit. The Coordinating Committee disagreed, there is research being done, and I tried to hire a CPA with no success. If the case comes to court, it will be because of our Legal Services Office and concerned students on the Coordinating Committee and in the Graduate Student Senate.

In summary, I'd like to clearly define what the term sandbox politics has for me. Personal self-interest and self-advancement is the primary concern and acting in the student's interest is of importance only in attaining one's primary goal.

I'm not interested in in-fighting, in who is more important, but in students and our role in the University. I would like to see the Senate confirm its institutional role of being concerned students about our roles and our environment and ACT ON OUR UNITY!

End U.S. aid to fascist Chilean junta

To the Editor:

Tomorrow marks the third year of facist terror in Chile. On September 11, of 1973 the Moneda Palace, office of the duly elected President — Salvador Allende and the Popular Unity Government was bombed and attacked by the Pinochet junta. The complicity of the Nixon administration in the plotting, financing and carrying out of the coup of the democratically elected government of President Allende is well known and was justified as "in the best interests of the Chilean and American people."

Three years of military rule supported and defended by the Ford administration has led to 30,000 Chileans deaths, 150,000 arrested, 1,200 disappeared, 100,000 exiled, 6,000 long term prisoners, a 25 per cent unemployment rate and one third of the populace starving in a nation of 10 million. In that time the Defense Department has sold $92 million in military hardware to the junta, [the day after the House and Senate agreed to ban all military aid and sales to Chile]; the Treasury Department approved a $125 million loan to the junta by 16 North American banks; the U.S. dominated World Bank gave Chile a $33 million loan on February, and the I.M.F. granted a $90 million loan on June 4 [recall the sudden freeze up, of loans and credit to Chile under the Popular Unity Government from 1970-1973]; and also Treasury Secretary William Simon on a friendly visit to Chile May 7, 1976 told dictator Pinochet, "we will look toward ways of increasing public and private help. In particular, we will look toward a major program of encouraging U.S. private investments in Chile."

In these three years of terror, torture, repression, the suspension of the Chilean congress, the banning of the trade unions and blacklisting of their membership, the outlawing of political parties, and the closing of the opposition press, the U.S. Government has poured over one billion tax dollars into the Chilean junta in economic and military aid. In the name of "democracy and the free world," the U.S. government supported the Thieu regime of Vietnam, it supports the murderous Vorster regime in South Africa, the Rabin, Dayan crowd of Zionist Israel, the Park reign of terror in South Korea — an endless list of autocratic war-against-the-democratic movement-mongers and in this list Pinochet's Chile stands out as a most despicable crime against humanity.

The National Coordinating Center in Solidarity with Chile demands of those running for elective office, dandidates for President, Congress, and of state and local officals a respect for the clear intent of Congress and the will of the American people by stopping all forms of aid direct and indirect to the Chilean junta until it releases all political prisoners and restores human and democratic rights to its people. Of the students workers and faculty of the university and the members of the surrounding communities we should expect a heightened demand upon these elected officials and candidates to bring an end to the facist terror in Chile.

Happy trails

To the Editor:

I thought I was facing a communication dilemma until I remembered the Collegian. Put simply, the dilemma was this — just before I finished my graduate studies I became ill and was not able to say goodbye and thanks to the many people at UMass who gave so much to me [e.g. friends, students, professors et al]. It was "bugging" me all summer and I now know the Collegian is a way I can respond.

To all the folks who made my stay at UMass interesting, exciting, and rewarding I am extremely grateful. One of the things many of my students and professors discussed with me was a lack of community and positive stimulation at UMass. I would like to reiterate to all I interacted with that the possibility to grow at UMass is real and many of the things we are searching for do surface if we communicate our needs. There are many fine persons at UMass and I heartfully thank the ones who shared a little of themselves with me.

I wish you all much success in the coming academic year and hope your "horizons" will continue to expand and make you wiser and more mature.

Happy trails to you all!

The plastic education

By W.M. ROBERTS

For almost a year on the third shift, smelling hot vinyl, milled and calendered, rolling out in sixty-inch sheets four thousand yards long onto a big A-frame, I watched and worked plastic. Now I have come back to big UMass to earn or learn some property called education title documented by a paper degree of ownership.

It was a long lean year chasing dollars, and it seems there is a long paper chase ahead of me. I do not miss the stink of plastic or stink of fire, but stuck in my mind is a printed sticker on a chemical barrel: POLYVINYL CHLORIDE CONTAINS VINYL CHLORIDE, VINYL CHLORIDE IS A CANCER SUSPECT AGENT.

Everywhere on campus are quiet unassuming little faces eating foods packaged in plastic sheets, while sitting on a supported vinyl sheet chair, rushing home to spin a vinyl record. They go home to great Naugahyde bean bag chair; Naugahyde animal symbol that looks so ferocious is really a cancer-suspect agent. Soon people look like vinyl Naugahyde persons with their insides carried around in plastic bags although those are not insides, those are textbooks.

After a year away from [illegible] UMASS[illegible]OCOMPLEX should look different, but it is just another [illegible] of familiar and unfamiliar faces and buildings, of books and benefits, of Campus Center Complexities. There is no why here. NO WHY. Just a big busy university with guaranteed capacity receivership of federal funds.

What? All cancer suspect agents receiving federal funds are meeting in BOC subterns — REPORT OR ELSE. Important message of meeting: Survival from UMASS budget cutmebackout is possible.

They want money. Don't you? They will probably take your money while you do your TM EST THINK CHRIST SPIRIT SOPHIST JUDAIC ZEN WHAT DOES IT ALL MEAN type soul search. Can perception be materialized especially through soul search of spirit eluding material? The whole big machine is looking for a conscience as it spits out plastic material. It needs a ghost.

The missing ghost lost feeling of Transcendentalists, Communists, and Multinational Corporate Businessmen pierces mists of techno-industrial fog. Even women chase through the dim. They carry suitcases of money. America thinks purpose is truth, justice and the American way? Is all aspirin television caffeine pot valium necessary for our coping with profit motivated society?

There is more control on students to make them better guarantors of jobs and profits. Failures count. Drop sheets must be signed. Students must pay and register before the semester begins. It is control out of control; it is the overall control of society demanding more order for accumulation of property, whether that property is real wealth or knowledge or power. It is the limits of profit. It is jobs and profit money ingrained in UMASS existence.

We equate property with freedom; we equate natural order to machine technology. Even knoledge is property with its own special titles — High School Diploma, BA, BS, etc., processed through factory school systems. Education is industrialized and mass produced far exceeding demand for its product. Existence is a machine of pluralistic parts interacting through institutions and quasi-democratic processes. Who is in control of the machine?

Students come to school to accumulate property and to find a job (not a place) in society. Everyone has something missing, a ghost, haunting and telling one there is more to life than a Chrysler Corporation Arrow zooming around the TV set before the cereal commerical.

Society has no conscience. It is like learning how to mill plastic and being told, "Be careful of that machine. It has no conscience. It will pick you up, chew you, and spit you back out. It will not care." We are back as plastic processed for society, being picked up and spit out chewed up, looking for the hidden essence of life, living for a vanishing dollar work ethic, hoping the world does not die of its own cancers in the thirty years.

Trials of 'Superwoman'

...It's Superwoman. Nope, the Superwoman of today can't leap tall buildings in a single bound or stop locomotives, but she's coming close, or trying to.

In days gone by, women seemed to be satisfied with doing one or two things in life, they were satisfied with simple things. They were either the popular homecoming queen type, a wife and mother, a civic and social leader, or a working girl with a career.

Now with the onslaught of Women's Liberation, women are beginning to realize that they can do anything they set their minds to. They are beginning to feel that they are the equals of men and are learning to step out into the mainstream of life and not feel hampered in any way by their sex.

With the coming of this sentiment of liberation we have the coming of the "Superwoman." With all the new avenues of pursuit opening up, many women feel that they have to get out and go, go, go. They feel they have to prove to themselves and to the rest of the world that they can do anything. Well sure, women can do anything, but everything at once?

A lot of women force themselves to become Superwomen through feelings of inadequacy. They see other women who are very, very busy and very, very successful. They begin to compare themselves to these highly active women and then they start to feel guilty because they themselves aren't out doing the same things.

The Superwoman complex causes women to feel guilty about other things also. A woman that was formerly a housewife and mother only, and has now taken a job or career, is made to feel guilty because she has "neglected" her family. She then feels like she is being forced to prove not only her competency on the business front but also on the family front, and begins to feel bad if for any reason she can't manage to do it all.

Many women have a hard time giving up the old, traditional values which used to define a woman's position in life. But these same women also feel a need to redefine themselves in terms of the liberation of today. Consequently some women today are doing their jobs 150 percent or more.

Also, the families of such women do not always readily accept the woman's new role. There are things that are traditionally expected of mothers, and families find it difficult to deal with the fact that the mother has a desire to do anything besides the duties allotted to her as mother.

The Superwoman will gradually disappear as time goes on. When people get used to seeing a women do different things, things not usually done by or expected from women, the Superwoman will become human. When people stop expecting a woman to be active in every phase of life she will be free and able to settle down to being just a regular human being that lives and breathes just like any competant male.

The most important thing is for the woman herself to feel satisfied with what she, herself is doing. Sure, the attitudes of people in general has to change, but a woman herself has to have a positive self-image.

Superwoman will be allowed to rest in peace only when each and every woman on the face of this earth can find a niche in life, be happy and satisfied with the niche and not feel as if she had to take the weight of the world on her shoulders to prove that she's competant.

The unavoidable atom

By THOMAS MAJOR

The furor over the planned Seabrook nuclear power plant has dragged the issue of nuclear safety back into the news and, as usual, nuclear plants are catching it from all sides, being called everything from a public threat to a killer of flounders.

Locally, Mass. PIRG and the Collegian (at least a majority of its editors) have vocally attacked nuclear energy. Nationally, Ralph Nader is doing what he does best which is making the government look very foolish over its handling of nuclear energy.

Everybody is armed to the teeth with reams of studies, reports, statistics and data showing how hideous nuclear power is. But the question I wish one of them would answer is: how can the country avoid [illegible]g nuclear energy?

The search for cheaper energy has arrived at nuclear power. Gas and oil are becoming scarce and expensive. Coal is dirty to mine and to use. Thermonuclear fusion, solar power, geothermal energy, wind power and tidal power are all unworkable on a large scale. They will have their day, but it won't be for another twenty or thirty years.

Meanwhile, if the country decided tomorrow to start a concentrated effort to use these exotic energy sources, the vast amounts of power needed to provide the necessary building materials would have to come from more oil, more coal and more nuclear energy.

But is it safe? And if not, can it be made safe?

There are two factors that prevent that question from being discussed in a calm and logical way. One is the regrettable fact that the two biggest advocates of nuclear plants are the government and the power industry — not two of America's most credible institutions. The other is the hysterical tone of the scientific reactionaries who see atomic power as one more roadblock in their efforts to drive America back into the Stone Age.

It is probably true that the government made a mistake in its premature promotion of the construction of nuclear power plants. And it is also probably true that these power plants, as presently designed and built, may not be safe enough.

Nuclear energy could be the most dangerous source of energy yet discovered by man. On the other hand, it should be remembered that if it can be made safe, nuclear power might be the key to our energy problems until those other clean energy sources become economical to use.

There is still time to discuss the issue. Nuclear power hasn't become an absolute necessity yet, and there is time to perfect nuclear power plants if they can work safely and economically. But it is dangerous to sum up the incredibly complex subject of nuclear safety in a rallying slogan or an inflammatory cartoon. Nuclear energy could become very important to this country, and such simplification can only make the inevitable decisions about nuclear power much more painful than necessary.

Dodging the oppressive heat and humidity of the Ohio Valley, and taking advantage of a full moon and clear night, Transcontinental Canoe Lines made its first nighthawk flight.

You miss a lot traveling at night. People are off the river and the only scenery is an occasional silouhette. But Captain Stanley insisted that he wasn't paddling at mid-day. My suggestion that we go back to a split shift. early morning, late in evening, met with an obscenity for an answer.

We made Madison (by river finally) at 2:00 a.m. (by river finally) and spread our sleeping bags on a grassy hill. In the morning, we set out to tour this river boomtown.

The Steamboat Era made Madison. Many old mansions, usually brick or stucco with wrought iron trim, dot the town. The railroad stopped its growth, taking a more northern route. Now Madison's major industry is power.

The river provides a cheap and easy way to transport coal from Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky and Illinois to power plants in the Madison area. Since Madison is the central point of the Ohio, it is ideal. High sulphur Illinois coal is blended with cleaner burning eastern coal to produce an environmentally acceptable fuel. Plants here provide much of Michigan and the western Great Lakes region with electricity.

All types of pleasure boats dock at Madison. Several marinas cater to cabin cruisers, sail boats, runabouts and an occassional Chinese junk (one actually travels these waters — it was imported from the Orient).

In summertime, especially on a Friday, the riverside is a floating party. An invitation for a beer may lead you for an evening with a blue collar worker or a steel mill owner. I spent the afternoon laughing and drinking with both, Stan hid from the humidity in an air-conditioned library, then toured in the cool of the evening.

At sunset, rather than party with Madison's river rats, Stan decided to paddle to Louisville. Five inches shorter and 50 pounds lighter, my arguments were ignored.

As darkness fell, patio lights all along the banks winked at us sliding silently by. From a point 18 miles outside Louisville, appropriately called 18 Mile Island, houseboats and runabouts lined the islands (18, 12 and Six Mile Islands) and shores, with beer, bonfires and bourbon raising spirits.

As parties died in drunken pleasure, our canoe slipping past was regarded more as hallucination than reality. One partier knew we were real.

"That's a good way to get SHOT!!!" he bellowed. He was referring to a practice of modern-day river bandits who paddle up to houseboats, strip them, then glide away under cover of night.

Finally docking at 3 a.m., at a very private club, we decided to sleep in the floating (but tied) "Joie". It was cramped, but we managed.

The next day, Stan decided to bypass Louisville in favor of mileage. Again, I don't remember being consulted in the decision. Actually, we made very little mileage.

That afternoon, across from West Point, Ky., a pontoon boat hijacked us into a party. "We can't let you get out of Kentucky without at least an offer of some down-home hospitality," they said. We spent the night sleeping on the banks of the Salt River.

We spent the next day paddling past woodland that is officially Fort Knox. The only sign of civilization all morning was a greeting by a military policeman looking for two deserters.

During the next 48 hours we saw only farmland and woods with an occasional small town perched on the banks...just peaceful, quiet river, with an occasional tow boat churning by, its pilot waving.

Late in the afternoon, we cruised into a marina in Tell City, Ind., named by its Swiss founders for their national hero, William Tell. Small business thrive in this walled city, particularly the locally famous Tell City Pretzel bakeries.

After a newspaper interview and all the hospitality of the marina owners, we received an important piece of equipment — Ohio River charts. A vacationer returning from the Mississippi gave us his extra set of Army Corps of Engineer charts. "Naviguessing" became easy with the marvelously detailed charts.

Coming into Ownesboro, we encountered a new problem — headwinds.

Winds from the west signal fair weather, but when they blow up the river, they create choppy conditions. With only 10 inches of freeboard, "Joie" had many difficulties fighting two-foot whitecaps. We actually had to dock just a few miles above Ownesboro to duck the surf.

When we finally reached port (for the night, I thought), a woman on a bicycle rolled up to greet us and give us her family version of the rape of America, otherwise known as "The Winning of the West".

Besides the usual tales of hardship and pioneer spirit that led ner ancestors by wagon into the "Promised Land", she gave us one insight into those glamorized and sometimes revered people who "civilized" the Ohio Valley.

"When my ancestors' wagon train passed through an Indian Village, one of the men shot a squaw for no reason...When the young braves got back, they didn't particularly like that, so they went after them. The Indians surrounded the wagon train and threatened to massacre them all if the guilty man wasn't turned over. The wagonmaster gave him to them. They skinned him alive...."

After our history lesson, we talked with the marina owner and other local river-types until sundown. Stan was disappointed that we hadn't made Evansville (where he had a family friend).

Despite poor visibility and my protests, he said we'd push all night and sleep that morning.

"Besides," he said, "We slept three hours this afternoon when the wind laid us up."

—Next week — an end to night traveling.

Food production explored

An Alternative Agriculture Coalition is being formed by a group of students interested in making the University self-sufficient in food production and energy sources.

The coalition, which is affiliated with the Student Center for Educational Research, hopes to research such topics as land use and waste recycling, and also educate students to the problems of food and energy production.

According to Edward Pachico, one of the organizers, the group is the offshoot of the Butterfield dormitory Farm Project, a group of drm residents worked a half-acre of land to cut down on food costs for the dorm.

Butterfield dromitory has its own dining commons, not affiliated with University Food Services.

Pachico said that according to University officials, there are about 600 tillable acres at the Amherst campus.

He said the meeting was an organizational one, since organizers are not sure of what direction to take in their research or what people are interested in exploring.

He also said the coalition would seek the support of other interested groups in the Amherst area.

Among specific projects the group wishes to discuss, is specific proposal for recycling dining commons' waste into compost and beginning to mark out areas of University property to farm.

In a letter to the public, Pachico said, "At the present time most of the tillable land at the University is being used to test fertilizers, insecticides and herbicides which would make the state more dependent on fossil fuels and outside fertilizer supplies. The coalition seeks to reverse this trend."

The coalition also is promoting "eco-farming", which produces the same yields per acre at one-third to one-half the cost of synthetic fertilizer, encourages the recycling of organic materials, and creates less water pollution and soil erosion.

The coalition will meet Monday night at 7:30 in the Campus Center 174-176. Those who wish to join but cannot attend, should call 253-7122.

LA police, Explorer scouts share more than cookies

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Sixteen police officers who were sexually involved with teen-aged girl Explorer Scouts will be charged either with criminal complaints or departmental violations, Acting Police Chief Daryl Gates said Thursday.

He said the involvement with six girls, aged 15 to 19, which continued for about two years, was not a "sex scandal," however.

"There were no outraged parents, no outraged young people," Gates said. "I wouldn't call it a sex scandal.

"I would say that there are some outraged officers and the department is outraged."

He said charges against nine of the officers would be filed with the district attorney and the city attorney's office. Charges could range from felony statutory rape to a misdemeanor, contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Officers charged by the Internal Affairs Office of the Police Department could be dismissed or suspended for periods of time for insubordination and improper conduct, Gates said.

The six girls, four of whom were under 18 at the time, worked with officers at the Hollywood Division station as members of the Law Enforcement Explorer Girls — LEEGS — part of the Explorer Scouts program, affiliated with the Boy Scouts of America. They have since voluntarily left the program.

"There was no rape, no seduction, Gates said. "There was a lot of agreement." He said the incidents all involved private relationships, adding, "I would rather not get into very much detail in that regard."

He said the incidents came to light through one of the girls who reported them.

The officers who were investigated remained on duty pending outcome of the charges to be filed, he said. They all underwent lie detector tests, along with several others who were originally suspected.

RHYTHM
RCA Records and Tapes

A dynamic new force on the national music scene, RHYTHM exploded in 1976 with their smash hit, "FIND YOURSELF SOMEBODY TO LOVE" and quickly established itself as a prime club and concert act.

Recently pacted to RCA records, Rhythm just released their very first album.

The reasons for the groups success are evident — strong vocals, excellent musicianmanship, and a powerful, entertaining show, complete with lighting and sound effects. The mood that RHYTHM conveys is one of happiness and pleasure, and it is virtually impossible for anyone present at one of their shows not to be caught up in the infectious enthusiasm of the members of the group.

RHYTHM is a must-see attraction. Be sure to catch RHYTHM at

Famed guitarist performing at Smith

The internationally-famed flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya will appear in concert in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College in Northampton tomorrow night at 8:15.

This concert is the first of a series of eight events planned for the 1976-1977 academic season by Terry Charles Schwarz, managing director of the Great Artist Series.

Montoya was the first artist to present a concert of flamenco guitar alone. Previously, this art was restricted to accompanying dancers; however, 30 years ago Montoya took the step of performing an entire program of flamenco guitar by himself.

Tickets to Montoya's recital tomorrow cost $4 for general admission and may be purchased through Smith College Bookstore (Seelye Hall); Music in the Round in Springfield; Sunshine Records in Amherst or by mailing a check with a stamped, return envelope to Commonwealth Concerts, 39 Northampton Rd., Amherst 01002. Remaining tickets may be bought at door.

Instruction offered in music and dance

As an expanded community service, the Performing Arts Division of the Department of Music and Dance is offering specialized instruction this fall for students seriously interested in music and-or dance.

Persons of all ages are encouraged to study with either members of the music and dance faculty, or area professionals engaged specifically to teach in the division.

Also offered is one credit hour applicable toward a University degree for any of the offerings, up to 3 credit hours. Eligible students would include UMass students and high school juniors and seniors whose schools accept University credit.

Fall semester registration will be held today and tomorrow in Room 273 of the Fine Arts Center. Private and class instruction will begin next week.

Interested persons maa obtain additional information by calling the Department of Music and Dance, 545-0337.

Volunteer service provides internships

Student Volunteer Services (SVS), a student-initiated and administered program, operates out of the Office of Internships. SVS serves as a referral agency to the various social service agencies located in Western Massachusetts. The placement sites are local for easy access to students still taking courses at the University.

Students may also elect to receive academic credit although the official add-drop period ends Sept. 16.

Free transportation available to voters

The League of Women Voters will give free transportation to the polls on Tuesday, with a van supplied by D. H. Jones Realty. If you are interested in a ride, call the Chamber of Commerce at 253-9666.

Chamber, Orchestra music series debut

Two major series sponsored by the UMass Arts Council will bring the Boston Symphony, three other orchestras, and five chamber music ensembles to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall during the coming academic year.

The Council's chamber series will open with Tashi, Tibetan for "good fortune", on Tuesday, Oct. 5. The group includes four young instrumentalists.

Second in the series will be a performance by the Fisk Jubilee Singers of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., on Wednesday, Nov. 3. Their singing of spiritual music will be directed by pianist Matthew Kennedy.

The Quartetto Italiano, a string quartet on its 25th American tour, will come to the campus on Tuesday, Feb. 15. It will be followed on Tuesday, March 15, by I Solisti Di Zagreb, an ensemble of eleven string virtuosi from Yugoslavia.

The Karr-Lewis Duo, double bass and keyboard, will ring the chamber music series to a close on Thursday, April 7.

Tickets for the series are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and are priced at $16 and $20 for the general public, $10 for students.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa conducting, will inaugurate the orchestra series. An all-Beethoven program has been selected for this concert scheduled Monday, Oct. 18.

Tickets for the orchestra series are on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and are priced at $19 and $22, $13 for students.

For further information on both the chamber music and orchestra series, caal 545-2511. The box office is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. All series performances begin at 8 p.m.

WALL STREET

WALL STREET is an exciting act from Boston with a rapidly growing following that scans the entire New England area. Both listeners and dancers have been electrified by the group's pulsating beat and diversified repetoire.

Stylistically, WALL STREET'S song selection runs the gamut of contemporary, disco, funk, rock and jazz with an emphasis on exciting vocals and superb musicianship. Most often audiences are amazed at the textures and complexities generated by just four players.

YOUR BIRTHDAY

by STELLA WILDER

Friday, September 10 — Born today, you tend to be somewhat jealous of those more capable than you. Your jealousy, however, does not cause in you the kind of tensions that preclude either creativity or the successful carrying out of other people's projects; rather, it causes you to become more involved, more determined, more prepared for what you have to do, so that in the end, you are able to meet the challenge of another's success with success of your own. Although you have learned to control a highly emotional nature, there are times when your temper flares and your feelings get the better of you. Indeed, your temper may prove a disadvantage where your personal relationships are concerned, for it may rise up to spoil budding understanding when arguments become hot and heavy.

Somewhat mercurial in nature, you are inclined toward fairly rapid changes of mind, especially where behavior standards are concerned. Such changeableness can be confusing to those who are, in general, under your authority -- to children, for instance, or to those who work under you -- for they often are not certain of which of their deeds will meet with your approval and which will not. In all fairness, however, it must be said that circumstances and situations play a large part in what appears to be your vacillation.

You are not especially restless; you know how to relax between activities, how to recover energy and poise so as to be able to move from one activity to another without doing a disservice to either.

Saturday, September 11

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Exceedingly sensitive youngsters must be catered to. Don't be surprised to be met with a show of tears.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Your interest in the material things of life may backfire early in the day. Join family for fun in the evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make this a Saturday for indulging children in their whims -- so long as doing do does not endanger anyone. Show affection.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Regardless of how emotionally uptight you may feel, put up a cool and calm facade. Restrain your anger.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Satisfy another's curiosity regarding academic questions. Where personal matters are concerned, keep your own secrets just that -- secret.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your undoubted loyalty to the cause in which you are engaged brings you advancement sooner than you had thought possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Show a serius attitude toward a child's difficulty. There is no time like the present for allowing the young to try their wings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Efficiency and reliability are essential to the success of your newest enterprise. Don't try to skip any phase of the project.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The idea you have of your own dignity may be erroneous. Make an effort to see yourself as others see you -- even if it hurts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The support you lend to a loved one's career may not be appreciated at the moment. The future should show that you were right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Give your wholehearted energy to a project instituted by younger family members. These are days for firming up family relationships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — For women, excellence in homemaking really pays off today. For men, appreciation of homemaking does the same. Complement -- and compliment -- each other.

Chamber, Orchestra music series debut

Two major series sponsored by the UMass Arts Council will bring the Boston Symphony, three other orchestras, and five chamber music ensembles to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall during the coming academic year.

The Council's chamber series will open with Tashi, Tibetan for "good fortune", on Tuesday, Oct. 5. The group includes four young instrumentalists.

Second in the series will be a performance by the Fisk Jubilee Singers of Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., on Wednesday, Nov. 3. Their singing of spiritual music will be directed by pianist Matthew Kennedy.

The Quartetto Italiano, a string quartet on its 25th American tour, will come to the campus on Tuesday, Feb. 15. It will be followed on Tuesday, March 15, by I Solisti Di Zagreb, an ensemble of eleven string virtuosi from Yugoslavia.

The Karr-Lewis Duo, double bass and keyboard, will ring the chamber music series to a close on Thursday, April 7.

Tickets for the series are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and are priced at $16 and $20 for the general public, $10 for students.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa conducting, will inaugurate the orchestra series. An all-Beethoven program has been selected for this concert scheduled Monday, Oct. 18.

Tickets for the orchestra series are on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office and are priced at $19 and $22, $13 for students.

For further information on both the chamber music and orchestra series, caal 545-2511. The box office is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. All series performances begin at 8 p.m.

WALL STREET

WALL STREET is an exciting act from Boston with a rapidly growing following that scans the entire New England area. Both listeners and dancers have been electrified by the group's pulsating beat and diversified repetoire.

Stylistically, WALL STREET'S song selection runs the gamut of contemporary, disco, funk, rock and jazz with an emphasis on exciting vocals and superb musicianship. Most often audiences are amazed at the textures and complexities generated by just four players.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Friday, September 10 — Born today, you tend to be somewhat jealous of those more capable than you. Your jealousy, however, does not cause in you the kind of tensions that preclude either creativity or the successful carrying out of other people's projects; rather, it causes you to become more involved, more determined, more prepared for what you have to do, so that in the end, you are able to meet the challenge of another's success with success of your own. Although you have learned to control a highly emotional nature, there are times when your temper flares and your feelings get the better of you. Indeed, your temper may prove a disadvantage where your personal relationships are concerned, for it may rise up to spoil budding understanding when arguments become hot and heavy.

Somewhat mercurial in nature, you are inclined toward fairly rapid changes of mind, especially where behavior standards are concerned. Such changeableness can be confusing to those who are, in general, under your authority -- to children, for instance, or to those who work under you -- for they often are not certain of which of their deeds will meet with your approval and which will not. In all fairness, however, it must be said that circumstances and situations play a large part in what appears to be your vacillation.

You are not especially restless; you know how to relax between activities, how to recover energy and poise so as to be able to move from one activity to another without doing a disservice to either.

Saturday, September 11

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Exceedingly sensitive youngsters must be catered to. Don't be surprised to be met with a show of tears.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Your interest in the material things of life may backfire early in the day. Join family for fun in the evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Make this a Saturday for indulging children in their whims -- so long as doing do does not endanger anyone. Show affection.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Regardless of how emotionally uptight you may feel, put up a cool and calm facade. Restrain your anger.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Satisfy another's curiosity regarding academic questions. Where personal matters are concerned, keep your own secrets just that -- secret.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your undoubted loyalty to the cause in which you are engaged brings you advancement sooner than you had thought possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Show a serius attitude toward a child's difficulty. There is no time like the present for allowing the young to try their wings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Efficiency and reliability are essential to the success of your newest enterprise. Don't try to skip any phase of the project.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The idea you have of your own dignity may be erroneous. Make an effort to see yourself as others see you -- even if it hurts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The support you lend to a loved one's career may not be appreciated at the moment. The future should show that you were right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Give your wholehearted energy to a project instituted by younger family members. These are days for firming up family relationships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — For women, excellence in homemaking really pays off today. For men, appreciation of homemaking does the same. Complement -- and compliment -- each other.

Steelers vs. Raiders tops NFL schedule

[UPI] — The bad blood usually reserved for December will flow early this season.

The Pittsburgh Steelers and the Oakland Raiders, who have waged some of the epic battles in National Football League playoff competition, get to tangle early as the 1976 season starts Sunday.

The Steelers are opening their bid for an unprecedented third straight super bowl title while the Raiders are looking for their fifth straight American Conference Western Division Championship. Pittsburgh is a three-point favorite.

The clubs last met in the bitter cold of Pittsburgh's Three Rivers stadium last January, with the Steelers winning 16-10 for the AFC title.

Both clubs feel they have improved this season. Terry Bradshaw was superb in leading the Steelers to a 41-6 romp past the New York Jets in the final exhibition game last week, hitting 17-of-20 passes for 245 yards and two touchdowns.

The rest of the American Conference schedule Sunday has Baltimore at New England, Denver at Cincinnati, the New York Jets at Cleveland, San Diego at Kansas City and Tampa Bay at Houston. In the NFC, Detroit is at Chicago, Los Angeles at Atlanta, Minnesota at New Orleans, the New York Giants at Washington, Philadelphia at Dallas, St. Louis at Seattle and San Francisco at Green Bay. Miami is at Buffalo in the first nationally televised Monday night game.

Sunday marks the official debut of the NFL's two new franchises, Tampa Bay and Seattle. John McKay heads the Tampa Club and Jack Patera is in charge of the Seahawks.

Five other coaches also will be making their debuts Sunday — Hank Stram at New Orleans, Lou Holtz with the Jets, Dick Vermeil in Philadelphia, Bill Johnson for Cleveland and Monte Clark at San Francisco.

In late developments Thursday, the attorney for Jim "Yazoo" Smith said that a federal judge's ruling striking down the NFL's college player draft could lead to successful lawsuits by every player drafted in the past four years.

U.S. District Court judge William B. Bryant ruled Wednesday that Smith, Washington's No. 1 draft pick in 1967, was entitled to treble damages totalling $276,600 from the league and the Redskins, plus court costs and legal fees.

Bryant called the NFL draft-system an outright refusal to deal with college stars chosen by the 28 pro teams, and therefore a "most pernicious" antitrust violation.

"Any player drafted in the last four years has a potential lawsuit if he has a grievance," said Smith's attorney, Stewart H. Johnson of Washington.

The statute of limitations would preclude suits from players drafted earlier, he said.

Also, running back Altie Taylor, traded to Houston last month, failed his physical with the Oilers and was returned to Detroit.

Football officials skeptical following decision on draft

[UPI] — While most National Football League officials adopted a wait-and-see attitude toward Wednesday's monumental court decision striking down the college player draft, the attorney for Jim "Yazoo" Smith said it could lead to successful lawsuits by every player drafted in the past four years.

U.S. District Court judge William B. Bryant ruled Wednesday that Smith, the Washington Redskin's No. 1 draft pick in 1967, was entitled to treble damages totalling $276,600 from the NFL and the Redskins, plus court costs and legal fees. He called the NFL draft system an outright refusal to deal with college stars chosen by the 28 pro teams, and therefore a "most pernicious" antitrust violation.

"Any player drafted in the last four years has a potential lawsuit if he has a grievance," said Smith's attorney, Steward H. Johnson of Washington.

The statute of limitations would preclude suits from players drafted earlier, he said.

Johnson said he also believes veterans involved in this year's expansion draft by the new Seattle and Tampa Bay teams could probably bring a successful suit, and that the NFL players association, if it desires, could obtain an injunction to preclude any future league drafts.

The NFL office in New York would not comment until its lawyers studied the judge's decision and Tampa owner Hugh Culverhouse was one of the few NFL people to speak out openly against the decision.

"I am surprised that the judge went beyond the awarding of damages," said Culverhouse, a lawyer. "The basic issue, as I understood it, was whether Smith sustained injuries while playing for the Redskins. The legality of the draft was not involved. "Furthermore, all of our players drafted are under contracts now. The one way it could have an affect now would be in the trading of future draft picks for live players."

Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, felt the decision could help Seattle problems in negotiating a new contract.

"Maybe now the NFL owners will understand they are living in the past and that they must now work with us to build a national football league for the future," Garvey said.

"One of the reasons we rejected or tabled the recent contract proposal by the league was that it contained a provision that we had to accept a common draft. A lot of us felt that was illegal. Now that the court says it is illegal per se, any compensation plan is not legal. This puts us back to square one in the negotiations. Now we may need some outside help.

"Personally, I'm in favor of a draft along the lines of basketball, where there are certain provisions for the team to meet with the player drafted. I just hope that now instead of trying to beat the union, the league will sit down with us and work toward getting a contract.

Denver Coach John Ralston said he was stunned by the decision.

"I'm sure it will be appealed," he said. "On such legal decisions, the league office usually makes statements. Otherwise there would be 28 different comments. Anyway, we're in more or less an isolated town to comment so we'll just have to wait for some specific direction from the league office.

"But it is somewhat of a setback. You can never tell about such legal cases. The Kapp decision went one way and someone else says it's another way."

"It's meaningless to comment until we see the decision," said Seattle General Manager John Thompson, the former head of the NFL management council, the league's bargaining group. "I would assume the league would file an appeal."

Ex-mentor Brown stunned by court

CINCINNATI [UPI] — "This will destroy the structure of all sports," Cincinnati Bengals General Manager Paul Brown complained Thursday about a federal judge declaring the NFL's collegiate draft illegal.

"We're asked by labor laws to collectively bargain and then we're sued by the people with whom we bargain", said Brown. "What will happen if this continues is that there will be no sports as we know them.

"Some of the clubs having financial troubles now will just say 'that's it,' and fold their tents. Isn't it something that one judge in Washington can decide something is illegal after 40 years of existence."

U.S. District Court judge William B. Bryant ruled Wednesday in the case of former player James "Yazoo" Smith that the draft is an antitrust violation.

"Does that also mean all sports' drafts are illegal? wondered Brown, who also figured legal appeals will mean "four or five more years of litigation."

"Because of the unique aspects of sports, and I'm not just talking about football, I would guess that a bill in Congress will have to ultimately decide the issue," he said.

Brown, 68, who retired as a head coach this year after compiling the best record in the history of football over 41 seasons, defended the draft.

"The reason for the draft is to try to produce some competitive balance," he said. "These judges don't understand this. (Dallas Cowboys general manager) Tex Schramm was right in saying this is a unique situation. In all honesty, I must say I don't know how something in effect all these years can be termed bad by one judge.

"Who is Yazoo Smith, anyway?" added Brown.

Smith is a former Oregon star who was the No. 1 draft pick of the Washington Redskins in 1967. A broken neck in the final game of his rookie season ended his career. He filed his lawsuit in 1969.

'Thinking man' Nelson gains job as Milwaukee assistant

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — Don Nelson, the "thinking man's basketball player," is now the assitant coach of the Milwaukee Bucks. And it doesn't figure that the 36-year-old Nelson is going to change his ways much in shifting from playing to coaching.

Nelson joins the Bucks after 14 years in the National Basketball Association including the last 11 seasons with the Boston Celtics when he played a big part in helping Boston to five NBA championships, the last coming just a few months ago.

Former Boston Coach Red Auerbach has described Nelson — a 6-ffot-6 forward who scored 10,898 points and was a scrappy, tough competitor — as "a thinking man's basketball player." He has said that "he'll be a helluva coach if he decides to try it."

"I took my time in accepting this job," said Nelson, who on Tuesday was given a two-year job by the Milwaukee Bucks as No. 2 man to Coach Larry Costello. "Larry wanted to investigate me and I wanted to investigate him.

"We sat down and I had some appprehensions about the job...and he probably did about me, too. But I thought our meetings early in the summer were good."

After those get-togethers he thought it over and decided the job was the one he wanted. Especially after he considered perhaps his biggest "apprehension" — the reputation Costello has as a pattern offese coach with a playbook as big as the Encyclopedia Britannia.

teams as Bowling Green, Kent State, Miami of Ohio, and Ball State. Last year the Rockets were 5-6, but won four of their last five games. They lost just two defensive starters and one offensive starter to graduation.

That one offensive starter was a big one, however. All-American quarterback Gene Swick, Toledo's leader a year ago and now with the Cleveland Browns, helds the NCAA record for total career yardage (passing and rushing), a record formerly held by Jim Plunkett. The Rockets relied on Swick's passing for their offense a year ago, so there will be some changes this year.

Jeff Hepinstall, Toledo's leading pass receiver in 1975, has taken over the starting quarterback spot. Hopinstall pulled a hamstring the first day of practice but will be ready Saturday. Injuries have left the backup duties to a freshman, Bob Mitchell.

With Swick providing 70 per cent of last year's offense, the Rockets scored a lot of points, but gave up even more. This year's squad reputedly has a more balanced offensive attack as well as a stronger defense.

According to MacPherson, the Toledo offense will consist primarily of an I-formation set-up, with some roll-outs, options, and mainly drop-back passing.

Top receiver Scott Resseguie will be Hepinstall's primary target tomorrow, along with flanker Tozere Franklin. In the backfield will be fullback Dave Wright and tailbacks Irv Kenerly and Kevin Murphy.

The Rockets are coached by Jack Murphy, who took over in 1971 in the midst of a 35-game winning streak. Since then, Toledo has had records of 6-5, 3-8, 6-5, and 5-6.

Street and Smith pick the Minutemen; others pick Toledo by a few points. One thing's for sure — you'll never get a prediction out of Dick MacPherson.

UMass shoots at Rockets

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The Street and Smith Official Football Yearbook makes two predictions about this year's UMass football team. First, the Minutemen are favored over Toledo in tomorrow's opening game. And second, the Minutemen are predicted to go on to a 6-3-1 season.

UMass head coach Dick MacPherson would be quite happy if his squad made the first prophecy come true, but disappointed if his team didn't do better than 6-3-1 this season.

This year's schedule is tougher, than 1975, and guys like McAleney, Little, Deane, and Harriman are gone from last year's 8-2 squad, but the coach still thinks he can match or approach last year's performance.

MacPherson still isn't sure if his team is ready for tomorrow's game (1:00, Alumni Stadium, 12:50, WMUA). "I thought they were ready after Tuesday's practice; Wednesday I wasn't so sure," said the coach.

MacPherson is sure about who is going to be starting in Saturday's game, and that's the reason for any optimism he might show.

Offensively, everything will revolve around senior quarterback and co-captain Brian McNally, last year's first team all-Yankee Conference QB. While his passing statistics were only fair last year (41 for 101, .406), McNally is strong in leadership and conducting the running game.

In the backfield with McNally will be last year's leading rusher, Rich Jessamy, and fullback Bill Coleman. Jessamy averaged 5.8 yards a carry last season in 108 carries, and was selected to the first team all-YanCon squad. Coleman saw less action than Jessamy last year, but averaged 5.5 yards on 41 carries. Also look for John Romboli and Dennis Dent to fill in.

The receiver positions are a little thin for the Minutemen. John Gladchuk (13 catches for 154 yards last year) has the flanker position, and Bob Zawada, reserve last year, has the split end job. John Van Buren moved to receiver to start this year, but is not back at his defensive halfback slot. Moses Williams, hampered with injuries a year ago, will start at tight end.

Another inexperienced area for the Minutemen is the offensive line. Only center Dave Wiliamson started consistently last season. Seniors Jeff Lauder and Dennis Barbato will start at tackle; Gerry Greene and Bruce Kimball will handle the guard duties.

The defense, which was so strong last year and looked to be almost as good this year, is temporarily hurting. Rover Steve Telander has a bad knee injury and will be out indefinitely. Linebacker John Toner severely sprained his ankle in the Dartmouth scrimmage and is out for this week. Peter McCarthy and Todd Holt are coming off knee injuries and are "hopeful" for tomorrow, according to MacPherson.

Sophomore Joe McLaughlin will take Tonor's position against Toledo. Jack Tucker, a transfer from West Point, and Craig Creamer, who was impressive as a sub last year, will fight for Telander's spot.

Other defensive starters against the Rockets will be John Willis and Dennis Fenton at the ends, Steve Ciccolini at nose guard, John McDonald and Joe Bingham sharing the right rover duties, McCarthy at left linebacker, Holt and Dave Croasdale at the corners, and Greg Sprout and Ron Harris at the safety positions.

Harris will take Ed McAleney's place as the leader of the defense. The Framingham senior has been an all-YanCon safety for the past two years, and led the squad with five interceptions last year.

Tomorrow's opponent comes from the Division I Mid-Amiercan conference, which features such

Toledo vs. UMass: Bet the line

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

As with all football games, the key in the Toledo game here Saturday will be the play of the lines. And the defensive line of UMass will have a key job when it lines up against the big Toledo line.

"We have to stop their power game, their option game, and their roll out game," said head football coach Dick MacPherson in analyzing the key matchups in the game. "We also have to move the ball on the ground and in the air."

MacPherson prefers not to concentrate on individual matchups, but rather on the team concept. But he does not ignore outstanding individuals on the opposing team.

"If they (Toledo) still had Swick (Gene, All-American last year) we'd have to concentrate on him. With all due respect to this Toledo team, he (Swick) had more offense then they have now," MacPherson said.

Thus, while Toledo does not have an individual like Swick, they do have a good team and the play of both the offensive and defensive lines will be important.

On offense, the Rockets will try three things: the power game, the option game, and the roll-out game. "Toledo will try one thing, then try another. They'll go with the thing that works," MacPherson said.

The Rockets have experience up the middle as center Dave Karikas started all last year as a sophmore, and has two seniors starting at guard, Matt Lindsay at right and Frank Hymore at left. Lindsay is also one of the captains on the team. One of the tri-captains Keith Young, and a guard had to quit football due to an arm injury.

They will line up against Minutemen Steve Ciccolini at nose guard, and Dennis Fenton and John Willis at defensive ends. Joe McLaughlin and Peter McCarty at inside linebacker will have to deal primarily with the inside game, while the total defense is involved in trying to stop the option game and roll-out game.

On offense, the pressure is on the line to block equally well on both passing and running situations. "If the offense has problems moving the ball in the air, we're in trouble. We have to move the ball on both (ground and air) or they'll gang up on us," MacPherson said.

The offensive line is not the only thing that makes the unit go, but if the line is controlling the opposing line, it makes execution much easier.

A good thing to watch is each offensive line. If each unit controls the line of scrimmage, then there'll probably be a lot of points scored. So it's up to the Minutemen offensive line to move the Rockets will be the defensive corps has to hold their ground against Toledo.

WMUA

UMass football kicks off another campaign tomorrow and WMUA will be there all season to bring you the action. Bob Paquette, Judy Van Handle, and Charlie Holmes call the plays Saturday afternoon beginning at 12:50 as the Minutemen take on the Rockets of Toledo over the voice of UMass sports, WMUA, 91.1 FM in Amherst.

New NE Bypass considered

By BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Although university officials were disappointed last May when plans to permanently close North Pleasant Street were thwarted, they still hope to build at least a part of the proposed bypass.

The Northeast Bypass, the proposed three and one-half mile route that would have run from southeast Amherst east and north of the UMass campus to connect with Rte. 116, was rejected at the Amherst Town Meeting in May following strong last-minute opposition to the project.

Nevertheless, university planners are apparently still hoping to build at least the part of the bypass they call the Northwest Road, also referred to as the "Northwest Passage".

The Northwest Road, designed to detour traffic from North Pleasant Street, actually involves the construction of two roads.

One road would connect Rte. 116 with North Pleasant Street just above the School of Education. The second road would extend Commonwealth Avenue north thru the connector into the largely student populated housing complexes to the north.

The Northwest Road would, if constructed, be paid for by the Massachusetts Department of Public Works as would be the case with the Northeast Bypass.

The Northwest Road is not the only part of the defeated Northeast Bypass that may be brought before Amherst Town Meeting again.

Other options discussed over the summer include building a connector between East Pleasant Street on the east of campus and North Pleasant Street above the School of Education.

Another option would extend the road in the second option further east to North East Street.

None of the options, in their present forms, call for the closing of North Pleasant Street.

Whether or not these proposals surface in the form of warrant articles at this October's Amherst Town Meeting is still open to speculation.

The University administration was expected to present any or all of these options at this fall's town meeting. However, there are now indications that the university may hold off on any new proposals, at least until next year.

Gerald Grady, University Community Relations Coordinator, said yesterday the university will decide on what to do by the middle of this week.

"There are a lot of facts to be considered," he said.

Grady, who would present the proposals at the town meeting if the university decided to submit them, said the meeting this fall is already overburdened with such issues as rent control and farmland development rights.

In addition, he said statistics concerning commuter traffic to and from campus last spring and this fall now are going through a computer run and may not be in presentable form by the October meeting.

"Mr. Minear is going to want facts," he said, "and we're going to try to satisfy everybody." Richard H. Minear, a UMass history professor and North American resident, was a vehement opponent to the bypass last spring.

The university initiated bypass plans in the late 1960's when it approached the town of Amherst with the idea of closing off North Pleasant Street to follow through on its concept of a "pedestrian core" campus.

At this time administrators claimed that N. Pleasant St. was a safety hazard to thousands of people at UMass who cross the road daily.

The bypass project grew until this year.

Wood, Bromery in Japan; meet Hokkaido professors

Chris Bourne

UMass President Robert C. Wood

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

Last Friday UMass President Robert C. Wood and Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery embarked on a two week gift-bearing mission to the land-of-the-rising-sun.

The two administrators and John Maki of the UMass political science department, will meet with Japanese educators at Hokkaido University for three days (September 14 - 16) in celebration of the century-old educational exchange program between the two schools.

The party will present a number of gifts, sign a pact encouraging the continued relationship between the two universities, and receive honorary doctoral degrees from Hokkaido.

The relationship between the two schools goes back to 1876 when William S. Clark, then president of Massachusetts Agricultural College (now UMass-Amherst), went to Hokkaido at the invitation of the Japanese government to help establish an agricultural college there.

Clark eventually returned to America, but one of his students, W.P. Brooks, later became president of Sapporo Agricultural College (now Hokkaido University) where he furthered Clark's ideas.

Hokkaido is Japan's northernmost island, a land of changing climate, with rugged mountains and volcanic masses, that has become the nation's leading agricultural region.

During the war years ties with Hokkaido were broken, but in 1958 UMass was awarded an Aid for International Development Grant which went toward re-establishing the relationship.

A small wooden chest with a bust of Clark carved on its front has been prepared by R. Bruce Hoadley, professor of wood technology, and several students, as a gift to the Japanese.

The chest is made from pieces of the old Camperdown Elm which, until recently, stood on the site of Clark's grave in the Amherst cemetary, a tree that was originally planted by the Japanese when Clark died. When the tree died a victim of Dutch Elm disease recently, good cuttings were preserved and it was replaced with a Japanese Cherry Tree.

Contained in the chest, also gifts, will be several display pieces of wood from the old elm, as well as copies of letters written by President Clark while in Japan to members of his family, and other documentary materials.

The documents have been prepared by Katherine Emerson, archivist in the University library.

Along with the chest and its contents, Bromery will present a short documentary film made last spring at ceremonies commemorating the centennial of Clark's voyage to Japan. The film shows Ambassador Noboyuki Nakashima, consul general of Japan at New York, placing a wreath on Clark's grave.

Bromery will also present, along with the film, a large color picture of the Amherst campus.

The prty will deliver on behalf of the Alumni Association here, a gift of $1000 to the Hokkaido alumni, to encourage the interchange between students of both universities.

Seeds of trees in the Amherst area have been collected by Mary Maki, chairperson of the committee that compiled Trees in Amherst, a book of local historical horticulture, and Joseph Larson, professor of forestry and wildlife management, for planting in the botanical garden at Hokkaido University.

The last day of celebration will include a tree planting ceremony.

While in Japan Professor Maki will deliver two lectures, one on Clark, and another to the Hokkaido University Faculty of Law.

All expenses for the trip are being paid by the Japanese government.

Palm up your room

By KATHY MOORE
Collegian Staff

If your room consists solely of four drab cinderblock walls, lacking any intriguing or unusual commodities, perhaps the University's second annual Trophical Plant Sale, Tuesday through Thursday in the Student Union Ballroom, is the answer to your problem.

Over 3,000 extraordinary tropical plants, including 20 exotic varieties, are being shipped from Miami, Florida for the event. The event is being sponsored by the Greek Council primarliy as a service project for the University.

The plants were purchased for a nominal fee since they were acquired by volume and there were no "middle men" involved. Consequently, sale prices on the plants have been lowered substantially (ranging from $2 to $30) increasing their availability for all types of plant lovers.

As in the past, each plant soid will be accompanied by a free booklet explaining in full detail and simple vocabulary how to take care of that particular plant.

Activities Chairperson Norman Schmidt said "There was a remarkable turnout at last year's plant sale because students realized it was a great way to beautify their dorm rooms inexpensively.

He added, "It was probably the biggest and most unusual plant sale UMass has ever seen."

They will be on sale Tuesday and Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Canine poisonings unsolved

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"It could be a jogger, it could be somebody on a bicycle, it could be anybody," said Wallace Chevalier, Belchertown Dog Officer, of the recent 21 dog poisonings that have occurred in the Belchertown-Granby area in the past week.

Chevalier is heading up the investigation into these killings and said "We have a few leads, but nothing definite yet."

One possible clue is that immediately following the rash of dog killings in Belchertown last spring, Chevalier learned that there were 14 dog poisonings in Bristol, Rhode Island, during one week, using the same poison.

Officer Paul Austin of the Belchertown Police Department said there were two main areas in Belchertown; one in the South End, South Washington Street, South Street vicinity. The other on the Granby line near Stevins Street, Bay Road, and Daniels Square.

Granby Dog Officer Kathleen Lukasik confirmed that poisonings in her town have occurred in the Bachelor Street, School Street vicinity running into Stevins Street in Belchertown.

Dr. Frederick G. Ruder Jr., a veterianarian in Amherst, who last Friday treated and saved two poisoned dogs from Belchertown with injections of sodium pentobarbital said the poison, endosulfan thiodan, gets into the bloodstream and, over a period of one to two hours, robs it of oxygen, affecting the nervous system and producing the characteristic convulsions.

Constance Stockard, manager of the Belchertown branch of Hampshire National Bank, said the reward fund created last spring is still existent.

People who want to donate to this fund should make checks payable to Reward Fund at the bank. Also, residents in Belchertown have set up a $100 reward for information leading to the arrest of the killer.

Chevalier has been in contact with the FMC Corporation in Lockport, New York, makers of the endosulfan. He learned that Dr. Armand Patula, chemist at FMC, will be working with Dr. Douglas N. Sterns of the UMass Department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences to develop an antidote that can be used in the home.

FMC has also instructed their Vermont representative to do all he can to help in the research.

Last spring 33 dogs and two cats were poisoned in the Belchertown area.

Last spring only three of the 33 dogs poisoned survived. Two were treated by veternarians.

Endosulfan is a pesticide which can be bought through farm stores and agricultural supply houses. A 50 pound bag of endosulfan sells for about $12.

Dr. Ruder compared endosulfan's effects to strychnine, which require similar treatment.

Chevalier theorized that the poisoner could be a winter resident of the area who vacations in Bristol, R.I.

The initial group of poisoned dogs were not bound by leashes.

The latest poisoned were mostly chained or penned.

Continuing Ed offers series of workshops

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

The Division of Continuing Education is offering 50 credit free workshops this fall to full or part time students or interested area residents.

Merilee Neunder, director of the program, says workshops sometimes involve hobbies, such as folk guitar or basic photography, or they could help develop a profession, such as a course being offered that helps prepare a person for a Real Estate brokers license exam.

Among the workshops are Sign Language and Finger Spelling, Writing Well, Grantsmanship, assertiveness training, and foreign languages.

How-to workshops include Colonial Restoration and interior decorating ideas, pottery, Alternative Energy: methane gas from waste, circus arts, hang gliding, leadership theory and practice, progressive parenthood and many others.

"We try to arrange something for every suggestion we get," says Neunder.

Neunder, who has been with Continuing Ed since 1973, says the idea of non-credit courses in the Division of Continuing Education began a few years ago when people merely expressed an interest in taking courses in such areas as yoga, ballet, and other fields, not necessarily for credit.

Neunder stresses that because the workshops are non-credit, anyone can take them. Neither a high school degree or enrollment in the University is necessary.

"Our statistics indicate that about eighty per cent of our students are working people, although more and more full time students are becoming involved."

"Instructors are faculty members, graduate students, people from the outside, or other UMass staff people," explained Neunder.

Fees are usually around 40 or 50 dollars, although they could be higher or lower. The students pay only the cost of the instructor and any equipment.

Mrs. Neunder also says that she works with rather than against other workshops projects in the area, such as the Amherst Adult Education Program and the Everywoman's Center.

Workshops for the fall begin Sept. 27. Schedules vary and most classes meet on week nights, some on Saturday.

Mail registration is due Sept. 17. In-person registration will thereafter be accepted at the Continuing Education Records and Registration Office at Hills House.

Persons 65 years of age and over are welcome on a space available basis.

Registration information is available by calling 545-3653. Course content information can be acquired by calling 545-3410.

A complete listing of the fifty courses is available by writing to Catalog Request, P.O. Box 835, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Three arrested by police for robbery in Hadley

By BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Three UMass students were charged Saturday by Massachusetts state police with robbing a Hadley store of about $500.

State police at the Northampton sub-station said Leon J. Thomas Jr., 19, Mark B. Wimbish, 19, and Keith B. Dixson, 20, all of Springfield, were arrested Saturday in connection with the robbery of a Cumberland Farms store on Rte. 9 at 2:15 p.m.

State police said the students were picked up a short time later on the UMass campus by University police. When contacted yesterday, a spokesperson for the UMass Dept. of Public Safety refused comment.

All three were charged with unarmed robbery, assault and battery, and larceny over $100, state police said.

Police said there was also a possibility of Thomas being charged with possession of a dangerous weapon. Reportedly nunchucks, a martial arts implement, was found by University police upon apprehension of the suspects.

According to the UMass student directory, Wimbish and Dixson live in Thoreau while Thomas is listed as living in Mackimmie.

Accident Reported

A two-car accident on North Pleasant street at 1 a.m. Saturday morning sent one person to Cooley-Dickinson hospital with minor injuries.

Guttenberg leaves UMass; Auster acting replacement

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Annette Guttenberg, who resigned as speaker of the undergraduate student senate last Wednesday, has left the University, the Collegian learned yesterday.

Karl Allen, Chairperson of the Senate's Government Affairs Committee, said Guttenberg took a plane to her parent's home in Chicago Thursday afternoon.

She reportedly left a letter appointing Adam Auster as acting-speaker until elections are held in two weeks. Auster, who is the Registrar of Student Organizations, could not be reached for confirmation.

Guttenberg resigned last Wednesday, citing lack of cooperation and political in-fighting within the Senate.

Her resignation was to go into effect after the election of a new Speaker in two weeks. However, Allen said she will be available to the Senate until the election.

Allen said, "She will be missed. As the only woman officer she had a different perspective. I don't know if the Senate would have followed affirmative action guidelines as quickly and easily if she hadn't been here."

Guttenberg, a senior psychology major, was speaker of the senate since March.

★New NE Bypass plans

Bids for construction of the Bypass were set to go out this summer but the town rescinded its permission at the May meeting.

Opposition came from Marks Meadow School parents whose children would have to cross the bypass daily on their way to school, North Amherst residents concerned with the physical separation of North Amherst from the rest of Amherst by the bypass.

University students from the Student Senate, The Commuter Collective, and the Sylvan Area Government also voiced opposition.

Possibly the most vocal individual in opposition to the bypass was Minear who besides sponsoring three of the four warrant articles urging reconsideration of the bypass on the town warrant last spring, authored a study contradicting a project consultant's report on the bypass and was involved in the debate that ensued.

Minear is presently questioning the intent of the $1.02 million capital outlay appropriation for road and safety improvements on the UMass campus that was recently cleared by the House Ways and Means Committee.

University officials have indicated the funds are for improved lighting and roadwork on roads including Commonwealth Avenue, Governor's Drive and Stockbridge Road.

These same roads were included in university plans to campus adaptations to various aspects of the Northeast Bypass.

Minear said recently that there is confusion as to whether or not the Capital Outlay request was properly examined by a Faculty Senate committee. He claims it was not.

Hijackers' bombs were fakes

NEW YORK [AP] — The hijackers who took a U.S. jetliner on a 6,000-mile hopscotch journey to Paris were unarmed and the bombs they threatened to explode turned out to be fakes made of modeling clay and cotton-like fluff, French authorities and passengers said yesterday.

The 53 hostages were released unhurt at 8 a.m. Paris time 2 a.m. EDT after the Croatian nationalists yielded to a French ultimatum to surrender. The hijackers were flown to New York to face air piracy and murder charges while most of the freed hostages returned to Chicago or New York.

One passenger, Robert Metzger, recalled in Chicago that as the 30-hour hijacking ended, "one of the hijackers, the one with a moustache, took this thing we thought was a bomb — it was like cotton dowels or tubes — and he ripped it up. And there was just fluff inside."

"Then he turned to us with a big smile and said, 'that's show biz'," added Metzger, 35, of New York.

But the hijackers, while they had control of the Boeing 727, gave authorities instructions that led to a real bomb in a locker at Grand Central Station in New York City. The bomb exploded as officers tried to disarm it, killing one policeman and injuring three others.

The surprise of the entire episode was the discovery that the hijackers were unarmed.

During the hijack, they had been reported armed with handguns and grenades. Two of them were wired with what they claimed were explosives. The body bombs turned out to be modeling clay.

The hijackers told their hostages that they brought weapons aboard the plane wrapped in heavy plastic. But French police and passengers said they had no guns or weapons.

In New York, a spokesman for the FBI said Sunday night that "to my knowledge there were no guns recovered."

The prisoners, four men and a woman who propaganda hijack across the Atlantic championed the cause of Croatian independence from Yugoslavia, arrived in New York under heavy federal and city police security.

Before leaving Paris, the hijackers said they had accomplished their purpose: publicity for their cause. "We are proud of what we did," one added.

The prisoners' arrival at Kennedy Airport was preceded by another jet carrying 14 of their freed hostages.

One of them, the flight engineer of the hijacked Trans World Airlines plane, touched off a scare when he came off the plane carrying a cooking pot authorities said resembled the bomb-in-a-pot device that blew up when police tried to disarm it Friday night shortly after the hijack began.

The flight engineer said one of the hijackers gave him the smaller pot as a souvenir.

A bomb squad removed the pot, and its contents turned out to be a putty-like substance. "It was a dud," a police spokesman said.

Residency laws under study

LOWELL, Mass. [UPI] — State residency requirements is a subject under serious debate at the University of Lowell.

The board of trustees, which already adopted one residency requirement earlier this month, is thinking of starting another within the next month.

The established requirement specifies that persons hired at the university after Sept. 1 reside in Massachusetts. The proposed rule would deny promotions to any teachers living out-of-state.

Many faculty members live in New Hampshire, just two miles away.

"You bet your boots we have a residency requirement," said Atty. Richard Donahue, one of 17 authors of the law, Saturday. "If Massachusetts is good enough to work in, it's good enough to live in."

But Dr. Oliver Ford, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, feels the requirements make no sense.

"They are irrelevant," said Ford. "They have nothing to do with teaching or with the faculty's contribution to the community."

Canoers brave storm, find safe haven

[Editor's Note] Duke Simoneau, 22, is a UMass junior [Journalism-Natural Resources] on internship for a year. He and Stan Sroka, a 23-year-old Chicopee Falls man, are canoeing across the United States as part of Duke's internship.

They left Springfield on May 26, and expect to reach Portland, Oregon in the summer of 1977. Old Town Canoe Company donated the use of a 17-foot ABS plastic canoe for the expedition.

Duke, a Collegian staff reporter, will be relating his adventures weekly in the Collegian as he canoes across the United States.

Stan's decision to paddle at night from Owensboro, Ky. to Evansville Ind., despite poor visibility and my protests, almost proved disasterous.

We only had a few hundred yards visibility before the mists drew the curtain completely. Through the fog, on the flat plains of Indians, we saw what we thought was heat lightening. There was no thunder to accompany the flashes. What we didn't realize is that the table-flat land makes for slightly different weather than in New England.

The reason we heard no thunder is that the lightening was too far away. As the storm rolled closer, we saw our error. There were no friendly docks to hide at this stretch of river.... only trees. As the wind swept over us, we ducked under a willow tree, lashed "Joie" to a limb, and pulled a tarp over ourselves and the gear.

All hell broke loose. Wind driven rain pelted the tarp, lightening crashed nearby.

Several bolts hit so close that I honestly wondered if they hadn't hit the other end. Even through the black vinal tarp, they were blinding.

We hid there about two hours. After the torrent raged into Kentucky, we pushed on. After another few hours of paddling, Captain Stan pulled us over and decided we needed some sleep.

I told him I wouldn't paddle at night anymore without good visibility. He knew I wasn't kidding. I didn't sign on for suicide.

We made Evansville easily the next day. Pulling into a sheltered marina with 200 boats Stan declared a three day weekend. Besides taking unfair advantage of a couple "all you can eat" smorgasbords, we straightened our gear out, accepted some marina hospitality, and toured a floating mansion.

"Laura", a 72 foot reconverted tow boat, hails out of the Inland Marina. Charlie Roberts, a retired plastics manufacturer and his wife Betty have called her decks home for four years.

Charlie always wanted to live on the river. For many years, he had fished and played on the Ohio, and several years ago seriously started looking for a tow boat to convert into a houseboat. He found the Laura working the upper Mississippi. She had been built in the 1920's as a ferry, then sold and made into a pleasure boat. Charlie said the history gets vague, but she was eventually sold to Capt. Lee Osborne, an Iowa contractor.

It was Captain Lee who christened the boat "Laura" (she had been the Rob Roy—one of the few vessels named after a man.) after his granddaughter. Roberts left the name because of the paperwork involved in changing a large ship's name.

"Besides," said Charlie, "All our boats have been named Bettye Bug" after my wife. But even she says that's too frivolous a name for such a grand vessel."

Grand is truely the word for "Laura". Deep, rich wood paneling lines the office, pilot house, and large living room. Mrs. Roberts finished the inside with what she calls "early Goodwill", a collection of antiques and one of a kind furniture she has picked up at flea markets, thrift shops and almost anywhere. She says she avoided the obvious temptation to try and be nautical in her decor because "just by being a boat she was nautical enough". Asked to guess what it would cost to replace "Laura", Roberts conservatively guesses a quarter of a million dollars.

Next week — Racism still flourishes in the south.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Connecticut in black

NEW HAVEN, Conn. [UPI] — Gov. Ella T. Grasso will use Connecticut's $34.7 million surplus for the fiscal year that ended in June to balance this year's budget, The New Haven Register said yesterday it had learned.

The newspaper said an administrative source had said Ms. Grasso would use the money to pay debts and interest, which would free an equal amount to either cut taxes or increase spending.

The state finished the year June 30 with a $34.7 million surplus — only eight months after Ms. Grasso projected an $80 million credit.

In response to the situation, she instituted an austerity program including the laying off of 500 state workers, many who have since been rehired.

She claims it was her program that turned the budget situation around, but critics contend the threat of a deficit never existed and she only created the problem so she could claim the credit when the state finished in the black.

It's downright...acceptable

BOSTON [AP] Police Commissioner Robert deGrazia says the courts, especially those in South Boston, are so lenient that it is becoming socially acceptable to assault police officers.

The commissioner said in an interview broadcast yesterday that the courts refuse to help the police in their effort to stop school-related racial violence.

Since September, 1974, Boston police have had nearly 900 arrests for offenses stemming from trouble involving the city's newly integrated school system, he said. And so far, no one has gone to jail.

"As long as the cases are in the district courts, we will have the same type of reaction," deGrazia said.

"I think it's unfair to the young people trying to go to school, and it's certainly unfair to the Boston police officers who have to confront the people who the judges just let loose."

The commissioner commented in an interview on WEEI's Bay State Forum program.

...due to a lack of (yawn) interest

HARTFORD, Conn. [AP] — Hartford's environmental committee, created more than four years ago by a unanimous city council vote, should be disbanded for lack of interest, Mayor George Athanson says.

"I tried to call a couple of meetings. However, no one came," Athanson explains.

The panel has never held a meeting and has no budget or staff.

In fact, it has no members. The two-year terms of the 10 persons appointed by Athanson have expired.

He says it's tough to find citizens willing to serve for free and adds there's probably less interest in the environment now than several years ago, although environmental problems have increased.

The Rain King cameth

LONDON [UPI] — The third night in a row of steady rain was "only a drop in the ocean" needed to ease Britain's worst drought in 400 years, authorities said yesterday.

Despite the downpour — the northeast of England had its worst storms in 24 years yesterday — 12 to 14 million Britons face new restrictions on water use soon. Six towns in Devon will have all home water mains switched off this week.

A little boy drowned imitating his mother's water-saving methods; Britain's "drought minister" talked of a $90 million plan to move water around the country; and the drought bit hard into a national rose show, amateur soccer matches and even a show of tropical fish.

The National Water Council kept up its blanket advertising campaign to persuade people to save water, rain or no rain. "We need a month of continuous rain like that we've had these past few nights to do any good," a council spokesman said.

Storms in the northeast dumped up to four inches of rain in the past 24 hours, and winds blew up to 90 miles per hour. Streets in Stokesley were flooded five feet deep.

N.H. teacher strike continues

MANCHESTER, N.H. [UPI] — The 18,000 public school students in New Hampshire's largest city have spent another weekend of an extended summer vacation with little hope a teachers' strike would be settled by today.

Striking teachers were scheduled to meet last night to decide whether to honor a non-legally binding cease and desist order issued last Thursday by the Public Employe Labor Relations Board.

The meeting was called by the Manchester Education Association, which represents the 940 striking teachers. Union sources indicated teachers would defy the order and return to the picket lines Monday.

New Bedford new oil base?

BOSTON [AP] — Thirty-five business and civic leaders left for Louisiana yesterday for a series of meetings to promote New Bedford as a home for an off-shore oil industry.

The group, led by New Bedford Mayor John Markey, planned six days of meetings to try to persuade oil companies to base their future operations in the southeastern Massachusetts city.

The Atlantic has been long an important part of New Bedford's livelihood. But until now, the ocean industries have been whaling and fishing.

However, the offshore seabed was recently surveyed as a possible oil drilling site. The results of that exploration, undertaken by a consortium of companies, have not been released, but the Interior Department plans to offer offshore tracts for lease next year.

New racial violence begins, three more coloreds arrested

CAPE TOWN, South Africa [UPI] — Rioters hurled rocks at white-owned shops and motorists yesterday and whites killed two coloreds in new racial violence in the nation's southern Cape peninsula.

Security police arrested three coloreds — the official name for South Africans of mixed race — a former "Miss Africa South," a school principal and a gynecologist.

Police said the shooting deaths of two coloreds Saturday reflected a growing white backlash to the rioting that has spread from Cape Town to 18 surrounding farming communities. Vigilantes have begun guarding white schools and whites have staged a run on gunstores.

The killings pushed the week's death toll in racial violence in the Cape Town area to 32 and the nationwide toll in 12 weeks of protest to 333.

Near Pretoria, 1,040 miles to the north, police Saturday shot and killed a black and wounded others who tried to storm a police station in a black township.

Yesterday's violence broke out in the segregated Cape Town suburb of Elsies River. Coloreds threw rocks at passing cars and smashed windows of white-owned shops in a business district still littered with rubble from last week's riots.

On Saturday, one colored man died and another was wounded when a white motorist fired three shots at a gang that forced his car off the road in the white suburb of Crawford and attacked the automobile with a hail of rocks.

At the mountain village of Franshoeck 40 miles northeast of Cape Town, police said three whites shooting simultaneously killed a colored man who emerged from a crowd and began pounding a parked car with a brick.

Security police meanwhile arrested former beauty queen Lydia Johnstone, 22, colored school principal Joe Titus and gynecologist Dr. L. T. Van der Poel "in connection" with the unrest.

Friends of Miss Johnstone were astonished at the police action.

"She's too uninterested in politics to even discuss the subject, let alone become involved to the extent where she would be detained by security police," one of her friends said.

Syria, Palestine Liberation hold 'successful' talks

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization have held "surprisingly successful" reconciliation talks in a first step toward a round-table peace conference in Lebanon, sources close to the talks said yesterday.

Sources said the secret talks on the front lines of Syria's army in the mountain town of Sofar, 15 miles east of Beirut, brought together PLO second-in-command Abu Iyad and Syrian Deputy Defense Minister Col. Naji Jamil.

"The meeting was very successful, surprisingly successful," one Palestinian source said. "PLO Chief Yasser Arafat may go to Damascus within 48 hours."

The talks took place shortly after Secretary of State Henry Kissinger publicly endorsed a reconciliation pact signed by the two sides in Damascus July 29.

A U.S. embassy spokesman said, however, there was "absolutely no connection" between Kissinger's statement and the Saturday night meeting, adding, "We didn't even know about the meeting until this morning."

Western diplomatic sources said two U.S. envoys who met with rightist leaders in Christian-held territory earlier this month urged them to moderate their positions and work toward a peace based on the so-called "Damascus agreement."

The pact, which broke down within weeks, called for a Lebanese — Syrian-Palestinian committee to supervise a cease-fire and convene a round-table peace conference to end the 18-month war.

Kissinger told reporters in Washington Saturday, "We favor a negotiated solution in Lebanon on the basis of the formula that was worked out in Damascus earlier this year."

Moslem and Christian gunmen exchanged sporadic mortar and machinegun fire yesterday on the country's three static warfronts — Beirut, the central mountains and the outskirts of the besieged leftist port of Tripoli in the north.

Local newspapers reported, however, that Maj. Gen. Mohammed Hassan Ghoneim, commander of the Arab League's 2,300-man peacekeeping force in Beirut, hammered out an agreement between Moslem and Christian gunmen to halt their fighting in the capital's "Green line" buffer zone.

Normal traffic through the zone, the sole crossing between Moslem-held west Beirut and the Christian eastern sector, resumed during the weekend after the road was closed by three days of shelling and sniper fire.

Bomb type device found

NEW YORK [UPI] — A device similar to one that exploded Friday, killing a policeman, was found at Kennedy Airport yesterday. The bomb squad quickly carried it off to the police firing range.

The device was discovered while police awaited the return from Paris of five Croatian terrorists who claimed they left the first bomb at Grand Central Station last Friday and had placed a second bomb at an undisclosed location before hijacking a TWA New York-to-Chicago flight.

There was confusion yesterday over the origin of the new device and whether or not it was a bomb.

Police had two theories: First, that it was planted by the skyjackers before the start of their 4,000-mile odyssey and second, that it may have been brought back from Paris by a flight engineer aboard the hijacked plane who was given it as a "souvenir" by one of the hijackers.

"It's been taken to Rodman's Neck in the Bronx," a police spokesman said. "It's the same special truck they use and they're driving very, very slowly."

Peace Corps revitalized?

WASHINGTON [AP] — Sen. Walter F. Mondale says that if he and Jimmy Carter are elected, they will move to revitalize the Peace Corps and restore it to something resembling what it was during the Kennedy administration.

The Democratic vice presidential candidate said Nixon administration officials "kind of beat the life out of" the Peace Corps, "partly because it had this idealistic tone to it that they found offensive."

But to him, Mondale said, "The Peace Corps represents a classic example of the dividends that flow from idealism," and carries with it a spiritual commitment that may be more important than what its projects actually accomplish.

In speeches during a five-day campaign swing Mondale repeatedly praised the Peace Corps and the spirit he says it engendered, but stopped short of promising that Carter would renew the program that was severely cut back when it was merged in 1971 with several other volunteer agencies into one program called Action.

During an interview aboard his chartered jet en route back to Washington, Mondale was asked whether a Carter administration would restore the Peace Corps to the form in which it operated during the Kennedy years.

"Yes, I think so," he replied. "It's a symbol of the need for a more forthcoming attitude" on the part of public leaders.

White was 'offered $30,000' to kill Kennedy

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — One of three persons charged with conspiring to murder Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said yesterday he was offered $30,000 to kill the sole surviving Kennedy brother.

An official police spokesman said, meanwhile, that it was unclear whether the alleged plot was "idle boasting or really serious." A top police official who asked not to be identified warned that it might all be "idle, drunken talk."

Robert E. White, 42, listed as a resident of the Salvation Army's Rehabilitation Center here, was held in lieu of $50,000 bail at the city jail.

Sandra R. Rondeau, 37, of Westfield, and David J. King, 31, of Springfield, were released on personal recognizance Saturday by a District Court clerk. Earlier, their bail had been set at $50,000 each.

All three were to appear in Springfield District Court today.

King was staying at a small white frame house with his former wife. Describing himself in a telephone interview as a self-employed radio and television repairman, King said he met White on Aug. 8 at the Salvation Army center and two days later was offered a chance by White to make "big money." King quoted White as saying, "You can make $30,000 altogether. All you have to do is kill U.S. Sen. Kennedy...You get $5,000 down and after the job you get $25,000."

Mrs. Rondeau, who had worked as a waitress at a hotel where Kennedy appeared, "was supposed to serve breakfast and Mr. White was supposed to walk in right behind her. He was going to shoot Kennedy while he had breakfast," King said.

"I wasn't to do the killing. He was to do the killing. All I was supposed to do was to keep the freight elevator ready for him and make sure all the other elevators were not working." King said.

Kennedy appeared at a fundraising breakfast Saturday at the Oaks Inn. Mrs. Rondeau had been a waitress there but stopped coming to work about a week ago, according to a spokeswoman for the hotel.

The spokeswoman said Mrs. Rondeau had worked there about six months and was a good employe.

King said White showed him two shotguns and two revolvers Friday: "I assume he got them out of New York. That's where the money was coming from."

King said he called police Friday night after White did not keep a subsequent rendezvous, a rendezvous he did not explain.

He also said he feared for his life.

King, a dark-haired man of medium build who appeared not to have shaved in two days or so, interrupted the interview to listen to a news broadcast.

He cut short the interview, saying, "I'm sick of talking to all these reporters."

After receiving King's tip, said Detective David Minor, "We checked out the story and information we received implicated all three persons. Whether this was a prank or a serious threat is still under investigation."

What police were told, according to detective Donald Ladue, was that someone would go into the hotel and shoot Kennedy with a sawed-off shotgun, and that substantial amounts of money from out of state were involved.

The money report was still being checked, the high police official said. King had refused to say in the interview where the money was coming from.

Police said they seized no weapons, money or other evidence. They refused to say whether they had obtained search warrants.

In Boston, Secret Service Agent-in-Charge Thomas Smith said agents interviewed White in Milwaukee in 1975.

"He made derogatory comments about political candidates, although not about anyone in particular. He made drunk, incoherent and rambling statements.

"We got citizen inquiries that said he might be worth our interest," Smith said.

The FBI said in Boston it was investigating to see whether any federal laws had been violated.

White and Mrs. Rondeau were arrested Saturday afternoon at Mrs. Rondeau's home in Westfield, about 10 miles west of here. King was arrested at the Springfield home where he is staying a few hours later.

State must pick up tab for UMass malpractice insurance

BOSTON [AP] — Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti has ruled that the state must pay the medical malpractice insurance bill for the University of Massachusetts.

The prededent-setting payment of $91,498 will be presented to the Executive Council for approval Wednesday. It covers doctors and other employes at the UMass medical school hospital in Worcester.

Comptroller Laurence D. Fitzmaurice had balked at processing the voucher, and UMass authorities appealed to Bellotti.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has taken no public stand on the controversy which is expected to lead to immediate demands for similar malpractice coverage for all other state medical practitioners. A Dukakis aide said the governor would be guided by Bellotti's views.

Bellotti's opinion was contained in a letter from Asst. Atty. Gen. Mitchell J. Sikora Jr. to the office of the UMass president. In essence, Bellotti held that, under fiscal autonomy, UMass could buy malpractice insurance. He said a related opinion authorizing Southeastern Massachusetts University to buy liability insurance for its employes covered the UMass situation.

Fitzmaurice had rejected the malpractice voucher as an apparently improper expenditure. At the same time, he said he would abide by a Bellotti ruling to the contrary and let the legislature act on the question, if it wished.

Fitzmaurice contended that there was no legislative appropriation for malpractice insurance. Further, he said, a separate statute bars any agency from buying property insurance on its own volition and he felt this might apply to this liability coverage.

Another law dealing with health agencies directs the attorney general to represent employes sued for errors, he noted.

UMass purchased the policies from Marsh & McLennan Inc. of Boston. Records indicate it was an annual renewal but it appeared to be the first time it was noticed by other state officials.

An officer of the insurance agency declined to discuss the coverage because of a client relationship. John Stockwell, director of the medical complex, said he did not know the specifics.

A UMass memorandum indicated that liability insurance has been purchased for all employes pursuant to a vote of the trustees.

Croatians face charges

PARIS [AP] — Four unarmed men and a woman who hijacked an American jetliner and took it on a 6,000-mile hopscotch journey to Paris were flown back to New York yesterday to face air piracy and murder charges after surrendering to a French ultimatum and releasing their 53 hostages.

The five were reported earlier to be armed with handguns and grenades and two were wired with what were thought to be explosives. But after their surrender, the explosives turned out to be modeling clay and French police and released hostages said the hijackers had no guns or other weapons.

The five Croatian nationalists had been given a choice by French officials of being shipped to Communist Yugoslavia or to the United States, where a New York City policeman was killed by a bomb planted in a locker in Grand Central Station with some propaganda statements asking independence from Yugoslavia for Croatia.

Most of the 46 passengers and seven crew members freed from the hijacked Trans World Airlines 727 also returned to the United States aboard regular TWA flights yesterday.

The hijackers, who commandeered the 727 Friday night on a flight from New York to Chicago, said they had accomplished their aim — publicity for their cause — and one added, "We are proud of what we did."

On the hijackers' orders, four major American newspapers had published lengthy statements by the band and propaganda leaflets were scattered over five cities — New York, Chicago, Montreal, London and Paris.

The Economy

Senate considers revenue sharing

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate will consider today whether to give state and local governments federal revenue sharing — a flat promise of $42 billion in funds delete that one delete that last one a flat promise of $42 billion in federal revenue sharing funds over nearly six years.

The revenue sharing program expires at the end of this year. Under it, states and localities received $26 billion in federal tax money since 1972 to use as they want.

The Senate will consider a bill to extend the program through September of 1982, providing $6.9 billion the first year, with $150 million added each year for inflation. As in the past, the money would not be subject to annual appropriations by Congress.

The House passed a bill pledging $25 billion over 3-3/4 years, compared to the $42 billion and 5-3/4 years the Senate is considering.

State and local overnments say they need money committed in advance to plan how to use it.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden, (D-Del.,) said yesterday Congress should not "sign away a check for $42 billion six years in advance with no further congressional control." He is introducing an amendment to subject the funds to annual appropriations.

Sen. William D. Proxmire, D-Wis., says revenue sharing separates responsibility for taxation and spending — Washington collects the taxes; local governments spend.

He has an amendment to funnel the money through state legislatures, which could use it through appropriations bills or refund all or part to residents as a rebate on their federal taxes.

Other issues concern prohibiting various kinds of discrimination in programs using revenue sharing funds.

Congress has three weeks to finish a sizable amount of work if it is to meet its target to adjourn for the year Oct. 2. Indications are it will stick to the target.

One important piece of business is to give approval to a major tax revision bill on which a House-Senate conference reached agreement late last week.

Television correspondent Daniel Schorr appears Wednesday before the House Ethics Committee's inquiry into how a secret CIA report was leaked to him. Schorr says he will not name the source. This could lead to a confrontation over First Amendment rights.

A possible roadblock to adjournment is abortion language in the Health, Education and Welfare bill. The House insists on barring use of money for abortion or to promote it. The Senate insists there be no such language in the bill.

Ford, union begin final agreement try

DETROIT [AP] — Faced with a mountain of unresolved issues, Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers today begin a final attempt to reach a new three-year contract before a strike deadline of 11:59 p.m. EDT tomorrow.

If there is no settlement by the time the current pact expires, the UAW will call 170,000 Ford workers in 22 states off the job and force a crippling shutdown of the nation's second largest automaker.

Bargainers met through the weekend and were to meet today in what could be round-the-clock sessions if there were any indications the talks could reach a settlement before the deadline.

After eight weeks of talks, both sides say they are still far apart on major issues, ranging from a company proposal that workers pay some of their health costs to a key UAW demand for reduced work time.

Other contentious matters involve wages, supplemental layoff benefits and pensions. The union has said each could cause a strike.

Ford has made two contract offers within the past two weeks — the latest on Friday — and has assured the union there still is room to negotiate. Ford's top bargainer, Sidney F. McKenna, said Friday's offer is not "the final word," and he expressed continued hope of resolving contract differences peacefully.

However, UAW President Leonard Woodcock said the latest offer left him with "little optimism" that a walkout could be averted.

Observers noted that such statements are traditional at this stage in the talks and no one would speculate on the outcome of tomorrow's final main-table meeting. A peaceful settlement, if there was to be one, was expected to come in the 11th hour.

Although UAW contracts with all four U.S. makers — covering 700,000 workers — expire at the same time, Ford is the union's 1976 target for a pattern-setting agreement to cover General Motors, Chrysler and American Motors as well.

There has not been a strike-free settlement since 1964, the last time the talks came in a presidential election year. Ford was struck 66 days in 1967, GM 67 days in 1970 and Chrysler nine days in 1973.

Ford's latest wage offer, up six cents an hour from the first proposal, provides an average 58½ cents an hour over three years — about a three pre cent annual hike. It also provides another nine-cents in the first year either for wages or new benefits, and continues the current cost-of-living formula.

The company has called its offer "reasonable," noting that the average Ford worker now makes $6.88 in base wages and has fringes estimated at another $4 an hour.

The union has not made a specific wage demand, but says Ford's offer is shy of the "substantial" increase it seeks.

The union also wants a cost-of-living formula that will provide full protection from inflation. The company says the present formula — with general wage increases — has kept workers ahead of inflation.

Ford workers have received wage hikes under the 1973 pact averaging $1.70 an hour, including $1.14 in cost-of-living adjustments.

A thorny issue involves the UAW's top demand for shortening work time to preserve current jobs and create new ones.

The union has hinted it would like an additional 12 days off each year at full pay — on top of the 30 in holiday and vacation time off workers now get.

Money motivates move to desert

DEEP RIVER, Conn. [AP] — Dick and Nancy Thayer, motivated by "money and excitement" offered by a new job, are pulling up their roots from along the Connecticut River and moving to Saudi Arabia. Their only reservations — they wish they could take along their friends.

In his new post, Thayer said he will be working as inventory specialist for the Arabian-American Oil Co. Aramco. He said for many years he has worked for management consulting firms and found the job in Saudi Arabia after looking for work on the Alaskan pipeline.

Thayer, his wife and 7-year-old daughter Debbie will be living in an American compound at Abqaiq, a city of 4,000 persons at the northern tip of what is known as the "empty quarter" of the country — 240,000 square miles of desert.

Rules for what can be brought into the Moslem country follow religious standards. Taboo items include alcoholic beverages, radio transmitters, weapons, games of chance or games that include images, such as chess.

Mrs. Thayer noted that women's liberation has not reached Saudi Arabia. "I will not be allowed to drive a car," she said.

But the Thayers say the people are "very hospitable." The Thayers say they will take classes to learn Arabic. Debbie will be taught the language at a school run by the oil company, which contains grades one through nine.

In Saudi Arabia, the Thayers' two-bedroom home furnished by Aramco, including utilities and maintenance will cost them $2 a month.

Golf, woodworking shops, drama clubs, horseback riding and boating are available, Thayer said.

Thayer would not mention figures, but he said his salary in Saudi Arabia will be about twice what he has been making in the United States. No income tax is payable on the first $20,000 if he works at least 18 months in the country. And as an added incentive to go over, 40 per cent is added to his base salary.

Economy boxscore

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Joblessness rose, and so did the volume from political candidates about the nation's economy.

A look at the indicators:

UNEMPLOYMENT: At a 1976 high of 7.9 per cent in August, the highest since last December when it was 8.3. The jobless totaled 7.5 million. President Ford said he was "disappointed" but his policies still would reduce unemployment — though the White House backed away from its prediction of 7 per cent by years end. Jimmy Carter said the administration has "no plan for the future."

WHOLESALE PRICES: Fell 0.1 per cent in August, the first decline in six months, meaning inflation might ease further this fall. Wholesale price index, used to guage inflation, stands at 183.7 per cent of its 1967 base of 100, meaning goods costing $100 in 1967 now cost $183.70.

INFLATION: Running at annual rate of 3.6 per cent. GNP; Gross National Product, total value of U.S. goods and services, estimated at $1.259 trillion. It has increased 9.2 per cent in the first quarter to $1.236 trillion.

PRICES: Consumer prices continued rising at 6 per cent annual rate in July. The Consumer price index, which estimates the cost of living for urban workers, increased 0.4 per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis. The CPI stood at 171.1 per cent from the $100-base in 1967, meaning consumers spending $100 then now are spending $171.10.

PROFITS: Corporate profits before taxes slowed to an increase in second quarter of 2.9 per cent. The first-quarter figure was 7.4 per cent, showing the nation's recovery has slackened. Profits rose $4.2 billion to annual adjusted rate of $145.3 billion, compared to the $9.8 billion rise in the first quarter. An extended slowdown in profits — used to repay stockholders — and pay for production — can cut jobs.

Ethics committee to question CBS' Schorr

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ethics Committee this week ends five months of asking 400 witnesses who leaked an intelligence report to CBS reporter Daniel Schorr.

And as a finale, the panel subpoenaed Schorr himself and three journalists associated with the Village Voice where the secret document was published last February.

The odds are the truth will never come out, although Rep. John Flynt, D-N.Y., the committee chairman, claimed last week the panel knows who leaked but cannot prove it unless Schorr confirms the name.

Schorr, suspended by CBS with pay pending outcome of the investigation and who turned 60 while waiting, stated he will not reveal his source even if it means going to jail on a contempt of Congress citation.

"At this age and a young family no person could relish even the remote possibility of having to go to jail," he said in a recent interview. "On the whole, I'd rather it hadn't happened." Schorr married 10 ago and has two small children.

The ethics panel — formally called the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct — last week fruitlessly interrogated under oath 16 former staffers of the now defunct Intelligence Committee in a public hearing and a 17th in closed session.

The big event comes Wednesday when the committee room will be ablaze with flood lights for television cameras turned on Schorr. Also subpoenaed to appear are Clay S. Felker, editor of New York magazine and editor-in-chief of the Village Voice; Shelly Zalaznick, senior editorial director of New York and Aaron Latham, a contributing editor to New York.

In a bid to blunt the ethics committee's case, Schorr's lawyer last Wednesday asked the panel to identify what was in the leaked reported which could harm, or has harmed, national security.

The Hewlett-Packard first family of calculators are in a class by themselves.

Hewlett-Packard built the world's first advanced pocket calculator back in 1972. And led the way ever since.

Today, Hewlett-Packard calculators are recognized as The First Family by more than one million owners worldwide. Including Nobel Prize winners, USA-USSR astronauts, explorers, educators, scientists, businessmen, and students. Here's why:

First family design.
Hewlett-Packard was first—and continues to lead—in the translation of state-of-the-art technology into advanced calculators.

First family performance.
Hewlett-Packard means the kind of performance that includes RPN logic with four-memory stack, a full range of advanced functions, and much, much more.

First family reliability.
When you buy a Hewlett-Packard calculator you get one year's protection on parts and labor. And a two working-day turn-around on most repairs.

First family support.
Every calculator comes with its own comprehensive Owner's Handbook. In addition, a complete selection of optional accessories increases the versatility of the calculator of your choice. Hewlett-Packard offers more because Hewlett-Packard's got more to offer.

Free booklet while supplies last.
"What To Look For Before You Buy An Advanced Calculator" helps you make a wise purchasing decision. Pick up your free copy at your campus bookstore. Or telephone 800-538-7922 (in Calif. 800-662-9862) toll-free for the name of your nearest dealer.

HP-21 Scientific. New low price—$80.00*
The HP-21 makes short work of the technical calculations even so-called "non-technical" courses require. If you need a calculator that does more than simple arithmetic—this is it—especially at its new low price.
- 32 built-in functions and operations.
- Performs all standard log and trig functions (in radians or degrees).
- Performs rectangular/polar conversion, register arithmetic and more.
- Addressable memory.
- Two display modes: Fixed point and scientific.

HP-22 Business Management. $165.00*
The HP-22 easily handles the kinds of calculations you face in business courses today, in management tomorrow. Breeze through business math calculations. Build existing statistical data into reliable forecasts. If you're going into business administration, this is the calculator for you.
- Combines financial, mathematical and statistical capabilities.
- Performs complex time-value-of-money computations including interest rates.
- Performs rates of return and discounted cash flows for investment analysis.
- Performs extended percent calculations, accumulated interest, amortization, etc.
- Ten addressable memories.
- Full decimal display control.

HP-25C Scientific Programmable with Continuous Memory. $200.00*
The HP-25C is our keystroke programmable. It can solve automatically the repetitive problems every science and engineering student faces. What's more, Continuous Memory lets you retain programs and data even when it's turned off.
- Continuous memory capability.
- 72 built-in functions and operations.
- Keystroke programmability.
- Branching, conditional test and full editing capability.
- Eight addressable memories.
- We also offer the HP-25, (without the Continuous Memory feature) for $145.00*

HP-27 Scientific/Plus. $200.00*
The HP-27 is for the science or engineering student—whose course work extends into business administration. The reason: It features every pre-programmed scientific function we've ever offered, plus comprehensive stat and financial functions. Thus the name: Scientific/Plus.
- 28 pre-programmed exponential, log and trig functions, 15 statistical functions, 10 financial functions—53 in all.
- 10 addressable memories—20 memories in all.
- 6 selective clearing options gives flexible use of memories.
- Fixed decimal, scientific or engineering display formats.

In Italy

Two shocks rip through province

UDINE, Italy [AP] — "There's no need to fear further quakes," the loudspeakers blare as they pass through Udine and surrounding villages. But the people don't buy the message.

In Udine, a provincial capital with 80,000 inhabitants, the parks and streets were filled yesterday with people who spent the night outside. In the villages, teams of rescuers continued the search begun during the night with floodlights for more possible victims buried by Saturday night's tremors.

Two shocks within four minutes of each other Saturday reached 5.5 and 5.9 on the Richter Scale, compared to a 6.5 reading from a quake on May 6 when nearly 1,000 persons died. They were the strongest of the 190 tremors recorded since the one in May. On the Richter Scale which is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs, a reading of 6 is severe and 7 is considered a major quake.

> 'There's no need to fear', the loudspeakers blare, but the people of Udine aren't listening. One man died when he fell while scrambling out of the bathtub.

One man died when he fell while scrambling out of the bathtub Saturday night, and about 40 people were injured by falling rocks and bricks. The real damage, though, can only be measured in terms of renewed fear.

"Maybe we should go to America. What good does it do to stay here?" Artico Urli said in nearby Magnano. "I had repaired my business after May 6, investing several million lire to put it back in operation. There was a bit of hope, but now that has crumbled with my business."

The apartment in which Urli lived also fell in the latest quake, and it was only because of a party for soldiers who had helped in the reconstruction that the eight families who shared the building were outside at the time.

"The situation is worse than it was May 6," said another Magnano man. "The psychological shock is especially harsh for those survivors who had left the tents to return to their homes, damaged as they were. Now it will be difficult to reinhabit the buildings."

Experts tried to reassure.

"The high reading today is a fact which is statistically abnormal in the process of settling which follows a destructive quake," Prof. Icilio Finetti of the Geophysical Observatory of Trieste said Saturday. "One could say then that the quake of May 6 did not complete its proper geodynamic process and, therefore, today's shocks can be considered a reply to what happened four months ago.

"Further tremors, on the basis of statistics, should not happen again soon with such intensity, but to give a really valid judgment over the long run it will be necessary to wait serveral days."

Prof. Calvinio Casparini, another geophysicist from the area, adds "the intensity is lessening and, "according to our calculations, if there are further seismic episodes, they will be diminishing."

Gemona, the town with the most deaths May 6, was left without lights for four hours by the new quakes, and people improvised with car headlights, lanterns and candles to avoid the terror of the darkness.

Movie theaters packed with Saturday night crowds emptied in minutes, and the panic led one women to jump from a balcony. At Tolmezzo, a woman was injured when she leaped from the window of her home.

EDMONTON, England: Eddie Kidd, 16, of London, is carried unconscious on yesterday en route to hospital after clearing 13 double-decker buses on a motorcycle. He skidded at bottom of ramp and smashed into a group of waiting helpers. Kidd suffered slight concussion. (UPI)

Mao— loss for the world

By WILLIAM HAHN

The recent death of Mao Tse-tung was a great loss not only to China but to the world. To fully appreciate Mao's accomplishments, one must understand the plight of China before 1949.

In the nineteenth century the Ch'ing Dynasty was in decay and external as well as internal problems arose. The British moved in first, introducing opium in large quantities. Other nations followed, each demanding a land area to control.

On the domestic front, natural disasters combined with government negligence and corruption caused floods, droughts and famines on a massive scale. Many revolts took place, the largest of which was the Taiping Rebellion, in which 20 to 40 million Chinese were killed.

Earlier this century, the Japanese became the worst aggressors.

Mao Tse-tung was born in 1893 in Hunan Province. He worked at the library at Peking University and came in contact with the leaders of the Chinese Communist Party. Following the birth of the CCP in 1921, Mao became active in youth groups. Early on he saw in the peasants a potential for revolution.

He also adopted the idea of guerilla warfare. These ideas clashed with those of the Russians, who felt the urban workers were the most important element in a revolution.

Following the Long March to Yenan in 1934, Mao emerged as leader of the CCP. He had had to fight Chiang Kai-shek all along the way and now was faced with the war against Japan. The Communists won the Mainland in 1949.

Since then, radical reforms have been carried out which have raised China from the depths of despair to a modern superpower. The landlord class, which owned most of the farmland and kept the peasants in tenancy, was mostly destroyed.

Great progress was made in the industrialization of China. A comprehensive plan to integrate all elements of society was implemented. High officials were sent down to work in the fields with the peasants. Chairman Mao was the guiding influence in all of these reforms and was worshipped by the Chinese people.

The passing of Mao Tse-tung, along with Chou En-lai and Chu Teh earlier this year, marks an end to a continuity in Chinese leadership that has lasted for the last 27 years.

The successional struggle which will now take place should be very interesting and may profoundly affect the United States. This struggle will be between the radicals, led by Chiang Ch'ing (Mao's wife), who advocate ideological purity, and the moderates, led by Ten Hsiao-p'ing, who advocate technical expertise with less emphasis on ideology.

This struggle could decide the future relations between the U.S. and China. There is also a possibility that China might return to its 1950's stand of cooperation with Russia against the U.S.

In any event, the accomplishments of Mao Tse-tung deserve admiration from all, Communist and non-Communist alike, for he raised the living standards and hopes of 800 million people. He saw the suffering of others and worked for their betterment. Chairman Mao will stand as one of the great leaders of our time.

'Equal rights' to win?

By HEIDI BERENSON

This past weekend I ventured up to a race track in New Hampshire with a few friends. Being the skeptical gambler that I am, I set out with only a couple of dollars.

In the past I had always played hunches. You know, my father's birthday coincided with the jockey's, so I played his mount. Of course it was a long shot, and as fate and probability would have it, I lost. I also played an ex-beau's name, and again went down to defeat. But since gambling is so unpredictable anyway, I thought, for me, what other way is there?

Well, my betting pattern didn't change this time either. As a matter of fact, my first two hunches, I lost. The first was by a judge's decision over the final "wire" photo, and the second was due to incompetency on the part of the horse. At that point, it was only two races into an evening that consisted of ten. So that I could bet, I figured I would wait until something better and more certain appeared on the racing program.

The night progressed quickly as I observed my friends taste "the thrill of victory, and the agony of defeat". Then along came the race I had been waiting for. My race. I mean I could just feel it in my bones. There it was the ninth race which boasted as its number three entry: "Equal Rights".

I rapidly sped over to the betting windows and attempted to place my bet. But then there came the moment of indecision, the question of whether to play it to win,. place, or show. Three clerks thinking I didn't know which horse to bet on figured they would try to help me out. I quickly explained my dilemma to them stating explicitly that my choice was definitely "Equal Rights", it was just a matter of how much risk I wanted to take and how much confidence I had in my hunches.

Immediately one of the clerks said, "Oh, we have a libber here, huh?" Not wanting to get into a discussion of my personal views on the plight of equal rights, there in line, I answered that I didn't consider myself a libber, I only wished to place a bet.

My original clerk had informed me that, statistically anyway, "Equal Rights" in the past always had a good start, but usually died towards the end. He then went on to explain to me that one other horse could be giving my prospective winner some heavy competition for first place, so I decided to play it safe and bet on it to, "place".

As I waited with anticipation for the race to begin I began to ponder the clerk's words in a new light. I made the correlation of the horse, "Equal Rights", to the movement of the same name. For people are scared of change, and when they become faced with the idea of equal rights, and the present Equal Rights Amendment (ERA), their fervor tends to get a "good start but die at the end" as does the horse.

More explicitly, I realized that this was what occurred to the public. These people would get into the movement when it was only something in a leaflet or a feature story in the news. But rather than investigate the advantages and vast new possibilities that could occur, they remain satisfied with the current unequal world and out of ignorant fear; reject it. If only people wouldn't shrug it off as being radical, they could see just what it's all about and speak about it with conviction, either pro or con, but know what they were talking about, instead of repeating heresay, or speculating.

As it turned out, "Equal Rights" won by a wide margin and instead of winning all that I would have been entitled to by betting it to win, I ended up winning a lesser amount in consolation by betting it to place. The ERA will be on the ballot in November, and I hope that it wins there as it won this weekend, then I would feel as if I really got my money's worth.

Making our own media

By JACK CAHILL

College, as you may have gleaned from your years or year here, is supposedly the environment in which one may do or achieve something new and original, even embark on a course of studies that defies all traditional guidelines. Or, college is the kind of place where the "student" takes classes that are required of him or her because that course will lead to a comfortable position with the least amount of effort.

The degree of effort required by each of these endeavors is what differentiates them. Similar to these is the attitude of people at this university towards the media they consume, but do not participate in. Mass communication deals totally with the mass, isolating the lowest common denominator and dealing only with that. Network television, big city newspapers, national news magazines, all of these media ignore all but what is generally acceptable to the faceless, stupid, opinionless demographic statistic known only as the "public". And how different is the Massachusetts Daily Collegian or WMUA? Do you as an individual find your interests and concerns exempted totally from the communication lines that purportedly connect the diverse segments of this campus?

If you don't realize the situation here, then I will tell you: there will never be anything done in campus media that relates to you unless you initiate it. We currently exist in a place that necessitates our input in order for the media to function — you-we are the media to whatever extent we wish to be. Be assured, this position will not be granted to you again. As soon as you enter the "real" world, you will only consume, never contribute.

The college situation offers the only chance that you will ever have to shape the local media. There are no rules that you cannot break, no literary style that you cannot try, no subjects that you cannot touch on. For instance, who says that a Collegian reporter must write a news story in basic inverted pyramid fashion? Pyramids were built by slaves, as former Collegian columnist and inveterate rule breaker Jim Paulin once noted. As students, we are definitely without power outside the university, but inside it we control our own world. It may not be what is generally considered real life, but it is OUR life and within our respective four year time slots, we must do what we can to seize the media and make it reflect the manner in which we, individually and eventually collectively, see life.

What am I saying to you? I am saying that you should write about avant-garde classical composers, seventeenth century woodcut displays, bad teachers, bad courses, record breaking zucchini harvests. Impose yourself on the Student Video Project, WMUA, WBLK, Spectrum, the Collegian, even the Valley Advocate and write articles program shows that are different, that express feelings and ideas rather than relate facts. Through personal experience, I have found these media outlets malleable, not rigid — open to shaping by individual input. Occasionally resistance is encountered from those already entrenched in the media who have cemented ideas about media style. They are to be encountered and convinced. More often, one meets people who are glad to find someone thinking and working independently and more than happy to incorporate them. If one thing is true at UMass, it is that if you seek, you will find... anything.

Please realize — there is no reason why the person contributing should not be you. It must be you.

Stimulating percussions

To the Editor:

The Neil Clarke African-American Percussion Ensemble offered its audience, free of charge, one of the most exciting and stimulating productions ever to make it to the Valley. The tight group of six men and one women presented a complete show about reclaiming African music and African traditions. The expert and fascinating drumology was set in its proper political context by Neil Clarke, and the audience sensed these performers had a clear perception of the political side of their art. Spiritual aspects and needs were also honestly addressed, and thoroughly developed and integrated into the musical whole.

Every piece they did presented a different facet of the rich tradition of African music, and they displayed expertise on well over twenty percussion instruments. Chris Henderson, a brother who regularly plays with the Unity Ensemble here in the Valley, brought the spirit to an American context through an incredibly powerful solo on the traditional American drums. For the last two pieces the energies of African and Afro-American music were combined, and it shook the room and everyone in it.

It was a night of education, and beautiful spiritual and musical expressions. I would urge everyone who recognizes their own ignorance of true African music [roots], and who appreciates musicians who integrate and present really together politics through their art, to catch this ensemble if they ever return. In any case, this was only the first in a series of events scheduled for the New Africa House this semester. Anyone serious about their education and political development should check it out.

Distasteful

To the Editor:

I would like to congratulate you on your attempted emulation of the ENQUIRER. The recent story on the dog eating the baby came very close to their style of journalism. But couldn't you have treated us to a half-page detailed photo of the villainous dog, the bewildered mother, and the remains of the helpless infant?

Kissinger: An elite education

Editor's Note: The following is the first in a series of columns discussing the policy and public influence of Henry Kissinger.

Every time an election year arrives the media bombards us once again with a set of so-called "issues". One of the perennial biggies is foreign affairs, and when discussing that subject in a modern context one cannot fail to mention Henry Kissinger. No one person in recent history has so influenced the official foreign policy of the U.S., nor has any individual so affected the country's attitude toward international affairs.

President Ford has indicated that, should he be elected, Kissinger will stay on as secretary of state. Said Ford in an interview with U.S. News, "If you have a ballplayer on your team who has a good batting average, you don't put him on the sidelines." Jimmy Carter, of course, is certain to replace Kissinger if elected.

Regardless of Kissinger's actual future, it is enlightening to review his rise into government and subsequent role in policy-making. We may ask whether Kissinger is typical of American diplomats and international experts, whether his policies have represented a break with American Cold War politics, and whether we can expect a major change in U.S. foreign affairs should Kissinger leave government.

It has long been fairly well-accepted that American foreign policy-making is an elitist process. Defenders of the present institutions argue that foreign affairs are less suited to democratic governance because only a small number of individuals have access to the information necessary to run an effective policy. To an extent this may be a valid point, but it behooves us to examine the nature of this elite group in order to determine what its motivating interests might be; in particular, the interests of its most dynamic member, Henry Kissinger.

Kissinger is not quite a typical foreign affairs elite — he is a naturalized German Jew whose family fled Nazism in 1938. Yet his schooling and associations follow a pattern fairly representative of many of his colleagues.

After several years in the military, Kissinger entered Harvard University, where he was soon recognized as a student of brilliant potential by William Y. Elliott, a professor of Government. Elliott, a staunch anti-communist, probably influenced Kissinger more than any other individual during Kissinger's undergraduate days.

Kissinger was himself a conservative individual. Newsmen Marvin and Bernard Kalb note in their book on the secretary that despite the popularity of "progressive" theories, "Traditional Harvard became his citadel, its ivy-covered walls representing continuity, stability, and order."

Kissinger's first real contact with the foreign policy elite outside of Harvard came after receiving his doctorate at the University. The Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), a highly influential private "advisory" organization, took Kissinger on to direct a study on the role of nuclear weapons and other aspects of modern war relative to foreign policy.

If any one group epitomizes the nature of American foreign policy-making, it is the CFR. G.W. Domhoff (and numerous others who have examined elitism in American foreign relations) has noted the importance of the CFR and the constitution of its membership. The Council is made up largely of businessmen, including the Rockefellers (who have been strong supporters of Kissinger for some time).

The ultimate product of Kissinger's study with the CFR was his famous and controversial work, Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy. In it Kissinger advocates "limited" nuclear war as the only effective control against Soviet aggression.

Soon after the publishing of the report, Kissinger returned to Harvard to teach. His stay with CFR had gained him not only international exposure, but connections with the foreign policy elite.

Whether one considers it "brainwashing" or merely influence, it cannot be denied that Kissinger's outlook on his area of expertise was strongly affected by a particular point of view. Kissinger had joined the ranks of an elite that had been formulating U.S. policy throughout the Cold War. His ties with that select group become all the more important when considering his eventual rise to power in the government.

Rhodesia strategically aims cannons at Mozambique

UMTALI, Rhodesia [AP] — Rhodesia is aiming its cannons at military positions in neighboring Mozambique, digging bomb shelters and trenches and clamping a curfew on outlying black areas as Minister Ian Smith's all-white ruling Rhodesian Front RF prepares for its annual convention at this border town.

The Rhodesian military urged the measures after a rocket and mortar attack on Umtali by Mozambique-based forces a month ago.

There is speculation that Umtali might be hit again when Smith, his cabinet ministers and officials and 600 regional delegates squeeze into Umtali on Wednesday to chart party policies for the coming year. "I think they must be aware that they'll get back tenfold what they dish out," an army officer said.

Umtali, a town of only 10,000 was chosen for the convention as a morale booster for the exposed border area. The party has no intention of switching it to Salisbury, the capital, which is 135 miles inland.

"This will give us a golden opportunity to show to the world that neither Mozambican troops nor the terrorists in camps over there can frighten us in any way," a party official said. Mozambique provides sanctuary to many of the black Rhodesian nationalists fighting a guerrilla war against the Smith regime.

The party convention is being held the very week that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger flies to southern Africa for his third round of talks with South African leaders aimed at defusing the threatening racial crisis with such measures as persuading the 270,000 Rhodesian whites to give up their supremacy over six million blacks.

Smith will visit South African Prime Minister John Vorster in Pretoria today and return to Umtali with information of interest to his party about the American initiative.

But Smith again rejected black majority rule even as unconfirmed reports were reaching here about a proposed formula for an early transfer of power involving guarantees and indemnities for whites.

Rhodesia and South Africa, Smith said in a recent interview, "would either sink or swim together." Black rule "would be absolutely disastrous," he said, equating it with a Communist takeover.

Few scars remain where houses were hit by about 30 rockets and mortar-bombs in last month's attack in which two blacks were wounded.

Rhodesian Internal Affairs Minister Jack Mussett has called Umtali "a town in the forefront of our country's military effort."

Dust-covered miltary trucks rolling through the wide, tree-shaded streets, groups of laughing soldiers in camouflage uniform in bars and posters calling for civil defense volunteers bear him out.

Tight security is to be enforced at hotels and in nearby mountain resorts, fully booked for the first time since the border with Mozambique wss officially closed in March.

A dusk-to-dawn curfew has been ordered in black reserves around Umtali and along the no-man's land running along the frontier three miles distant. British-made jets streak over the town and police and army units patrol around the clock.

Scholarship competitions open

Rhodes, Marshall and Luce Scholarship competitions for the 1977-78 academic year have officially begun, according to Barbara B. Burn, Director of the Office of International Programs.

The highly competitive Rhodes Scholarship provides for two years of study at Oxford University, England with a possible renewal for a third year if the scholar's record and plan of study warrant it. To be eligible the applicant must be unmarried and a U.S. citizen with at least five years domicile.

The 1977-78 competition is the first in which women are eligible to apply.

The candidate must be between 18 and 24 years of age on Oct. 1, 1976; have at least junior standing at the time of application. Selection is based not only upon the applicant's academic ability and achievement, but also upon his or her moral character and physical vigor.

"Selection committees are charged to seek excellence in qualities of mind and in qualities of person which, in combination, offer the promise of effective service in the years ahead. The Rhodes Scholarship, in short, are investments in people rather than in project proposals," the official program announcement states.

The Marshall Scholarship Program is designed to enable qualified men and women to study for a degree at any university in the United Kingdom. Awards are made for two years, but may be extended for a third. To be eligible a candidate must be a U.S. citizen, no more than 25 years of age by October 1, 1977 and a graduate of an accredited college or university.

Marshall Scholarship Selection Committees look for distinction of intellectual achievement and character as evidenced both by academic attainment and outside activities.

The Luce Scholarship Program is a competitive award designed to extend and promote American contact with and understanding of Asia. In contrast to the Rhodes and Marshall scholarships, it is professional rather than an academic award.

To be eligible a candidate must be a U.S. citizen, be no more than 27 years of age on September 1, 1977 and have earned a bachelor's degree from an accredited institution of higher learning.

The Luce program is intended for those with no prior experience in Asian affairs. In addition to having a record of the highest academic achievement and outstanding leadership ability, the candidate is expected to have a mature and clearly defined career interest in a specific field.

Students interested in learning more about these scholarships should talk with either Sterling or Maryelise Lamet in the International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore.

Since completed applications must be received at the International Programs Office by mid-October, there must be an initial interview by Oct. 1. Following a preliminary screening, applicants are interviewed by a faculty committee, after which selected applications are forwarded to state and district Rhodes and Marshal Selection Committees for their review.

In the case of the Luce applicants, only two candidates may be nominated by the University for review by the Henry Luce Foundation.

As only 32 Rhodes, 30 Marshall and 15 Luce Scholarships are awarded each year throughout the entire U.S., competition is extremely keen. Only those students with a very high cumulative grade-point average (at least a 3.7 is recommended) should consider making application.

Capitol Hill employees finally earning job rights

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Embarrassed by the Wayne Hays sex scandal, more members of Congress are volunteering to give their Capitol Hill staffers something they never have had — protection from job discrimination

This bipartisan movement, which may prove the legacy of Congressman Hays' shortened political career, has drawn support from 62 of the 431 House members. Advocates expect the number to hit 100 when the current session ends Oct. 2.

By next year, they hope it will bring about legislation giving Capitol Hill employes the same guarantees Congress mandated in the private sector under the Equal Pay Act of 1963 and the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Those statutes now do not apply in Congress.

The 62 current supporters of the movement, who employ more than 1,000 workers, agreed to abide by the findings of a new committee established to hear employe complaints of discrimination.

The grievance procedure was hatched months ago during the Hays sex scandal by members of the Capitol Hill Women's Political Caucus.

"It's now taken on a sort of bandwagon effect," said caucus leader Miriam Dorsey. "We were finally able to convince a few key people that every employe here is not out to get them. We only want what other workers have."

The Senate acknowledged the problem of Capitol Hill job discrimination last week, passing a resolution that says its employes deserve the same treatment Congress ordered for the private sector.

Although pleased by the Senate action, Women's Caucus members noted it provided no means of anforcement.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Transportation provided to polls tomorrow

The League of Women Voters will give free transportation to the polls tomorrow, with a van supplied by D.H. Jones Realty.

If you are interested in a ride, please call the Amherst Chamber of Commerce at 253-9666.

Theatre group holds organizing meeting

The Aggadot Reena Theatre Group will hold an organizational meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in the Hillel Office, Room 302, Student Union Building.

The group is looking for people to act in or work on their presentation of "Tales of Joy", a dramatization of Judaic tales and legends.

Credit for participation will be given. Please bring your add-drop forms.

Open meeting tonite for new publication

An organizational meeting to establish a student-run economic publication for the UMass community will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Room 100, Thompson Hall.

A survey, taken last spring, determined that economic debate, Third World economic issues, and a consumer guide for students were areas of prime interest.

Anyone wanting to be on the editorial board or a steering committee should attend.

For more information call Pat at 584-7356.

Singing-acting parts still open for '1776'

Singing-acting parts for the Fine Arts Center production of "1776" are still open.

The hit Broadway musical will feature actor Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton, Darrell Sandeen and Barry Busse.

The production at the Concert Hall of the Fine Arts Center of the University of Massachusetts will perform five nights, October 15, 16, 17, 23 and 24. All interested actors-actresses should call 545-0202 for more information.

Candidates speak on WMUA tonight

Immediately following tonight's 10 p.m. news, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast a live, open forum with the three Democratic candidates for Hampshire County Commissioner in Tuesday's primary election.

Tonight's broadcast will offer voters their final chance to hear the three candidates — incumbent Paul Dineen of South Hadley, Ted Boruchowski of Easthampton, and Robert Garvey of Amherst — before the polls open on Tuesday.

Stamp club to meet tonight at lodge

The Amherst Stamp Club will meet today in Farley Lodge at 8 p.m. to elect its officers for the academic year.

Also on the program is a showing of the club's collection of two volumes of stamps, cards, and covers from six nations.

For more information, please call 253-3115 or 253-5179. Guests are welcome.

Parking regulations currently in effect

The UMass Parking office has announced that parking regulations are in effect, and all vehicles must be parked in their assigned lot; both 1975-76 and 1976-77 lot decals will be honored through Friday.

Vehicles not displaying a University lot decal may park in the peripheral lots through Friday.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Monday, September 13 — Born today, you are an exceedingly "natural" individual one to whom others frequently point when searching for examples of the kind of easy, pleasing behavior that draws people to the one responsible for it as bears are drawn to honey. An attractive personality combines with sensitivity of spirit and intellectuality of mind to give you the reputation of one sought after not only for his entertaining qualities and ability to provide interest or a source for adventure, but also for the ability to solve problems of a highly technical or abstract nature and a gift for detecting and adapting to the moods of others.

Charm and refinement of both mind and spirit mark your work to the same great degree that they mark your personalily. You know how to deal with even the most difficult sorts of people in such a way that neither they nor those who feel protective toward them find anything the least bit offensive. When you are chosen to deal with the very young, the elderly or the problematical, all resentment in those persons fades away.

Tuesday, September 14

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Seek beauty in all aspects of your world today; grace and harmony are the results of relaxation and a sense of peace on your part.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care not to abuse your own power to persuade others to your way of thinking. You could make an enemy instead of a friend if you are careless.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Your fondness for food could cause you more than a little trouble early in the day. Make yourself scarce during evening hours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you are determined to conquer a bad habit or two, today is the day to begin. All circumstances are in your favor now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Lasting happiness begins with the move you decide to make today -- if you decide on the right one. Don't be shy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Discover a fault or two of your own while you're in the process of finding things wrong with another or with his work. You may be surprised.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You may have difficulty defining your boundaries today where career matters are concerned. Don't refuse to share knowledge with another.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Business transactions go well early in the day, less well thereafter. Be wise. Choose your time for action carefully.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A capable Taurus and a businesslike partner can accomplish great things today. Don't be hasty making early morning decisions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Display good taste in whatever you do. Otherwise, no matter what material gains you may accrue, you will be ill thought of by many who count.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — This is a fortunate day for the Cancer whose dream it is to lead the way toward new endeavors. Ideas catch on quickly in the aftrnoon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Self-analysis may be misleading. If you hope to discover your true character, you might do well to consult another.

NL East: Status quo

Dave Parker's triple keyed a three-run tie-breaking rally in the sixth inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates downed the Montreal Expos, 6-1, to stay four games behind Philadelphia in the National League East.

Meanwhile reserve catcher Johnny Oates doubled and scored the first run and singled home two others Sunday to lead the Philadelphia Phillies to an 8-0 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Sox down Tribe, 11-3

BOSTON (UPI) — Luis Tiant hurled a six-hitter, including two homers by George Hendrick, and battermater Carlton Fisk had a homer, triple and three RBI Sunday as the Boston Red Sox scored nine runs in the third and fourth innings to swamp the Cleveland Indians 11-3.

Tiant struck out six and walked one to gain his 18th victory, second only to Jim Palmer of the Baltimore Orioles in the American League. It was the eighth triumph in the last nine decisions for the right-hander, who has 11 losses.

Fisk opened Boston's scoring in the second with his 15th homer, drove home a run with a grounder in the third and tripled home another in the fourth. Boston broke the game open with five runs in the third with Rick Burleson's two-run double the key blow.

Carl Yastrzemski also knocked in a pair of runs, giving him 90 RBI's for the season, just 10 shy of the coveted 100 RBI's for a single season.

The Red Sox conclude their homestand against the Indians tonight at 7:30 p.m., with Bill Lee on the mound for Boston.

A crowd of 24,819 attended yesterday's slugfest, as the Red Sox near their 1969 attendance record of 1,800,000 fans.

With the use of one hand and one leg, Colts' quarterback BErt Jones attempts to evade the oncoming Patriots' defensive pursuit. (UPI)

Jones leads Colts past Pats, 27-13

FOXBORO, MASS. [UPI] – Bert Jones threw two touchdown passes to Glenn-Doughty in a 41-second span late in the first half Sunday to drive the Baltimore Colts past the New England Patriots 27-13 in the season's National Football League opener for both teams.

Jones, who completed 17-of-23 passes for 190 yards, connected with Doughty for scores of 12 and six yards. Toni Linhart kicked field goals of 28 and 32 yards and Lydell Mitchell added a 10-yard TD run to cap the Colts' scoring.

John Smith kicked field goals of 31 and 27 yards and Andy Johnson scored on a four-yard run in the fourth period for New England's catchup effort. Colt safety Jackie Wallace intercepted three Steve Grogan passes to lead the Baltimore defense.

The Colts seemed unaffected by the Turmoil caused last week when Coach Tem Marchibroda resigned under front office pressure, then was rehired two days later.

The Colts, defending AFC East Champions, were trailing 6-3 in the final minute in the second period when Jones finished a nine-play, 78-yard march with the 12-yard strike to Doughty cutting across the end zone. Jones completed five passes in the drive.

Instead of running out the clock on the next series headed to halftime, the Patriots elected to pass into field goal position. Grogan hit two passes for 24 yards, then threw a pass that bounced off the arms of receiver Ricky Feacher and into the grasp of Wallace, who returned it 32 yards to the New England 20.

The 'Juice' returns; will play for Bills

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. [UPI] – O.J. Simpson, the national football league's premier running back, has reached a "long-term understanding" with Buffalo Bills' owner Ralph C. Wilson Jr. and will rejoin the team, it was announced Sunday.

Simpson, who has spent his entire seven-year pro career with the Bills, was expected to return to the club for a practice Sunday evening and could see action in Monday night's nationally-televised opening game against the Miami Dolphins.

"We understand he's coming back," Bills' head coach Lou Saban said. "He's going to be taking his physical today. I just hope he's ready to play within a couple of weeks and maybe he'll play some tomorrow."

A club spokesman said Wilson and Simpson had reached "a long-term understanding" following a weekend meeting in Los Angeles. Also attending the meeting was Simpson's wife, Marguerite.

The statement released by the Bills quoted Simpson as saying: "We talked about my association with the Bills, the city of Buffalo... and what it would be like to be out of the game. I've thought about those things before, but Mr. Wilson really hit home."

Simpson, who gained an NFL record, 2,003 yards rushing in 1973, had asked the Bills last June to trade him to a NFL club on the west coast, prefarably the Los Angeles Rams. Simpson cited "family and business considerations" for the request. The trade deadline between the Bills and Rams passed last week and no deal was made between the two clubs for the former University of Southern California Heisman trophy winner.

Soviets mad

TORONTO [UPI] – The National Hockey Team of the Soviet Union, which came to North America claiming the Canada Cup was just another tournament, left Sunday bitterly complaining about the officiating in the unprecedented six-nation series.

The Soviets Saturday night were eliminated from the tournament with a 3-1 loss to team Canada. They finished the series tied with Sweden with 2-2-1 records, out of the finals that pit Canada against Czechslovakia.

Soviet Coach Victor Tikhonov said his squad lost to the Canadians because "the referee was unable to control the game."

Forest Hills champion

Connors regains U.S. title

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. [UPI] – Jimmy Connors, a power-hitter who likes to get his matches over in a hurry, Sunday displayed job-like patience for over three hours in defeating Bjorn Borg, 6-4, 3-6, 7-6, 6-4, to regain the U.S. Open Tennis Championship and lay claim to the world's No. 1 ranking.

Borg, the reigning Wimbledon, WCT and U.S. Pro champion, rarely left the baseline, in sharp contrast to his tactics in defeating Ilie Nastase in the semifinals Saturday, as he tried to weave a web around Connors with a tantalizing mixture of moon balls and topspin.

The tactics worked, to a point.

During the middle of the 3-hour, 13-minute match, which started in bright sunshine and ended under the center court floodlights, Connors made several errors on his approach shots, but he then went back to the baseline and played "pat ball" while waiting for an opening to move in with killer volley.

Borg, meanwhile, was guilty of overhitting.

Both men appeared too tense, so the match never produced any memorable moments. But it was an absorbing contest for the 16,253 crowd. In many ways it resembled a chess match on a tennis court.

Although Connors made several million dollars in the 24 months since he last won here by defeating Ken Rosewall in straight sets, Sunday's victory was his first "big four" championship in two years.

Last year Connors, 24, was defeated in the final here by Manuel Orantes of Spain, and Arthur Ashe unseated him at Wimbledon.

It was Connors' third victory over Borg this year, raising his lifetime mark to 7-1 over the 20-year-old Swede, which should be good enough to give him the world No. 1 ranking.

Floyd captures World Open

PINEHURST, N.C. [UPI] – A "relaxed" Ray Floyd sank a three-foot birdie putt to defeat a red-hot Jerry McGee on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff Sunday and capture the world open title.

"I told myself I was going to come here and just play four rounds of relaxed golf," said Floyd, who finished the rugged 7,007-yard Pinehurst No. 2 course at 10 under par for 72 holes. "I was going to try and come back from the past two weeks and not put any pressure on myself."

Floyd, the 1976 Masters Champion, was a contender for both the American Golf Classic title and the World Series of golf $100,000 first prize in the past two weeks. However, he was knocked out of contention both times with final round scores of 78 and 76.

He shot an even par 71 Sunday to finish with a 274, while McGee fired a blistering five-under-par 66 to plunge the tournament into a playoff. Rookie George Burns, who led through the first two rounds, had sole possession of third place after a two-over-par performance for a total of 275.

Floyd advanced to the playoff by sinking a 10-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole, and then recovered from a tee shot that went into the right rough on the playoff hole to drop his second shot within three feet of the pin.

McGee shot par on the playoff when he hit right of the green on his second shot and had an "extremely hard chip shot" which rolled 12 feet past the hole.

"When I made that par putt on 18, I thought I had won it," said McGee, who has only one tournament victory to his credit.

NFL roundup

Compiled From Wires

A couragous Bill Kilmer, streaming blood from a face cut, passed five yards to Mike Thomas with 45 seconds left Sunday to rally the Washington Redskins to a 19-17 opening game victory over the New York Giants.

Kilmer's game winning throw to Thomas under the goal post climaxed a race against the clock from the Washington 42 where the Redskins had taken possession with 1:38 left on a 45-yard punt return by Eddie Brown.

Mike Phipps threw three touchdown passes before going out with a shoulder injury and Reggie Rucker tied a club record with three TD catches Sunday to lead the Cleveland Browns to a 38-17 victory over the New York Jets in the NFL opener for both teams.

Rucker caught TD passes of 17 and four yards from Phipps in the second quarter when the Browns broke the game open with 21 points and added an eight-yarder from Brian Sipe in the third period after Phipps was injured.

Jim Plunkett recovered from a shaky start and threw two touchdown passes to Willie McGee Sunday to spark the San Francisco 49ers to a 26-14 victory over the Green Bay Packers in an NFL opener.

Plunkett, whose mediocre performance in the pre-season had worried 49er officials, threw just 12 passes but completed eight, including the two for TDs to McGee. Delvin Williams, the NFL's leading rusher in the preseason, also scored twice.

Two Detroit Lions' fumbles, one of them on a freak play after a blocked punt, sparked the Chicago Bears to a touchdown and a field goal Sunday for a come-from-behind 10-3 triumpth in their National Football League opening game.

The Los Angeles Rams used the bruising sweeps of Lawrence McCutcheon and John Cappelletti Sunday to pound the Atlanta Falcons into submission and take a 30-14 victory in the opening game of their bid for a fourth straight NFC Western Division Title.

McCutcheon picked up 115 yards and Cappelletti 102.

Ken Anderson fired touchdown passes of 27 and six yards in the fourth quarter Sunday to rally the Cincinnati Bengals to a 17-7 victory over the Denver Broncos in an NFL season opener.

Trailing 6-0... ...defense prevails

Minutemen blast Rockets

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Maybe the football they play in the Midwest isn't quite as superior as they've led us to believe all these years. Or maybe this UMass football team is even better than everyone thought — maybe as good as last year.

On the other hand, it may be true that the University of Toledo, this year at least, is not representative of the best in Mid-American conference football. Still, they looked to be a step or two above the Maines, the URI's, and the BU's that UMass fans are accustomed to seeing.

In any case, UMass struck a blow for Yankee Conference and New England football as the combination of tough defense under pressure and two touchdown catches by a second-string tight end carried the Minutemen to a 28-14 domination of Toledo Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

Things weren't exactly simple for the Minutemen, however. They were down 6-0 in the second quarter, and Toledo was knocking at the proverbial door again.

But then that old friend, momentum, swung to the UMass side, and Toledo was soon to be pondering the long flight home.

The Rockets had scored first on a 47-yard Jeff Hepinstall to Scott Resseguie bomb early in the second quarter, but the extra point attempt was wide to the left. When UMass gained possession, the Minutemen were yet to get their offense moving and a 24-yard John Romboli punt gave Toledo the ball at the UMass 49.

Consecutive runs of 14, 16, and nine yards, plus an illegal motion call on UMass, gave Toledo a first and goal from the five, and had press box people wondering when the last time was that UMass lost a home opener.

Such thoughts were premature, however. The UMass defense, as it did so many times last year, closed up all the holes. After two one-yard runs, Hepinstall was sacked for an eight-yard loss, and Bob Kelleher's 28-yard field goal attempt went wide to the right.

UMass took over on its own 20 and, four plays later, quarter-back Brian McNally connected with reserve tight end Kevin Cummings for a 70-yard scoring play. Cummings made two receptions on the afternoon, both TD's. Dave Croasdale's extra point kick was good, and UMass had the lead.

The momentum didn't stop there, however. Toledo's Bill Oliver fumbled Croasdale's ensuing kick-off, and Minuteman Joe McLaughlin recovered on the Toledo 25. Bill Coleman, the game's leading rusher (10 carries, 54 yards), then carried it to the 12. One play later, sophomore Dennis Dent scored from there on his first carry of the year.

"It was a halfback draw strong," Dent said after the game. "There was nothing inside so I just cut outside." The conversion was good, and UMass led 14-6 at the half.

Both McNally and UMass coach Dick MacPherson agreed that the Cummings touchdown turned it around for the Minutemen.

"That gave us a little more confidence," said McNally, who received the game ball from his teammates. "We were a little tight in the beginning, but we stayed right with our game plan."

"It (Cummings first TD) made the day for us," said MacPherson. "He came up to me after that and said 'That made it all worthwhile.' He's worked real hard for this," added the coach. Cummings put on 40 pounds in training camp in order to switch from wide receiver to tight end.

But Cummings decided that wasn't enough. The Minutemen opened the second half with a nine-play, 62-yard scoring drive, capped off with a three-yard McNally to Cummings pass.

The Toledo offense, meanwhile, was having no luck with the UMass defense. The Rockets managed to move the ball effectively, (outgaining UMass in total yardage, 318-268). But the Minutemen, bolstered by the return of safety Todd Holt and linebacker Peter McCarty, came up with the plays they needed.

MacPherson singled out defensive end Dennis Fenton, who recovered a fumble and sacked Hepinstall. "It looks like Fenton's playing the best football of his career," the coach said.

The offense gave the defensive men a break early in the fourth quarter. Keeping the ball on the ground most of the way, McNally, Romboli, and Rich Jessamy put together a 13-play, 66-yard drive which took seven minutes culminating in a two-yard scoring dive by Keith Lang. The score put the Minutemen up 28-6 with only nine minutes left to play.

The Rockets came right back to score four minutes later, and actually threw a scare into UMass fans by recovering a Dent fumble on the UMass 11 a minute later. But the Minuteman defense stonewalled again, and the rest was garbage time.

As usual, MacPherson was pleased with the win. "It's very enjoyable to beat a team from the Midwest — maybe now people out there will have a little respect for the University of Massachusetts," he said.

In the statistics department, Toledo had the edge. Coleman led the rushers, and was followed closely by the Rockets' Irv Kenerly (16 carries, 53 yards). Hepinstall was 8 for ten, 123 yards in the passing department for Toledo, while McNally was 7 for ten, 115 yards for the Minutemen. Cummings' 73 yards led the receivers; Resseguie caught three for 62 yards.

So now it's back to New England and the Yankee Conference for the Minutemen. But maybe, just maybe, the people out in Ohio will have a little more respect for New England and UMass football.

Momentum: Decisive key for gridders in initial outing

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Momentum is a fragile thing. But it's very powerful when it starts working for you. The UMass football team knows that.

Toledo had a 6-0 lead and was seemingly marching for another score when the Minutemen turned it around Saturday afternoon.

The defense started off the swing of momentum as it stopped Toledo when the Rockets had a first and goal at the five. In close, the Minutemen defenders hung tough. They gave up two yards on two attempts by Toledo running backs Mike Alston and Irvin Kennerly.

Toledo quarterback Jeff Hepinstall was sacked on third down for an eight yard loss by the charging defensive line. Bob Kelleher then missed a 28 yard field goal attempt.

So what could have been a 14-0 lead for Toledo and really swung the momentum to the Rockets proved to be the turning point at UMass scored 28 consecutive points after that.

The defense started the turnabout with its tough play inside the five, and dug in whenever the Minutemen's backs were near the goal line. After the defense dug in the offense started to move.

Starting on its twenty, UMass got its initial first down of the game, and on the next play, junior tight end Kevin Cummings took a Brian McNally pass and raced for a touchdown. The play covered 70 yards and with Dave Croasdale's conversion, UMass led 7-6.

Bill Oliver fumbled the ensuing kick-off for Toledo after being hit viciously by Steve McInnes. Joe McLaughlin recovered the fumble as the momentum unquestionable turned in the Minutemen's favor.

It took just three plays to score the second touchdown, as Dennis Dent sliced twelve yards from left to right.

The momentum stayed with the Minutemen for the rest of the contest as they put together two scoring drives and ate up the clock with ball control tactics.

The seventy yard touchdown was the key to the shift of momentum. "It made us," said coach Dick MacPherson after the game.

Quarterback Brian McNally agreed. "It gave us confidence," he said. Defensive tackle Dennis Fenton also credited it for getting the defense pysched up too. "It got us started," he said.

"We were tight in the beginning," MacPherson said. "Momentum was big. The enthusiasm carried over to the team."

The enthusiasm ignited the Minutemen. And once they got the fired started, they got cooking.

Eagles reach sky with Texas upset

BOSTON [UPI] — "A strong defense and a good player saved us," was how quarterback Ken Smith described Boston College's biggest football win in 25 years.

The Eagles, in the shadows, since winning the 1941 Sugar Bowl over Tennessee, held off a furious Texas finish Saturday night to gain a 14-13 win over the nationally ranked Longhorns.

The defense surely was effective, keeping the vaunted Texas runners to 169 yards gained.

And the players on the lips of thirty thousand of the Jesuit school followers, were answered when Texas' Russell Earxleben just missed a 53 yard field goal with no time left on the clock.

The game had more peaks than New Hampshire's White Mountains.

First there was Neil Green's 74 yard touchdown run — his first varsity play — that came 53 seconds into the game.

Then there was a fumble recovery by linebacker Bob Watts at the Boston College 4-yard line as Texas appeared ready to tie the game in the second period. The Eagles turn the game around at that point, marching 96 yards to take a 14-0 lead.

In the final five minutes, someone obviously was watching over the Eagles.

After Texas had mounted its lone sustained drive to pull within a point at 14-13, the Longhorns tried to take the lead on a two-point conversion rush by Johnny "Gold Medal" Jones.

Jones, a member of the U.S. victorious Olympics Relay team, took a pitch out and headed for the right corner of the end zone. When defensive back Kelly Elias tackled the fleet halfback a yard short of the goal.

"I was watching the tight end all game long and when I saw him move in as the play began, I knew something was coming my way," said Elais. "So I moved in and got the runner."

JFK memorial fund unused

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

While over $16,000 from the John F. Kennedy Memorial Fund sits in an interest bearing account at the New Bedford Institution for Savings, the JFK Memorial Reading Room in the UMass library has only 85 books on two shelves.

This was brought to light when Acting Student Senate Treasurer Thomas Kerrins discovered a file on the fund and proceeded to investigate.

Kerrins explained the fund was started when the Student Senate "adopted the idea of money to be set aside for the purchase of books for the JFK Memorial Reading Room".

The establishment of the fund was just one result of the formation of the Committee for a John F. Kennedy Memorial Service by the Faculty Senate late in 1963, shortly after the assassination of the late president. Assoc. Prof. Eva Schiffer (German Dept.) was a chairperson of the committee, and Jonathan D. Fife, Student Senate president at the time, was the student representative.

The committee engineered a Fine Arts Festival dedicated to Kennedy and considered plans for having a sculpture done and a holding concert in Curry Hicks Cage, among other things. However, it is not clear from the file if anything besides the festival actually took place.

Kerrins said the senate had been allocating $1,000 a year for the fund until 1971. On May 22, 1970, the money was transferred from an account in the Recognized Student Organization office to an interest-bearing account where it still remains.

Although $2,000 was appropriated for the purchase of books on March 21, 1975, the principal and accrued interest of the account totals $16,129, according to the last statement from the university controller, Kerrins said. According to Kerrins, only $850 of the $2,000 appropriation was spent on the books now in the room.

It seems the fund was simply forgotten about for the most part. Past treasurers have known about the fund, Kerrins said, "but it was never publicized or utilized".

The file contains a number of letters from past senate treasurers addressed to either the University treasurer or the library staff asking about the status of the fund. Ross P. Jones was senate treasurer when the fund was established. Other treasurers succeeding him who authored queries about the fund include Gary Bombardier (1965), Alan Gauthier (1970), Paul Hamel (1973) and most recently, Jack Margossian.

Margossian addressed his letter to "To Whom it May Concern:" at the library, and wrote "Could I please have any information on the status or the guidelines of the JFK Memorial Fund which was given to the library a few years ago. We are trying to see if this fund has been used or can be used. Thank you."

Kerrins said, "Paula Mark, who is the library-senate liasion concerned with the fund, said a lack of student initiative has played a direct part in the ineffectiveness of the fund."

"I hope to initiate a committee to deal with purchasing books for the room," Kerrins said.

The room was intended to be a browsing and reading room and the books on the shelves are non-circulating. Social problems and areas of social concern are the topics the books were expected to deal with. Some books presently on the shelves concern Vietnam, the Middle East, feminist struggles, and the Kennedy legacy.

Kerrins said he would welcome any help in organizing a committee. He said he will propose an initial purchase totalling $3,000 be made and the rest of the money be left to collect interest.

He estimates that the interest would provide approximately $1,000 a year to purchase 100 books and would maintain the existence of the fund while keeping the collection of books current.

Grad Senate holds year's first session

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

An introduction to the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) and its operations was the theme of an open informational meeting held last night as the senate met for the first formal gathering of the new semester.

Topics ranged from the University Child Care System to the senate's revenue-sharing program.

Vice-President Tim Austin outlined the role of graduate students on the Faculty Senate Graduate Council.

He also spoke of his work with the University Day Care System, which provides day-care for the benefit of working and student parents.

The senate's Finance Council, which Austin helped to design last year, was another topic of opening discussion. Anyone interested in joining the Finance Council should contact either Austin or Daniel Fisher. Elections will be next week at a time and place yet to be announced, Austin said.

Treasurer Daniel Fisher talked about the G.S.S. Revenue Sharing Plan. The purpose of the plan is to stimulate the development of graduate student departmental, political and professional organizations by making G.S.S. funds easily available to such organizations, and to increase unity among graduate students in each degree-granting economic unit through senate financial support of departmental organization.

Fisher also explained the functions of the Executive Committee and the senate in allocating a budget of some $96,000 for the present fiscal year.

G.S.S. secretary Barbara Stack said the present University committee system requires the appointment of graduate students by Mike Federow, president of G.S.S.

In practice, this authority is usually shared with the Executive Committee and the Senate, Stack

Collective serves as commuter link

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective serves as an ear for students frustrations with landlords, leases and rent hikes and acts as a link between the students and the community, according to Lucia Bruno, a coordinator for the group.

"We are mainly a resource for new and old students," says Bruno. The Collective's interests lie mainly in establishing student's rights in areas such as day care, rent control and tenants unions.

The collective, located in room 216 of the Student Union, supports such groups as Outfront, a community newspaper, and the Amherst Tenants Association "financially, morally and emotionally," Bruno said.

A major focus of the collective is to help people recognize their rights. They urge new or old students with complaints concerning their landlords to come in and talk with them about it. If enough negative feedback is collected on one landlord the collective hopes to be able to initiate some sort of response such as writing letters or boycotting, said Bruno.

The collective hopes to organize seminars on such pertinent topics as "How to Read a Lease" to allow confused renters to understand the "legalese" of contracts, Bruno said.

The Commuter Collective is the area government for commuting students. Elections are being held at the beginning of October. Presently five people are actively involved in the coordinating of the group. Thirteen seats need to be filled. Additional information will be available in an upcoming newsletter put out by the Collective.

This fall the collective is sponsoring a progressive film series which will include popular and political movies. The films start tonight with Blood of the Condor, a movie about the U.S. involvement in Latin America. Other films to be seen this month are State of Seige, Burn!, and Salt of the Earth.

The films, shown in 231 Herter, on Tuesday and Thursday nights, are $1.00 and are scheduled for 8:00 and 10:00 p.m.

Unseasonably mild weather sent at least one student down to the pond for a snooze and another for some sunny studying. Blue skies brought yesterday's weather into the mid-eighties, with more of the same due Tuesday. (Staff photo by Jeanne Mooney)

Motorized wheelchair stolen from Southwest

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

A motorized wheelchair, valued at $500, was reported stolen early Monday morning. The wheelchair was stolen from the owner's designated parking space between Patterson dorm and John Adams Tower within a 17 minute period in which the owner left the area.

The wheelchair is the owner's means of transportation around campus and because of its high cost probably can't be replaced. The wheelchair is a black and silver "Rolls Elite" and has a serial number.

Police are asking students, faculty and other persons to report any information they may have about the wheelchair.

"It it was only a joyride, it would be nice if it could be returned," a spokesperson for the police department said.

Thefts

A jacket containing car keys and other personal items, valued at $25, was reported stolen from the Blue Wall Sunday night.

A three-cubic foot refrigerator, valued at $65, was stolen from a dormitory room in Kennedy Tower Saturday.

The owner was asleep in the room when the theft occurred, and said the door was locked, but may not have been shut tight.

Arrests

Nancy E. Glazer, 20, of 43 Highland Ave., Randolph, and Frank S. Robitaille, 20, of 13 Kendall St., Chicopee, were arrested for larceny over $100 for allegedly stealing a chair, valued at $175, from Cance dormitory.

A description of their motor vehicle was reported by a UMass security guard and Hadley Police intercepted their vehicle on Rte. 116.

Campus police identified the chair as UMass property by its serial number.

Protective Custody

A fight on the third floor of Brown dormitory was reported early Saturday morning by a student security guard at the dorm.

Police found the subjects outside the dorm on their arrival and one person described by police as belligerent and uncooperative was placed into protective custody for drunkenness.

A person was placed into protective custody for attempting to fight with occupants of a room on the fourth floor of Cance House Saturday morning.

A person who refused to leave the lobby area of Coolidge dormitory was placed into protective custody Saturday.

A person was placed into protective custody at the Northeast quad by Thatcher dormitory for causing a disturbance and refusing to leave the area Saturday night.

Two persons were placed into protective custody for drunkenness in the area adjacent to Patterson dormitory when an officer saw them attempting to remove a parking sign early Sunday morning.

Two persons were placed into protective custody Sunday morning on the south side of the Infirmary for drunkenness.

Two persons were placed into protective custody for causing a disturbance on the 20th floor of Coolidge dormitory following a complaint from a counselor early Sunday morning.

A juvenile listed as a missing person was placed into protective custody at Brown dormitory Saturday night, following a call from the Springfield Police Department. He was picked up by his parents at the UMass Department of Public Safety.

Threat

Police received a report from Franklin Dining Commons that an unknown male was threatening dining commons workers Sunday night. The person could not produce a meal ticket or identification and was gone when police arrived. The case is under investigation.

Autos Stolen and Damaged

A 1967 Datsun station wagon was reported stolen from the Southwest area horseshoe early Saturday morning. The vehicle was not locked.

A 1975 Chevrolet Impala, parked in the rear of Patterson Dormitory, received damages of approximately $150 Saturday. A small hole, apparently caused by a pellet or BB, shattered the entire rear window of the car. Police are investigating the incident.

Health fee spending monitored

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

While the Student Senate attempts to monitor the spending of student tuition and fees monies through its various committees, the Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB) attempts to monitor the spending of monies collected through the student health services fee.

William Kober, who along with James Nesti co-chairs the board, is attempting to engineer a push for increased membership on the board. Any student who pays the health fee can become a member of SHAB by attending two meetings and registering with the board. Each member has voting power.

Kober feels this year will be an extremely important one for the board and said, "I want to get interest in the board established as early as possible."

"Too many times people become interested after discussion has begun. They only express interest after discussion has become amplified," he explained.

Committees will be established to deal with such things as the implementation of the Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) under the Valley Health Plan and the Student Dependents Health Plan. The board's first meeting will be held tomorrow at 6:30 in room 302 of the University Health Services building.

The HMO will go into effect October 1 and the committee will deal with the implementation of the plan and the inter-relationships of the Health Services and the Valley Health Plan group. Area residents covered by the plan will be sent to the Amherst Medical Associates building, but university staff, faculty and their dependents will go to the Health Services.

The Student Dependents Health plan will cover the spouses and children of university students selecting the plan. Like the HMO,

UMass self-sufficiency in agriculture explored

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Interest in agricultural self-sufficiency at UMass brought 36 people together for the organizational meeting for the Alternative Agricultural Coalition last night in the Campus Center.

The Coalition's purpose, as stated in their newsletter is "to foster the use of natural and recycled materials within the state and to reduce dependence on outside sources of fertilizer, energy, and food supplies."

The coordinators of the Coalition, Edward Pachico and Sanford Matathia, are proposing that a student cooperative work the tillable acreage on University lands. This could be done through a colloquium that they wish to facilitate in the Orchard Hill residence area.

Pachico said, "The colloquium, 'Ecological Farming,' would be a hands-on experience for plant and soil science majors, and would provide academic credit for work in ecological farming."

Matathia emphasized the amount of land that could be made more productive for the University.

"I'd like to see the Orchard productive again, with students able to eat the apples that grow there," he said.

The goal of the Coalition is to establish a student interest in ecological or organic farming, Matathia said, and to gather information in eco-farming and management, and to aide in establishing food cooperatives for students.

Those who wish for more information about the Coalition may write SCER, CC Box 18, University of Mass. or call 253-7122 in the evening.

Budget cuts threaten SBA

By GERRY GRENIER
Collegian Staff

The UMass School of Business has hit upon hard times, as Bob DiSalvo knows too well.

DiSalvo, a second semester senior, is an accounting major, and as a result of overcrowded classes is unable to enroll in one accounting course which he needs in order to graduate this January.

Talks with professors who teach the courses in question have not worked out, as well as conversations with School of Business Administration (SBA) Dean George Ordiorne, Assoc. Dean Jack S. Wolf, and Accounting head Anthony Krzystofik.

When contacted by the Collegian, Krzystofik cited the current budget crises as the root of the problem. He mentioned the fact the Accounting department lost three full-day faculty members to higher paying positions at other universities, while none were hired to replace them.

"The interest in accounting is not followed by budgetary transfers," Krzystofik said.

"We're trying to maintain a quality program, but the resources just aren't there," said Krzystofik. There are only 11 full time faculty members teaching accounting courses, with the bulk of the teaching taken up by Graduate teaching assistants.

"The faculty at this University has not received a cost of living pay increase in the past three years. What is so magical about Massachusetts when someone can go the sunbelt for more money?" Krzystofik said, adding that the states ranks "48th or 49" in aid to higher education.

He suggested that DiSalvo audit a course which he needs, in the hopes that a student drops out, take one of the courses through Continuing Ed, or check at the four area colleges. If he succeeds at none of these alternatives, then Krzystofik suggested that DiSalvo take one of the courses at another school next semester. If a job opportunity arises for DiSalvo sometime early next year, then Krzysofik said a letter would be sent to the employer explaining the situation.

Associate Dean of the School of Business, Jack S. Wolf said many of Krzystofik's thoughts.

"The market for accounting instructors is terrific, so they (the teachers) are leaving."

There are limits as to how many T.A.'s can be used to accommodate the students needs, Wolf said.

"You come to a point where quality goes down. Just last year we were re-visited by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business, and we are now in danger of losing accreditation with that association."

> 'You come to a point where quality goes down. Just last year we were re-visited by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business and we are in danger of losing accreditation...
> —Jack Wolf, Associate SBA Dean

The student-to-teacher ratio in the School of Business as well as the accounting department is very high.

"If they (Whitmore) are not going to give us the resources, then we must cut back. Until 500 students march over there," Wolf said pointing to Whitmore, "like the nursing students did, nothing is going to happen."

This is not the first time DiSalvo has run into red tape at the University. When he graduated from Lowell High in 1972, his transcript from there was not completed, and by the time it was straightened out, he was told that he would have to begin classes in January 1973.

The trouble actually began last spring when Bob declared his major in the School of Business. Unknown to him, his records were not transferred to the accounting department, thus he was not officiallly listed as an accounting major. As a result, when DiSalvo received his schedule through mail this summer, he discovered that the accounting courses he had pre-registered for were listed as 'restricted' to accounting majors only.

Through the efforts of his advisor, Professor Ronald Mannino, Bob was able to add Accounting 235 to his schedule, which left him to find just one of four electives to satisfy an accounting major's requirements. To his dismay, his efforts to add either accounting, 340, 320, 370, or 390b have been futile, and he faces the prospect of finishing his requirements next semester at another school, or adding one of the four courses through continuing education here at the University, which would mean paying more money. DiSalvo feels that he should not have to go through such trouble or expense, since he paid his bill on time, and deserves to get what he paid for.

Time, though, is not on Bob DiSalvo's side. He cannot wait for students to march to Whitmore. Right now he is auditing Accounting 341, hoping that someone will drop it between now and Thursday (the end of the legal add-drop period).

DiSalvo has checked with the four area colleges, and said that none offer the courses in questions.

"All of the Professor's I have talked to sympathize with my situation, but none will give me his John Hancock on that add-drop form," he said.

DiSalvo said he finds it hard to understand that his addition to an already huge class will make much of a difference. Of the four classes that he has to choose from all have an enrollment of over forty.

Said DiSalvo, "I've come to point where I've called my dad, and he told me to pack up and come home. The Collegian is my last resort."

Index presents design expert

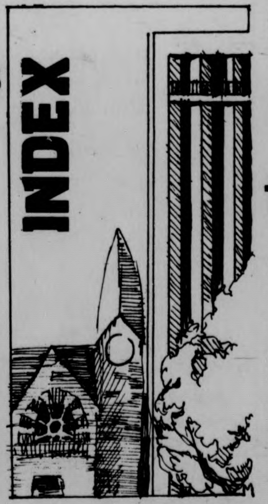
Pat Carney, one of the country's leading design and photography consultants will address the first meeting of the 1977 Index staff tomorrow night at 7:00 p.m., in room 163 Campus Center, according to P.J. Prokop, editor of the 1977 Index.

Carney, who is a consultant with American Yearbook Company will focus on yearbook design and photography, and will present an original slide show featuring some of his work, Prokop said. "Students should attend this meeting if their interests include writing, photography, art work, graphics, or design layout," Prokop said.

"We are looking for students to contribute their skills and opinions to make this pubication a worthwhile experience for the students who create it as well as the student body it serves," said Prokop.

It isn't necessary to be an expert in any one field of interest in order to have work published or to work on the staff, said Prokop.



Index '75 has recently won the Printing Industry of America Award, in competition with professional publications in the category of books over 200 pages.

Index '76 is scheduled to arrive on the UMass campus during the first week in November.

Program Council aiming for series of small shows

By RICH HANAUER
Collegian Staff

Prospects for student-run concerts on campus may be threatened by apathy this semester, according to the chairperson of the Program Council Music Committee (PCMC).

Ala Cagiati, elected to chair the PCMC last spring, said he hopes to put on "a series of small shows" representing "a diversity of musical events."

Cagiati suggested concerts by David Bromberg, Bonnie Raitt, classical guitarist Miguel Rubio, jazz shows, and coffeehouses as possible events for this year.

"But in order to program these events, we need people to work and share ideas," he said. A PCMC meeting scheduled for last night was postponed until next Monday because there were too few present to vote on proposals.

The PCMC, one of five Program Council committees, receives $18,000 per year out of Campus Center and Student Activity fees for "programming and producing events in and around the Campus Center complex," Cagiati said.

Mark McArthur, a veteran PCMC member, observed that "lack of publicity is the biggest thing hurting the committee.." Some shows in the past have been poorly attended, a factor which could jeopardize funding for the future, he said.

"The musical outlook for the coming year is grim unless students come to meetings and work," McArthur said.

Because PCMC concerts offer top performers at well below commercial prices, they represent a "rare chance for students to get something back for their Campus Center fee," McArthur said.

Those interested in joining the PCMC should watch the Collegian notices for meeting times.

Last year the PCMC presented such groups as Leslie West, Kingfish, and Keith and Donna Godchaux. It also collaborated with Eastern Mountain Concerts, a Recognized Student Organization (RSO) group for which Cagiati is stage manager, on the Spring Concert which featured James Cotton, the Fabulous Rhinestones, and other bands last May.

Tip received in dog poisonings

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Belchertown police are investigating a man living in a neighboring town for the poisoning of 56 dogs and 12 cats since last spring. Police Chief Ernest Gay said the tip came from Belchertown's south end last Friday. The man was not driving a car.

Belchertown Dog Officer Wallace Chevalier brought samples of possibly poisoned chicken meat, fish and cake found at the side of the road by worried townspeople, to the Page Laboratory at UMass yesterday to be analyzed.

Dr. Douglas N. Stern, of UMass, who has performed six post mortems on poisoned dogs said the poisoning was obviously done with malicious intent.

He said the concentration of the chemical endosulfan was so high it could not have been residue on foliage. This report was confirmed by Ralph M. Morgan of the West Experimental Station.

Dr. Armand Padula of FMC Corporation in Lockport, New York, makers of the endosulfan, said he and his company would not get involved in an investigation.

"We have not been asked to get involved but we have determined that we have no legal or moral obligations. It was clearly a criminal act and it is clearly a police matter," Padula said.

Padula said he doubted the palatability of the chemical but went on to say that if there had been a lethal dose, death would have been inevitable and the cases where dogs have been saved by veterinarians must have been sub-lethal doses to begin with.

The anonymous initiator of the Reward Fund account in the Belchertown branch of the Hampshire National Bank said yesterday that the fund has reached a total of over $200, since the expansion of media coverage throughout the state.

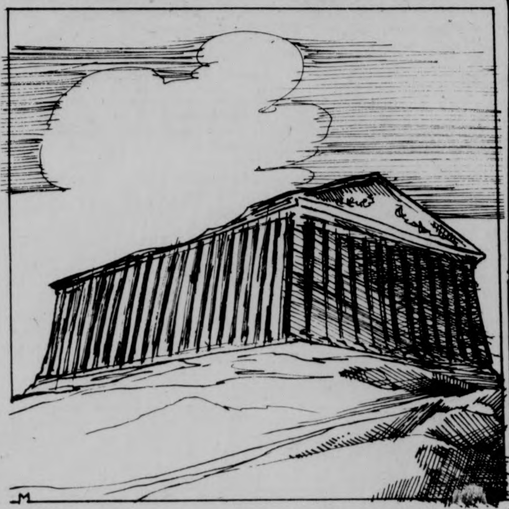
A Belchertown resident who owns and loves many animals, but prefers to remain anonymous so as not to become a target of the poisonings, said that donations have come from as far as Boston suburbs.

The reward will be paid for information leading to the arrest of the person responsible for the killings.

If the police succeed without the outside information, she said, the money in the account will go to Dr. Ruder, an Amherst veterinarian, for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals spaying fund.

The Belchertown Sentinel has reported that a local resident has offered a $200 reward for information leading to an arrest. Dog World magazine is also offering $50 for information leading to an arrest.

Visit to Greece opened her eyes



Cynthia Panagore
Collegian Staff

Cynthia Panagore spent five weeks in Greece visiting her relatives. The following is an account of her stay.

Five weeks in Greece gave me a sharper focus, and more realistic attitude towards all the luxuries we have been raised with in the United States. I had not realized their full impact until the beginning of the semester.

The first few comments I heard from my new floormates were, "The pressure from those new showerheads is terrible!", "And doesn't that bubbler water taste like rust!" and "these rooms look like cell blocks! "I'm able to sympathize with their attitude since I felt the same way until this summer. But after spending over a month in Greece, I realize how lucky Americans really are.

The Greek people in the village I'm about to describe to you are happy, even without our luxuries. But that's not my point, I'd like to relate to you some of the things I saw and experienced during my week stay at the village Strousi.

My first taste of the kind of life my relatives lead was when I neglected to wind my watch. I should have realized that my relative's rough cement home could not have possibly contained a clock, but being an American I naturally assumed there was one. To my amazement, when I asked my Aunt what time it was she ran outside to look at the sun. After a few days I decided that a watch was out of place here, along with any time consciousness, so I packed it back into my suitcase. After a while I really began to enjoy the timelessness an no hurry attitude that we Americans are so unaccustomed to.

In addition to the lack of time keeping mechanisms, there was a lack of more important things, such as cleanliness and medicine. My 11-year old cousin was so astonished by my morning ritual of washing my face and brushing my teeth that she pulled up a chair and was entertained every morning of my stay. I did not see this particular family engage in any such practices, nor did I see a drop of medicine or a bandaid. I can not imagine what they do if someone has an accident or becomes ill. I decided to leave my bandaids and ointment there.

My relatives do have running water which many families in their village do not. On top of the outhouse there is a large barrel which my Aunt must fill daily with water. This water must be carried by bucket first from a well and up a ladder before it can finally be poured into the barrel. There is no hot water, and one can't even drink the well water. The only drinkable water is piped in above ground from some obscure place in the village onto the main street. Many times I was included in the procession to the pipe, carrying jugs and pitchers. The water in the street is a haven for mosquitos, bees, dogs, and chickens.

Noontime is when we ate the biggest meal of the day, and my Aunt has to get up before the sun rises to prepare the oven. My Uncle gets up at this time to go to his tomato fields, where he works from sunrise to sunset. The oven is a mud and sticks affair, shaped like an igloo. First a fire must be built in it, and three or four hours later, when the over is hot enough, the food is put in to cook for another three or four hours. And everything that comes out of it has a strange taste, perhaps like the taste of mud.

We ate quite a few vegetables from their fields, but I wouldn't doubt if I nearly ate a few flies, too. At one sitting I counted forty of them, which is totally revolting to me, but didn't seem to bother my relatives a bit. Very few people have screen windows in Greece, and my relative's chickens were allowed to wander in the kitchen at their leisure, which certainly doesn't help the fly situation any.

In a way I was relieved to return to Athens at the end of the week. Here there is hot and cold running water, indoor bathrooms and stoves, and people brush their teeth. But don't misunderstand me. Even in this beautiful city it takes two hours for a load of laundry to get washed in a washing machine and the sewerage pipes are too narrow to carry paper waste so one must deposit this in a special wastebasket.

Does it seem hard to believe that such things exist in 1976? The real shock came to me when a fifteen year old cousin in the village asked me if we could see the moon in the United States.

Woman to lecture on karate

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

A karate demonstration and lecture will be given by Sally Grimes, the first woman to have a black belt on the East Coast.

Grimes, a new professor in the journalism department, is a second degree black belt who has studied the martial art of karate for 10 years. Her teacher, Mr. Okazaki holds an eighth degree black belt and is considered one of the world's masters.

The discipline of karate combines the physical, mental and spiritual elements of the body, Grimes said. The main idea behind karate is "stop the fight."

Grimes is versed in shtokan, which is the Japanese style of karate.

Grimes demonstration will be given tomorrow night at 7:00 in Campus Center 175.

Karate classes, for all levels of skill, will start next Monday, in room 101 North Physical Educational Building. The classes are open to the community and will meet from 4 to 6 Monday through Friday afternoon. The fee is $28.00.

At the end of the semester Grimes hopes to have Okazaki come and give a demonstration to the group.

UConn probes mystery disease

FARMINGTON, Conn. [AP] — A University of Connecticut scientist says results are still inconclusive at the end of his probe of nickel carbonyl poisoning as a possible cause of the legionnaires' disease.

Dr. F. William Sunderman said yesterday that he has sent to Pennsylvania authorities results from the final tests on specimens from victims. The unknown illness has taken 29 lives and afflicted 150 others since an American Legion convention in Philadelphia July 21-24.

Sunderman said one sample from a lung showed nickel levels that "were very significantly elevated." But he added that five other specimens from livers, kidneys and a brain revealed normal levels.

In August Sunderman's team at the UConn Health Center found "potentially fatal levels" of nickel in samples taken from the bodies of affected legionnaires. He said those traces were similar to the kind found in victims of poisoning from nickel carbonyl, a highly toxic gas primarily used in industry.

Sunderman, a recognized expert with 15 years experience in nickel research, said then that the higher levels "increased the possibility" that nickel carbonyl poisoning caused the disease. But he and other state and federal health officials continue to label the colorless, odorless gas a "long shot" in the search for a cause.

Sunderman said the final results came from the second or third batch of samples of the five that the UConn team examined. He stressed that the tests were part of a "cleaning up" of the specimens sent since Aug. 9, adding that the major earlier results were not affected by the final test.

Other business of the board includes reviewing the Health Services budget each year and making recommendations to the financial Director, Don Lisnerski, and studying such things as the prescription co-payment policy.

Another task scheduled for this year, Kober said, is a review of student input into searches for candidates to fill Health Services professional positions and the interviewing of those candidates.

News in Brief

Government behind on vaccine program

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The government, far behind schedule in its mass vaccination program, yesterday signed tentative contracts to buy all the swine flu vaccine they can produce for immunizing adults by Christmas.

Vaccine production is well behind government expectations, according to both administration and corporate testimony. But the government's top doctor said he hoped most adults could be vaccinated by Christmas.

Decisions are pending on whether to immunize children.

"We are about six weeks off our schedule, and it doesn't please us that we are," said Dr. Theodore Cooper, assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

"In spite of difficulties, the program, I think, can occur. Americans can have protection against swine flu and we hope to complete it by the first of the year," he testified.

Cooper said tentative agreements were signed with three of the four vaccine makers shortly before the congressional hearing began. Negotiations are continuing with the fourth manufacturer.

Senate delays OK of B1 bomber production

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate approved and sent to the White House yesterday a record-setting $104.4 billion military budget which puts off a final decision on production of the controversial B1 bomber until after the presidential elections.

The Senate passed the appropriations measure by voice vote. The House approved it last week 323-45.

Although the money bill is $3.6 billion less than President Ford requested, he was expected to sign it. The appropriations bill is $13.8 billion or 15.3 per cent above the amount Congress approved last year.

The legislation, worked out by Senate-House negotiators, postpones until Feb. 1 a go-ahead on the B1 bomber-of-the-future — a bitterly fought military program for the past several years.

Committee points to eventual 'can ban'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A National Academy of Sciences committee said yesterday some spray can gases almost certainly will have to be banned eventually for nonessential uses to protect Earth's vital ozone radiation shield.

But the panel recommended after a 16-month study that any government regulatory process be delayed for up to two more years to give scientists time to more fully assess the threat the non-toxic gases pose to the environment.

The risk for such a delay, the committee said, was slight.

The 13-member panel, studying the matter at the request of four government agencies, concluded that the evidence clearly supports the theory that spray can propellants called fluorocarbons are rising slowly into the upper atmosphere where they eventually destroy ozone molecules. The big question was at what rate was the ozone being destroyed.

ALABAMA (UPI) — Jimmy Carter campaigned in Alabama yesterday with Gov. George Wallace at his side — accusing Republican administrations of neglecting small business — and headed into the states of others he defeated for the Democratic nomination.

Avoiding UAW strike 'one in 100' chance

DETROIT [AP] The United Auto Workers said yesterday there was virtually no chance of averting a nationwide strike at Ford Motor Co., despite new concessions by the firm on a key demand for reducing work time.

UAW President Leonard Woodcock said there was now only a "one in 100" chance for avoiding a nationwide strike by 170,000 Ford workers at midnight Tuesday.

Declaring "there is too much work to be done, and in my opinion it's absolutely impossible" to fashion an agreement before the strike deadline, Woodcock said the two sides are still very far apart on contract issues.

For the first time in eight weeks of negotiations, the company's chief negotiator, Ford Vice President Sidney McKenna, conceded he also was not optimistic about the chances for a settlement.

The talks recessed for the day at about 5 p.m., and no definite schedule was set for resuming the negotiations on Tuesday. Woodcock said the company requested an extension of the deadline, but the union turned it down.

The reduced work time proposal would provide between 20 and 40 hours of added time off each year in addition to vacations and holidays already provided in the current pact.

Ford signs 'Sunshine Act'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford, saying many Americans believe government "too remote" and unresponsive, yesterday signed a "Sunshine Act" requiring about 50 federal regulatory agencies to open most of their proceedings to public scrutiny.

"In a democracy, the public has the right to know not only what the government decides but why and by what process," Ford said at a Rose Garden ceremony.

"Today many citizens feel that government is too remote ... not responsive to their needs," Ford said. "This legislation should go a long way in reaffirming that government exists for the people, not apart from the people."

The ceremony was part of Ford's plan to project a "presidential" image during the early stages of the campaign and, two hours later, he held another one in the Cabinet Room to sign a bill requiring meat packers to post bonds to help ensure farmers get paid for livestock they sell.

Ford said he liked the bill because it will be good for producers, packers and consumers but "without creating excessive restrictions" on industry or "a superfluous new government agency and without significantly modifying our federal bankruptcy laws."

Ford planned to break with his "stay-at-home" strategy Wednesday by flying to the University of Michigan to officially launch his campaign.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Ford would describe his "vision of America" in the speech at his alma mater and make no more out-of-town trips until meeting Carter in their first debate Sept. 23 in Philadelphia.

Under the "Government in the Sunshine Act," regulatory agencies will have to announce their meeting at least a week in advance and, if they close a session to the public, they will have to keep detailed minutes or transcripts of the proceedings which can be made public under court order.

The law applies to all government agencies run by commission or more than two officials subject to Senate confirmation and exempts only meetings dealing with national defense or security, trade secrets, criminal proceedings and matters of personal privacy.

Feminists accuse candidates of ignoring views

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Karen DeCrow, president of the National Organization for Women, said yesterday abortion advocates should be given the same opportunity as the Roman Catholic bishops to influence President Ford and Jimmy Carter on the issue.

Ms. DeCrow accused the candidates of ignoring the views of a majority of Americans by yielding to intimidation from the bishops.

Her statement was the latest in a series of angry responses from feminists since the bishops met separately with the two presidential contenders.

No other feminist group has yet sought such a meeting, and there was as yet no indication that either candidate would comply with Ms. DeCrow's request.

Both candidates generally oppose abortion, but differ on their opinion of a proposed constitutional ban.

Ms. DeCrow said the bishops have succeeded in making abortion a campaign issue despite national polls indicating it is an item of least concern to the voters.

Turmoil continues in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa [UPI] — Thousands of blacks began a three-day strike Monday and police arrested hundreds of people in a house-to-house sweep against "loafers and common criminals."

Blacks who defied the call to cripple South Africa's white-owned industry clashed with militants who set fires to buses in the Soweto ghetto 15 miles southwest of Johannesburg.

Police fired birdshot and tear gas at demonstrating blacks in Soweto and at four men trying to evade arrest in Alexandra.

The strike was more successful than a similar three-day walkout three weeks ago, according to reports from businesses in Johannesburg. One factory reported an absentee rate of 70 per cent, and only about 10 per cent of workers on the bus routes serving Soweto showed up for work.

Businessmen have said the strikes together with absenteeism resulting from the general unrest have cost the economy hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The mass arrests came after thousands of blacks from Alexandra and the township of Soweto stayed away from jobs in response to a three-day strike call by militants.

In Soweto, witnesses reported a resurgence of intrablack violence. They said residents of the all-black township who supported a general strike attacked migrant workers returning to their hostels from jobs in white areas.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger began another whirlwind diplomatic shuttle yesterday in an effort to move the forum for southern Africa's racial strife from guerrilla camps to the negotiating table.

On the transatlantic flight, a senior official aboard the secretary's jetliner told newsmen it is out of the question that Kissinger would go to Salisbury, Rhodesia, to meet with Prime Minister Ian Smith.

The senior official told reporters not to expect any spectacular breakthroughs or announcements on the trip, expected to last about 10 days and probably including stops in Kinshasa, Zaire, Nairobi, Kenya, and Pretoria, South Africa, as well as a brief stay in London on the way back to Washington.

The official said Kissinger will meet with black and "colored" South African leaders — those who are not in jail — during his stop in Pretoria.

Bandit leaves clue... ...'musical voice'

DEAUVILLE, France [UPI] — Four masked gunmen broke into the Deauville casino at closing time early yesterday and took $600,000 from customers, croupiers and an open safe. They left one clue: the sound of their leader's voice.

Receptionist Maurice le Marchand, whose job it is to recognize regular customers at the seaside casino, told police, "I think I've heard that voice before."

The bandit chief said at one point when the cashier was slow in stepping aside from the unlocked safe, "Maybe I'll have to shoot somebody, the way we did in Algeria."

This reinforced report that he was a "pied noir" or "black foot," the nickname for former French residents of Algeria. LeMarchand said, however, "It was a musical Mediterranean voice, but really 'pied noir.'"

The heist was carefully planned. Police said it was evident the bandits had throughly cased the casino and knew its layout.

A few minutes after the 3 a.m. closing time, the four, dressed in blue jeans and boots with nylon stockings pulled tight over their faces, broke a window and entered the main gaming room holding pistols.

Seven customers were finishing dinner. Cleaning women were tidying the roulette tables. And because the cashier and croupiers were still counting the day's receipts, the safe, containing an entire weekend take, was still open.

The gunmen bound and gagged some of their victims but not everyone — they hadn't brought enough cord and adhesive tape — and stole their valuables.

Cashier Jean Pierre Hervieu said the gunmen hit him over the head with a pistol, leaving him with a slight bump, when he didn't move fast enough.

Then they helped themselves to all the money in the safe. Jacques Gilbert, manager of the seaside casino, said the robbers took receipts for the entire weekend, easily totaling $600,000.

Belfast fears week of chaos is beginning

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [UPI] — A wave of disruptive attacks hit Belfast yesterday in what police said they feared was the start of Protestant extremists' threatened "week of chaos."

At least 15 vehicles were hijacked and set afire. Many were public buses.

Many rail services were disrupted by hoax bomb calls.

Most highways leading into Belfast were blocked temporarily by stolen cars or closed to check other bomb hoax calls.

The Protestant extremist Ulster Defense Association threatened during the weekend to retaliate with "a week of chaos" in Northern Ireland against what it alleged was police brutality toward UDA prisoners last week.

The charges grew from a riot at the Maze prison, 15 miles south of Belfast, where 20 prisoners and six prison guards were hospitalized.

UDA spokesmen said the riot was provoked by prison guards who attacked prisoners with clubs. Prison officials said the prisoners began fighting when they were being moved from a "special privileges" wing to ordinary cells.

Trouble began in Protestant districts of North Belfast Monday but quickly spread to Protestant areas to the south and west of the city.

Incidents mainly took two forms — armed youths hijacking vehicles and often setting them afire, and bomb hoaxes that disrupted transportation arteries.

On the Protestant Crumlin Road, police and troops evacuated hysterical nursery school children when hijackers set a bus on fire at the school entrance.

Police said the blazing bus blocked the children when they tried to leave from the front door, and the rear doors jammed. Police and soldiers kicked in windows to get the children out.

Bomb disposal squads rushed to 15 calls which proved to be hoaxes, a military spokesman said.

Assassination plot could be farce

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — Two residents of a Salvation Army dormitory and a former waitress arrested in connection with an alleged plot to kill Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., pleaded innocent yesterday to murder conspiracy charges.

The pleas were entered by the court on behalf of Robert Earl White, 42, and David J. King, 31, both of Springfield, and Mrs. Sandra Rondeau, 34, of Westfield.

Police sources said they remain suspicious that the threat to kill Kennedy was real. They said there is a "strong suspicion that the whole affair was idle, drunken talk."

Springfield District Court Judge George Brigianes ordered White and King to undergo psychiatric examination Tuesday. He continued the case until Sept. 20. The judge appointed a public defender to the case after King and Mrs. Rondeau said they were unemployed and unable to afford a lawyer.

White, who appeared in court in a leather jacket, a t-shirt and checkered trousers, had been held on $50,000 bail following the arrests Saturday. He was ordered held Monday at Hampden County Jail and his bail was reduced to $25,000. King and Mrs. Rondeau continued to be free on their own recognizance.

King, who talked with reporters at his ex-wife's home Sunday, said he met White while they were both living in a local Salvation Army center. He said White told him he was a "hit man for the Mafia" from New York and that he had been offered $2.5 million to kill Kennedy.

According to King, the attempt on Kennedy's life was to have occurred Saturday morning at the Oak's Inn, a restaurant in downtown Springfield where Mrs. Rondeau worked up until about one week ago. Kennedy attended a Democratic Party committee breakfast at the restaurant Saturday

Citizens' group backing firearm control referendum

BOSTON [UPI] The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court heard arguments yesterday which will help determine whether voters will have a clear choice in November of banning the sale and private possession of handguns.

People vs. Handguns, a citizens' group backing the gun ban referendum, sued to force Secretary of State Paul Guzzi to remove from the ballot an alternate referendum passed by the legislature. That question, if approved, provides mandatory sentences for persons convicted of using a firearm during a crime.

The original People vs. Handguns proposal would prohibit the sale and possession of all firearms with barrels 16 inches or less. The legislative substitute would provide for mandatory sentences to be added to jail terms given persons convicted of gun-related crimes.

Unless the court intervenes in favor of People vs. Handguns, both proposals will be on the November ballot as Questions 5A and 5B. Voters could choose one, both or neither but the question receiving the greater majority — even if both received more than 50 per cent of the vote — would become law.

People vs. Handguns feels that the legislature's proposal is a crime control measure and not a true alternate to their measure.

Guzzi, who has not taken a public position on the issue, needs a decision from the court by Sept. 22 in order to complete the printing of the ballots for the Nov. 2 election. Chief Justice Edward F. Hennessey gave both sides until Thursday morning to file sample orders, either of which the court will use in its own order, indicating a decision will be made Thursday or Friday.

An issue in the case is whether the legislative substitute is, as was argued by People vs. Handguns attorney Robert Stewart, a subversion of the state's initiative petition process or a reasonable alternative legally proposed in the exercise of legislative power. The latter position was argued by Assistant Attorney General Thomas Kiley, representing Guzzi.

The legislature approved the substitute after an intensive lobbying effort by the Gun Owners Action League, a pro-gun group vehemently opposed to any form of control on the manufacture, sale and possession of firearms.

"At most, the provision has got to be a true alternative and that means a provision that would serve the same general purpose as the original and could not stand side by side with the original," Stewart said. He added that the legislative substitute was intended as a crime control measure, not as an alternative to the gun control measure proposed by People vs. Handguns.

Kiley urged the court to reject Stewart's "strained interpretation of the word substitute."

Bicyclist braves strong winds to claim record

MT. WASHINGTON, N.H. [UPI] — John Howard of Houston, Texas, will have some tall tales to tell about the time he rode a bicycle up Mt. Washington.

Howard, 29, was the overall winner in the two day International Bicycle Grand Prix which was wound up Sunday with the Mt. Washington Auto Road hill climb event.

Howard braved 40 mile per hour winds, poor visibility and below freezing temperatures Sunday to win the mountain climb and the $5,000 which goes with the title. He got to the top in one hour and 25 seconds.

Visibility was so poor on the mountain that some of the riders hadn't even realized they crossed the finish line. The lousy conditions didn't stop several hundred hearty spectators from showing up to watch the event.

Wind gusts blew many riders off their bikes. Conditions were so severe on the 6,288 foot mountain that race officials lowered the finish line by several hundred yards from the summit.

Bail issued for nuke plant demonstrators

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — The New Hampshire Supreme Court yesterday ordered the immediate release on bail of all 11 persons found guilty of contempt of court for entering the construction site of the Seabrook nuclear power plant Aug. 22.

The court issued two rulings, one involving 10 anti-nuclear demonstrators, and a second ruling concerning Robert D. Gross, a lawyer for New Hampshire Legal Assistance who was observing the site occupation.

All 11 have been found guilty of criminal contempt of court by Rockingham County Superior Court Judge Maurice Bois for violating his injunction against entry onto the site owned by the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire.

All 11 were sentenced to six months in jail with three months of the sentence suspended. Bois last week denied a motion to post bail pending appeal.

The court said New Hampshire law requires that bail be granted except in cases of first degree murder, or the likelihood that the person on bail would commit a crime or not show up for trial.

"Under the circumstances, the denial of bail pending their appeals may result in the defendants having served their sentences before their appeals are resolved," the court said.

Gross was ordered released as soon as "such reasonable bail as the superior court may determine" was furnished.

The other 10 defendants were to be released on bail on the condition they do not take part "in any further activities at the site of the plant." They are Ann Carol Riley, Brian Cullen, J.H. Adams, Michael Cushing, Robert Cushing, Mary Gregory, Madora Hamilton, Kevin J. Hopkins, Neil A. Linsky and Stephen Roth.

David Nixon, a Manchester lawyer representing eight of the protestors, Monday questioned whether the 179 persons arrested during the demonstration were deliberately allowed onto the nuclear power plant site so they could be arrested.

Connecticut Supreme Court upholds marijuana laws

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The Connecticut Supreme Court yesterday overturned a lower court decision that state antimarijuana laws were unconstitutional because they carried the same penalties for possession of more dangerous drugs.

Chief Justice Charles House said the decision of Superior Court Judge Robert Berdon was in error and sent the case back to the lower court for further proceedings.

Berdon had ruled the state law unconstitutional when he agreed with defendant Robert Rao that the Connecticut legislature had "irrationally classified" marijuana with amphetamines and barbituates, "which are generally considered to be much more harmful to the individual than marijuana."

House, writing for the majority, said the medical evidence concerning the relative harmless effect of marijuana was inconclusive and it is the responsibility of the legislature — not the courts — to decide whether any change is needed in the classification.

Jury set in bombing trial

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — A jury of 10 women and two men was empaneled yesterday for the U.S. District Court trial of Everett C. Carlson, one of four men indicted in connection with recent New England bombings.

Opening arguments were scheduled to begin Friday morning.

Carlson, 38, of Portland, was the first of the four to go to trial. Two remain at large and another has pleaded guilty to transportation of explosives and was expected to be a key prosecution witness in Carlson's trial.

Carlson was charged with interstate transportation of explosives used in the July 1 bombings of a National Guard truck in Boston, an airliner at Boston's Logan Airport, and the Essex County Courthouse in Newburyport, Mass.

He has been held in the Cumberland County Jail in lieu of $300,000 since his arrest here on July 4.

In an unusual move, Judge Edward T. Gignoux, who is presiding at the trial, requested that reporters limit their coverage of the case to courtroom proceedings.

"I would hope that you would confine your reporting to events that are on the record, only to events that transpire in the courtroom before the jury, and that you would not include matters outside the record that might be prejudicial to the defendant," Gignoux said.

The judge cited extensive pretrial publicity in the case, and warned that prejudicial stories could result in a mistrial.

The jury selection consumed the entire day, as Gignoux questioned 28 prospective jurors to determine if what they had read or seen concerning the bombings would be likely to affect their impartiality.

Security at the courthouse was tight, and nearly a dozen federal marshals guarded all entrances to the building and questioned persons as they entered.

Codefendant Joseph A. Aceto, 23, of Portland, was scheduled to take the stand for the prosecution later in the trial.

Last week, Aceto pleaded guilty to similar charges and to other counts involving a bombing at the Seabrook, N.H., Post Office, and aborted attempts to bomb the A&P regional warehouse in Boston and Polaroid Corp. headquarters in Cambridge, Mass.

Also named in the indictments were Richard J. Picariello, 27, of Portland and Edward P. Gullion, 27, of Boston, who are being sought by police and FBI agents.

West Point wasn't the life for her

BATON ROUGE, La. [UPI] — Friends told Laura Butenhoff to expect rough treatment as one of the first woman cadets at West Point. Now the teenager is back home, satisfied she was not meant for the military.

"Everybody told me how it was going to be and all," she said. "But it's something you just can't tell until you've done it."

Miss Butenhoff, one of two Louisiana women in the U.S. Military Academy's first class of 114 women cadets, needed less than two weeks to decide a military career was not for her.

"I didn't like it and it wasn't for me," she said. "I couldn't see myself in the military, really."

Over her parents' objections, the 18-year-old, 125-pound blonde quit the academy and returned home. She said her life during the two weeks away consisted of rigorous physical training, indoctrination into military life and continual taunting by upperclassmen.

She also said upperclassmen showed open dislike for women cadets, although she was never specifically abused for being a woman.

"In my class, the male cadets all felt sorry for us, though," she said. "They were really understanding.

"I didn't get to know too many of them, except for the guys in my squad, and they were real nice. It seemed like they kind of felt it was too rough for girls."

Miss Butenhoff and her mother both said the decision to quit so soon cause a family dispute.

"We had a hard time at first when I got home," Laura said, "but now we've worked it out."

Betty Butenhoff said the family "felt that she had probably made a decision too early" and should have stayed at West Point longer.

"But she said she just couldn't stand it so we just went along with her. We wanted to stay at least a year — see how it went."

Miss Butenhoff was hired as a long distance telephone operator when she returned home and said the job was "no as boring as I thought it would be."

Taxi motion dismissed

BOSTON [AP] — A superior court judge dismissed a pair of motions yesterday filed by Boston taxi drivers seeking to halt a limousine service at Logan International Airport.

District Court Judge Joseph Nolan, sitting on the Suffolk County Superior Court bench, said the complaints were not in his jurisdiction. His decision also nullified motions to intervene on the cabbies' side by the Boston City Council and a group of owner-drivers.

The new limousine service between Logan and Cambridge operated by Regal Bus Lines of Newton sparked a boycott of the airport by taxi drivers a week ago. The boycott was called off pending Monday's decision.

North Korean Sympathizer toured South Korea on Japanese subsidy

TOKYO (UPI) — Kang Ja Kil, a Korean who runs a gas station in Tokyo, went on a 10-day group tour of South Korea at the astonishingly low price of $333.

It was a bargain — the round trip air fare from Tokyo to Seoul alone is $228, and Korean hotels are not cheap.

The tour was subsidized by supporters of South Korea in Japan. Kang was invited for an odd reason: he was a known and active sympathizer of Communist North Korea. So were the others in his tour.

About 650,000 Koreans live in Japan. The two Koreas have competed fiercely for their loyalties ever since Korea was partitioned at the end of World War II.

Since last summer, Japan's pro-South Korea association, called Mindan, has been offering cut rate tours of South Korea to members of its rival, a pro-North Korean group called Chosen Soren.

By mid-summer of this year, 7,000 Koreans had taken up Mindan's offer. Long-term loans are offered people with low incomes who want to go.

Koreans live all over Japan, a legacy of Japan's colonial rule of their country from 1910-1945. Through them runs a barrier Koreans call "the invisible 38th parallel," after the truce line laid down across Korea after the 1950-53 Korean War.

Loyalty to North or South Korea divides neighbors and even families.

North Korea's Chosen Soren claims 300,000 followers, possibly the largest minority in any private enterprise country giving allegiance to a Communist nation. It publishes a newspaper and runs a private school system for about 40,000 students, including a college.

It also operates credit unions and finances small businessmen — a valuable service in Japan where Koreans have trouble getting bank credit.

South Korea's Mindan also claims about 300,000 supporters and offers similar services.

"We don't demand that people who take the trip quit Chosen Soren," says Kang in Whon, director of organization for Mindan, and no relation to the service station operator. "There is no political pressure. We just want to counter the other side's stories that South Korea is backward and impoverished. If the people want to stay in Chosen Soren and tell them about South Korea, that's fine."

Kang's decision to accept Mindan's hospitality made him a pawn in the struggle. He was an officer in a chamber of commerce sponsored by Chosen Soren for Korean businessmen in his part of Tokyo.

Besides the gas station he owns a small restaurant. He financed them with loans totaling $100,000 from a North Korean credit union. In return, he went to regular study sessions on the thoughts of North Korean President Kim Il Sung, and took part in mass meetings when asked.

"First they (Chosen Soren) tried to talk me out of going," Kang said.

Course Additions

Actor Training Workshop 290K

— COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Exercises for voice and body. Improvisations, theatre games, life-mask study of mime, tumbling, juggling, and some dialect training.

Application of exercises and improvisations to the performance of scenes and to the solution of specific acting problems.

Course will include participants and lecturers from the surrounding community and learning institutions. "Field trips" to outside performances and rehearsals.

If time and enthusiasm permits, there will be an in-course section on auditioning.

Serious work will be stressed, but fun and discoveries will be had by all.

— CLASS SIZE DESIRED: 15-20

— ENROLLMENT RESTRICTION: Everyone wishing to enroll will be required to give a private reading and-or a memorized monologue of your choice. If you haven't a prepared piece, material will be supplied. Poetry will be welcomed. If you have an audition piece prepared, GREAT.

The next meeting will be Monday at 7 p.m. in Hampden Theater.

The Politics of Education

Learning and Social Change (PTEN 390B) is a new three-credit course which will critically analyze the widespread movement to reform higher education and public schools.

Taught by Nesta King, graduate student in Political Science, co-author of the Mini-Manual for a Free University and long-time activist in the educational reform movement, the course will explore both reform of existing institutions and the various "alternatives" now being offered within and without the school system.

The course will provide an introduction to the various trends within the educational reform movement including the therapy scene, alternative schools, alternatives within traditional institutions, student organizing efforts, and various theoretical analyses.

Readings will include excerpts from Friere's Education for Critical Consciousness, Jonathan Kozol's works, Rossman's On Learning and Social Change, Bowles and Gintis' Schooling in Capitalist America, and other materials selected by the instructor and the class.

The course meets Monday, 3 to 5 p.m. in the Pierpont Classroom (Pierpont House, Southwest).

Students may sign up at the Project Ten office in Pierpont or by calling 545-0871 through Friday.

Improving the economy

By DAVID E. LEAVITT

After Labor Day in election years, the Presidential campaigns traditionally take the forefront in terms of national attention and media coverage.

The Democrats, as usual, say a lot of nothing in their platform. Following the same old New Deal policies of tackling unemployment; the Democrats want to spend. Spend until it hurts. And for what? For bills like the Humphrey-Hawkins Act which would cost the American taxpayer billions of dollars, and accomplish nothing in the long-term employment picture.

The Humphrey-Hawkins bill proposes massive Federally-funded "make-work" jobs which, although they would provide a temporary stimulus to the economy, when finished, would have a snow-balling effect requiring more and more money until either the government deficit is out of sight, or the take-home pay of the American citizen is so miniscule, that he or she could not afford to buy bread.

The Democrat-controlled Congress is hell-bent on controlling the money creating policies of the nation by taking away the independence (from politics) of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board controls the amount of currency in circulation at any time. To put the dominance of the Board under the same people who have so drastically increased government spending would be disastrous.

The Republicans, led by President Ford, believe that the answer to unemployment is not putting everyone on the government payroll, but investing in the private sector. The American people should not be lulled into the belief that the Federal government is the employer of the last resort.

Calvin Coolidge once said that the business of America is business. Therefore, America should again concern itself with helping business, both large and small. We should support tax cuts; both to corporations, and to the public. By doing this, we would increase the amount of disposable income to the public, and, increase profits and productivity for businesses. Businesses would increase re-investment in the economy, and the demand for workers would rise.

The public would also benefit from a decrease in taxes. More income would be taken home, and consequently, investment in the economy would rise in this sector also.

On the topic of wage and price controls, it has been proven that they are not the solution to halting inflation. In the end, the controls only cause shortages, higher prices, and an increase in the Black Market.

The Republicans favor keeping the autonomy of the Federal Reserve Board. Being thrifty with the regulation of the cash supply, as the Board is now (in comparison to what the Democrats would like to see it as) is helping to keep inflation down.

Using the above steps, and vetoing inflationary bills, the President has reduced inflation from an annual rate of 12 per cent in 1974, to a rate of around 7 per cent in 1976.

In summation, the difference between the Republican and Democratic Party Platforms is as striking as night and day. The time has come for the Democrats to stop living the same stale, old, New Deal remedies of continual, blind, spending that will ultimately lead to the overburdening of the American taxpayer; and thinking, in turn, of thrift.

Dog eats what?

To the Editor:

A front page headline in the Wednesday, September 8 Collegian read "N.Y. mother charged after dog eats her child". The story went on to relate the gory details. The cited particulars included a sensationalistic description of the tragedy.

We question the necessity and the desirability of such extensive coverage. In the light of the relatively meager coverage accorded Chairman Mao's death, we suggest a reassessment of the newspaper's reportorial priorities.

All resign

To the Editor:

History shows us that one of the more effective measures that legislative bodies have found to counter the more wayward of their executives, and to bring the populace out of their semi-sleep, has been that of a resignation EN MASSE.

It is clear that over the summer very private deals have been made to strenghten the position of the established system and to prevent the students from ever coming so close again to our basic rights as we were just months ago. This is a result of the few unrepresentative members of our student government who are vying for positions, jobs, and power, as members of that system, having meanwhile forgotten why they were elected and those who elected them.

I call upon each member of the Student Government Association, who is truly interested in the welfare of the students, to resign his-her position immediately. The SGA does NOT REPRESENT THE STUDENTS! Leave them to play in their sandbox, the time for the revolution is NOW!

Michael Pannell

Gory tales

To the Editor:

These may be dog eat dog days, but I hardly feel the story of the welfare mother and the child her dog ingested warrants front page coverage. I don't believe in censoring "bad news" by any means, but to give such a story front-page-below-the-fold publicity is, in my opinion, bad journalism. Stick to news and leave this kind of sensationalistic gore to the National Enquirer.

Chile's secret monster

SANTIAGO, Chile — As the military government celebrates its third anniversary of rule here, the tail is wagging the dog.

The tail in this case is the National Intelligence Bureau (DINA), Chile's fanatical secret police agency that is ruining the country's image abroad and increasing discontent at home by its severe violations of human rights.

The dog is Gen. Augusto Pinochet, who— three months after a military coup overthrew elected President Salvador Allende on Sept. 11, 1973— created DINA out of police and military intelligence units and made the semi-autonomous group directly responsible only to himself.

DINA has become a monster with a willing master in its grip, because President Pinochet needs DINA to survive — even though it has already accomplished its original purpose by crushing any semblance of extreme left opposition.

Now, as Pinochet and his rightist civilian advisers establish a top-down, authoritarian regime and impose rich-get richer economic policies, they must face the active or latent opposition of a growing majority of the entire population.

Many Chileans — especially among the middle or wealthy classes — had initially supported the military regime or at least looked the other way when DINA atrocities were first reported because they expected the country would soon return to democratic rule.

But with the outlawed Allende parties (which won 43 per cent of the vote in elections six months before the coup) trying to put together resistance movements, Chile's largest party (the centrist Christian Democrats) in declared opposition and the Catholic Church in open conflict, Pinochet's survival depends on the gestapo-like tactics of DINA — which now equates even mild criticism of the government with international Marxism.

Equipped with unlimited arrest powers and de facto immunity to judicial scrutiny, DINA has grown to conglomerate size with some 20,000 agents and paid informers recruited from hard-line military men, members of a neo-fascist group called Patria y Libertad (Fatherland and Liberty) and local thugs.

One out of every 500 Chileans is connected in some way to the DINA secret police. Within the Armed Forces, where possible pockets of liberal opposition to Pinochet are DINA's most important target, the proportion is said to be one in 15.

In human rights reports compiled by various international organizations — including the Human Rights Commissions of both the United Nations and the Organization of American States — DINA has been named responsible for institutionalizing torture. Prisoners who survived DINA's secret torture centers and were transferred to open prison camps have brought out gory accounts of DINA's methods.

In one such report, smuggled out of the Pirque women's prison in late 1975, 66 out of 90 women replied to a questionnaire about their experiences while being held incommunicado in DINA interrogation centers. The accounts were written on small scraps of toilet paper and compiled by women prisoners in the relative privacy of women's toilets.

The women described 11 different kinds of torture to which they had been submitted. Forty-six women reported being tortured with electric shock; four hanging by arms; three hanging and electricity; five immersion in water; 47 beating; 11 "the telephone" — heavy blows to both ears that frequently result in broken ear drums and deafness; five rape; two broken bones from being run over by cars; seven drugs and hypnosis; one beating with a chain; and ten forced standing for long periods without sleep.

Thirteen women said they had been forced to watch while DINA agents tortured other persons.

Internally, DINA has imposed its tentacles on virtually every element of community life — the university, the law prefession, unions and the church.

In August, for example, DINA organized a demonstration against three progressive Chilean bishops, known for their anti-junta sentiments, who had been expelled from a church meeting in Ecuador.

Unfortunately for DINA and Pinochet, the bishops recognized three of the DINA agents and identified them publicly. The revelation and the Church's subsequent excommunication of the agents — the first such retaliation against the junta — caused public consternation and even led the ultra-conservative daily El Mercurio to call for an investigation.

But DINA's tactics go far beyond simply organizing rock-throwing crowds. After three years of what the Chilean military calls "internal war," a pattern of DINA operations has emerged.

The pattern includes periodic mass arrests of suspected activists and their families, interrogation — usually under torture in secret DINA centers — and, most tragic of all, the disappearance and presumed murder of up to one-third of those arrested. The deaths usually result from torture, and many observers believe that certain prisoners are earmarked for execution.

Data compiled by church-sponsored prisoner aid groups show that the pattern of arrests and disappearances has been repeated five times since January 1974, when Pinochet created DINA. Each wave was directed against a particular political group or groups and resulted in the disappearance of hundreds of persons and the capture and death of top opposition leaders.

The curve of missing persons rises abruptly in the first 60 days of each DINA operation, culminates with the capture of the underground resistance chiefs, then drops off to near-zero for several months until a new wave begins against other suspected resistance groups.

The latest wave of arrests, disappearances and captures occurred in April and May this year and reached its peak several days after the May 7 visit to Santiago of U.S. Treasury Secretary William Simon — even while Chile was publicizing the release of 305 prisoners. Of some 130 persons arrested in those two months, 47 subsequently disappeared.

The same kind of tactic resulted in the shootout death in October 1974 of Leftist Revolutionary Movement (MIR) leader Miguel Enrique. The DINA's five-month operation to break the MIR required the arrests of over 2,000 persons, of whom 370 disappeared after interrogation and torture.

According to reliable sources, over 1,000 persons are missing since their arrests during these periodic DINA assaults on resistance groups.

Pleas from relatives that the Chilean courts investigate the mass disappearances are backed up by eyewitnesses who swear they have seen the arrests or were confined in DINA interrogation centers with those who later disappeared.

Yet the courts refuse to act and the government insists the missing persons were never arrested, are fictitious or have staged their disappearance before going into guerrilla activity.

The Catholic Church, through its Vicariate of Solidarity, recently protested in a legal brief to the Chilean courts the "public alarm" caused by the missing persons. "Any Chilean can be arrested without charges" and disappear under DINA, the church charged.

Despite "proofs, sworn statements, witness reports and documents that demonstrate the involvement of the agents of DINA in the arrests, no court or government investigation has been made. A wall of silence surrounds their fate," the church statement said.

Not only has the Supreme Court taken no action, but three of the lawyers who helped the vicariate prepare the brief were picked up by DINA. One is still in jail and two were expelled from Chile.

THE WAVE OF REPRESSION IN CHILE
JUNTA

Reducing the candidate

First a word of definition: In order to understand anything I have to say in this brief statement of my own fact, you will, for a moment, have to borrow my word usage. Each of us attributes certain definitions to words which, through our own experience, gives them a different slightly twisted meaning. The reason I bring this extremely complex point up is that I wish to discuss with you the theory I have, which is mine, on reductionism.

I am a reductionist. A flaw perhaps, but nonetheless a part of my character. This means that I take any given amount of information and distill it until I can deal with it simply. In a sense, I am my mind's efficiency expert. We all do this to some extent. We modify our perceptions to our past experience, thus not even seeing details that do not interest us.

Usually, this would not be a bad thing. But in a year when we are bought and sold in the political marketplace, it is a time to be more than a reductionist. Example:

Question: When someone mentions Jimmy Carter, what do you think of immediately?

Answer: Most probably his smile, more to the point, his teeth.

Question: Why?

Answer: You have been sold this by the media — who by the way are the most efficient reductionists I know — you have been sold this because they know that you are reductionists and so give you the image to remember, fearing perhaps, that if allowed to see much more of Jimmy Carter, you would remember nothing.

I don't think this whole thing is really Carter's idea, either. It is merely the method of public relations that works best, therefore the most widely used. Encapsulate the news — encapsulate the candidates.

This is the stuff heroes are made on. Understand that the country seems to lack heroes, but being the romantics we are, we look for the hero in every public figure that passes our attention. So while we are doing our reducing, it helps to throw in the hero image as well.

Since we know so little about Jimmy Carter, it is easy to list him in the hero region. We want a smiling (white) knight to sweep us all into prosperity and good will. If one man, one image, can come anywhere close to that — well then, he's our man.

Listen, don't get me wrong. I like Jimmy Carter. If he's good enough for Hunter Thompson, he's good enough for me. But I don't trust him completely. It is not so easy for me to simply see the smiling teeth, just as it is not so easy for me to see Ford as a man who cannot walk and chew gum at the same time.

Hell, I need a hero just as much as the next person, but Carter is going to have to pull off some miracle before November to be the good, clean, God fearing politician he is being sold as.

More to the point, what I am trying to say is that it is easy to just see part of the man. The news reports don't have enough time to be that in depth. Beware of this in yourself. Before November, investigate and listen to everything. Then vote for Carter because he is a man who can win; who can, maybe, change things; and because he has a brain attached to those teeth of his. His is a man to be watched and not given a hero's "full reign", because in the end — he is just a man.

Mao: A leader with a vision

By PETER KRACHT
and ELLIOT KASS

Politicians in this country, like to claim they serve the people, especially when they're trying to get our votes at election time. But once they're in office, their honeyed promises quickly turn sour, and the air filled with the stench of broken promises.

Contrast this with the tremendous outpouring of grief on the part of millions of Chinese, and people around the world, at the death of Mao Tse Tung, Chairman of the Communist Party of China.

Mao Tse Tung was no rich politician looking for a way to line his own pockets; he owed no favors to some big-time capitalist. The only interest that he served was that of the masses of working people.

Mao Tse Tung, born a middle-level peasant in 1983, was, like millions of Chinese youth, rebellious. And why not? By the time he was ten, foreign garrisons were in every main city, British and American gunboats patrolled every river, propping up the decadent landlord government. They were there to keep China backward, to better profit off her resources and labor.

It was in participating in great revolutionary struggles of the Chinese people against every outrage and abuse they suffered under foreign and landlord rule, and because of the inspiration of the victory of the working class in establishing its rule in the Soviet Union that he among many others, found his way to Marxism, the science of revolution.

Mao Tse Tung was no condescending savior, no social worker. He was a Communist. He taught coal miners (among the first worker members of the Chinese Communist Party) how to read, drawing letters in the sand. But he did not do this so a few of them could go off to school and leave the rest in misery. He did it so they could be better able to lead all to take matters into their own hands and overthrow those who exploited and oppressed the masses of people.

There were those who said that because the workers were a tiny minority of China's population, there could be no hope of working class revolution — of thoroughly, and throughout the country, "turning things upside down." But Mao Tse Tung, learning from the people's struggles and applying the science of revolution to conditions in China, argued that the only way forward for China, and countries like China, was for the working class Party to lead the workers and peasants to fight and overthrow the foreign imperialists and the landlords. The difference between China today and India today are searing evidence of this truth.

But it was after the working class was in power in China, and its Party, the Communist Party, led the government, that Mao Tse Tung's greatest and most inspiring contribution to the struggle of millions of oppressed the world over was made.

Summing up the bitter lessons of the defeat of the working class in the Soviet Union, where capitalism had been restored in the 1950's; he developed the line that while the workers control the government under socialism, still classes exist and struggle against one another, and will until class differences are eliminated and full Communism achieved.

Millions of Chinese people agreed with this, from their own experience. And they went into battle. It was called the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution. They beat back traitors to the working class within their Party, the Communist Party itself, who advocated the workers should just work and keep their mouth shut about such things as running their factory, the country and should not concern themselves with the future of humanity.

Mao Tse Tung has never ruled China. In China the working class, in alliance with the peasants, rules. And Mao Tse Tung, time and again, has led them forward. There is a big difference between a "ruler" and a leader. Until the day he died, he kept his heart with the people and used his knowledge to develop the ways for the masses themselves to solve problems in their lives and in advancing society.

Mao Tse Tung was a man of great vision, a man who fought together with millions all his life — whether living in caves fighting guerrilla warfare or in Peking, the Chairman of the Party in power — for a future entirely free of classes and class exploitation ... even if it would take a thousand years!

But he was no soft-headed idealist. His vision was based on reality; it is possible and as inevitable as the truth that wherever there is oppression there will be resistance to it.

He was a great Marxist-Leninist, a truly great leader of the working class, who was like the cap on the wave of the Chinese people's struggle.

And all this is why millions of people the world over and in every country deeply mourn his passing. And all this is why no matter who leads the capitalist countries, including the U.S. or the Soviet Union, they will never have his stature, for they are guardians of a vampire-like system, which thrives only on the blood of its victims and cannot otherwise survive.

And the struggle of those millions around the world is progressing, and that is the main reason why even the President of the U.S. must bow to necessity and praise the man our rulers have done everything they could to destroy.

But no one can destroy what Mao Tse Tung stood for — the emancipation of the working class and mankind. It will forever live in the hearts and minds of workers and oppressed people the world over.

As he himself wrote on the death of a revolutionary soldier:

> "All men must die, but death can vary in its significance. The ancient Chinese writer Szuma Chien said, 'Though death befalls all men alike, it may be weightier than Mount Tai or lighter than a feather.' To die for the people is weightier than Mount Tai, but to work for the fascists and die for the exploiters and oppressors is lighter than a feather."

This Thursday, September 16, the Revolutionary Student Brigade will be holding a memorial meeting in honor of Mao Tse Tung. There will be speakers on his life and contributions to the peoples struggle, and the significance of this in the U.S. Norm Chance, professor of anthropology at the University of Connecticut, and many time visitor to China, will talk on the current political situation in China, her leaders, and what we can expect now that Mao Tse Tung is gone. All people interested are invited to attend.

Peter Kracht and Elliot Kass, members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade, are Collegian Guest Commentators.

What's Happening

Prof. to be interviewed for School of Ed.

Tomorrow and Thursday, the Bilingual Bicultural Education Search Committee will be interviewing Dr. Milton Silva for a faculty position in the School of Education.

The University community is cordially invited to attend the open meetings to be held tomorrow at 3 p.m. in Room 113, School of Education and at 7 p.m. in the fifth floor of Goodell Library, at the offices of the Bilingual Collegiate Program.

Free intro lecture on TM tonight

There will be a free introductory lecture on the Transcendental Meditation program as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi tonight at 7:30 in Room 106, Thompson Hall.

It is being sponsored by the Students' International Meditation Society.

A meeting for all UMass students who practice the TM technique will be held Thursday evening at 8:30 p.m. in Campus Center, Room 174.

The public is invited.

Blood Donor Center to operate tonight

The UMass-Red Cross Blood Donor Center will begin operation tonight from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m. WMUA celebrities will be on hand to donate and to broadcast live from the center.

The Donor Center is located on the first floor of the UMass Health Center, and will be open throughout the semester every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evening from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m.

"Remember, the gift of life is one that only you can give. Give blood — give life!!" say center workers.

Alternative Learning Program operating

The Alternative Learning Program at UMass is a regional alternative high school program which serves students from public high schools in Hampshire County who have a special need for a smaller and more individualized learning environment. This program, funded under Massachusetts Chapter 766, has been operating in room 151, Hills South, since September, 1975 and is currently servicing 14 students.

The goals of the Alternative Learning Program are to develop the self-image of the students, increase their interest level and achievement in school, develop their ability to relate more positively in their interpersonal relationships and to develop skills leading to either employment or continued education.

The curriculum in the school draws from all academic disciplines, and has included Psychology, Organic Gardening, Anatomy and Physiology, Algebra I, Advanced Algebra, Business Math and Bookkeeping, Outdoor Education, German, Spanish, U.S. History, Social Issues and the Media, Roman Civilization, Occupational Education, Dance, Juggling, Womens Studies, Sex Roles, Experience and Writing, Remedial Language Skills and Leather Craft.

Courses are taught by two full-time professional staff, two full-time student interns from the UMass Teacher Education Programs and a great number of University students teaching individual courses. UMass students participating in the program can earn credit through Outreach S.V.S. and the School of Education.

This program has been operating at Hampshire College since February, 1975, under the same program structure, utilizing Hampshire College resources. With the addition of the University site last fall, the program now includes 28 students in total.

Both sites of the program have been very successful, and the students' personal growth and academic achievements have been well recognized by their school systems.

If anyone would like to get involved in this program by teaching a course, a craft, or a skill, drop by room 151 Hills South any day from 8:30 a.m.-2:30 p.m. or call Marc Simon at 545-2748.

BMCP to hold first staff meeting tonight

The Black Mass Communications Project will hold its first staff meeting for this semester tonight at 8 p.m. in Campus Center Room 171.

The BMCP is an organization spanning every facet of mass communications, including radio, television, periodicals, etc. News coverage is produced from a Black perspective.

All interested persons are invited to attend.

Challenges to Kennedy, O'Neill headline statewide primary today

BOSTON [UPI] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and House Speaker apparent Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. risk embarrassment but not defeat in Tuesday's Massachusetts primary as they ask voters for a return ticket to national power.

The two Democratic kingpins face political challenges at home for the first time in years.

Militant opposition to their stands on court-ordered school desegregation put populous sections of Boston off limits for both candidates during the campaign.

And antibusing sentiment gripping sections of the city fueled otherwise modest challenges by little known politicians.

Victory for Kennedy and O'Neill was all but certain Tuesday. But strong showings by primary opponents could embarrass the two party leaders as they move up the congressional hierarchy.

Evidence Kennedy faces more that just political risks surfaced during the final weekend of the campaign when three persons were arrested and charged with conspiracy to murder the third term senator.

Kennedy refused to modify his traditional campaign style, aides said, relying extensively upon personal contact with voters.

Challenges to Kennedy and O'Neill headline a statewide primary to screen party candidates for the Senate, Congress and the State legislature.

Kennedy, 44, faces his first primary challenge since 1962 when Massachusetts voters started the 30-year-old law school graduate on a political career as a U.S. Senator to replace his brother, John F. Kennedy.

Opposition to court-ordered school busing has spawned a pair of Boston challengers, six-term City Councilor Frederick C. Langone and lawyer Robert Emmet Dinsmore. The pair hope to defeat Kennedy in his native Boston.

A low turnout of less than 30 per cent of the state's three million voters was predicted by Secretary of State Paul Guzzi. Such a low turnout could hurt Kennedy and inflate the relative showings of his two challengers.

"I want to do well," Kennedy said last week, declining to predict a percentage of victory. His campaign raised $629,200 and spent $289,700 so far, more than 10 times what either challenger reported spending.

Just as Kennedy's grip on the state has been challenged for the first time, O'Neill also has opposition. O'Neill, 63, a veteran of 24 years in Congress, is being challenged by Edward F. Galotti, a little known veteran state representative.

Galotti portrays himself as just "a guy named Ed Galotti" in contrast to nationally powerful O'Neill whom he claims takes taxpayer-financed trips overseas. O'Neill expects little difficulty returning to Congress where he says he has the votes to become House Speaker in January.

A second congressional veteran, nine-term Rep. James A. Burke, jd-Mass., faces a more vigorous challenge. Some say the aggressive, long planned campaign by 30-year-old Patrick Henry McCarthy could cost the 66-year-old Burke his seat of 18 years.

A Vietnam veteran and Harvard law school graduate, McCarthy cut his political teeth managing the successful 1972 insurgency of Rep. J. Joseph Moakley, D-Mass., against Louise Day Hicks. Confident of victory, Burke accused his challenger of distorting his record and refused to raise any money.

In Massachusetts' Seventh Congressional District, a 12-way scramble ends in the Democratic contest to fill the seat of the late Rep. Torbert MacDonald, D-Mass.

Polls showed a tight contest between three candidates — state Sen. Stephen McGrail, D-Malden, Executive Councilor Vincent A. LoPresti and Edward J. Markey. Even before voting began, at least one campaign official talked of the possibility of a recount.

Vietnam to enter UN? 'No way'--US

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The United States will veto admission of Vietnam to the United Nations because of that country's continued refusal to make full accounting of Americans missing in action, Ambassador William Scranton said Monday.

Scranton's announcement of the formal decision, made to reporters after a White House meeting with President Ford, coincided with a statement by the North Vietnamese Foreign Ministry accusing the United States of "flagrant distortions and arrogance" on the issue.

A State Department said the charge by Hanoi "simply is not true."

Scranton said "there is nothing to indicate in any negotiations" that Hanoi officials are willing to go beyond their release of the names of 12 U.S. pilots killed in action.

"We are very anxious to talk to them about this and other issues," Scranton said. But he said that so far, the Vietnamese government has demonstrated it is neither "peace loving" nor "interested in humanitarianism" to an extent warranting U.N. membership.

Hanoi "has not been helpful," said the former Pennsylvania governor.

The U.N. Security Council has turned over to its admissions committee the Vietnamese application for membership, and that panel has scheduled a meeting on the issue at 10:30 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

But regardless of the committee's recommendation, Vietnam could not be granted membership without the unanimous approval of the 15-member Security Council.

Scranton said Ford reached the veto decision "on a nonpartisan basis," and had given him formal instructions to take the action when the Security Council takes up the issue.

On Labor Day, Hanoi released the names of the 12 American pilots, previously listed as missing in action from the Vietnam War, who had been shot down and killed.

At the time, Ford said the limited disclosure was "callous and cruel," and that the United States could not endorse Vietnam for membership in the world body until Hanoi relented and agreed to full disclosure on a long list of others still listed as missing in Southeast Asia.

Responding to Hanoi's charges that the United States was using the MIA issue as an excuse for withholding promised aid to Vietnam, State Department spokesman Frederick Z. Brown said Monday:

"They are certainly in no position to make these demands. We do not accept this token list of 12 names of MIAs as any reason to move on the normalization of our relations. Our primary concern remains a complete accounting for the MIAs."

Mass PIRG meets tomorrow

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) is a non-partisan, non-political, non-profit organization which represents the interests of the public by taking legal and political action on various consumer and environmental issues.

It seeks to gather information with the help of students, take legal action, form legislative bills and inform and communicate with the public against unfair big business practices, unresponsive government agencies and environmental hazards.

For anyone interested in becoming involved and learning more about MassPIRG and its projects, there will be an introductory meeting tomorrow night at 7:30 in Campus Center room 906.
